it is this: it cannot be a genuine claim, because in that case there would not have been this great delay. Now, that argument is not, I think, of very much force, because it is admitted that there is a very considerable sum due to the plaintiff. The whole amount is not admitted, but a large portion is admitted. It follows, therefore, that notwithstanding the plaintiff having an admitted claim of £200 or £300, he still lies by. That shows that there must have been some reason why he allowed himself to be kept out of his money for all this period, when undoubtedly he could have recovered it, when undoubtedly in some respects it would not have been disputed, and he delayed in what is admittedly a just claim on the grounds that it was a question for a Court to decide. Then another difficulty was raised in respect of the nature of the accounts kept in books in which the business of the plaintiff and that of the plaintiff himself is confused. Now, undoubtedly that raises an obstacle which the plaintiff has to surmount. Apparently there is nothing morally wrong in entering the business of the syndicate in his own books. Mr. Gibson says it is a very usual practice, but this case in itself shows that it is not a practice which can be commended, for the very reason that it now places difficulties in the plaintiff's way which he has to get over, and which, as very properly stated by Mr. Schreiner, would not have existed if the books had been kept in a different form. If there had been merely partnership books the plaintiff would not have had all this trouble. Certainly, he has to thank himself to some extent for the difficulties which have been placed in this way. All the same, it establishes no dishonesty on the part of the plaintiff, because it is a usual practice carried on according to Mr. Gibson's evidence by men certainly of good repute and with respect to the dealings in question he seems to have no suspicions. Then a third way of testing the plaintiff's figures is by inquiring into the value which he now shows for his expenditure. On the one side we have the plaintiff's evidence that upon the spot now there are works which have cost a certain amount, and there are assets upon the ground which are of a considerable value. He estimates the whole at £7,000. Upon that basis we will have a value of £7,000 shown for the expenditure, and that is, according to the figures, about the expenditure. In the plaintiff's opinion, he has so economically managed the business that there is full value for every penny. On the other hand, we have evidence which I must characterise as of a very meagre description. One witness, whose trade is that of house builder—a man who takes out quantities and does not pretend to be an engineer, and he speaks not only of the value of buildings, but of engineering works and plant. Such evidence is unsatisfactory, and it would also be unsatisfactory because there is no necessary proportion between the results and the expenditure. It may be that the plaintiff paid more at times than they were worth for things bona fide, acting in the interests of his partners, but at the same time, dealing with people who got the better of him. There is no reason why he should suffer for that if he has done his best. And even if the expenditure has been more than can be shown for it upon the ground, it does not follow that the expenditure has not taken place. So that this third ground of attacking the plaintiff's position with reference to knowledge and honesty must, in my opinion, fail. But I want to point out this also with reference to the estimate of the property, that in August, 1899, when Barry came into the business the question arose between these gentlemen, partners in the concern, as to the footing at which he was to come in, and I have no doubt that Douglass discussed this matter with the plaintiff, and I am quite sure that when the partners took him in, it was upon a fair and reasonable basis. I do not think it was upon a desire to taken advantage of a stranger. The plaintiff does not say that it was, and I do not think that Mr. Douglass would have been a party to such a proceeding. And the basis upon which Barry came in—whatever may have been the discussion between the partners—was that Barry was to have a quarter share, and that quarter share was to be based upon a value of the property, at that time of £7,000. Now, I wish to say that the ground upon which the plaintiff bases his claim, being an account stated through Mr. Lloyd between the plaintiff and Mr. Douglass, has not been substantiated. There was no stated account, because Lloyd was not satisfied. When Lloyd left Queen's Town the account was not even completed. He stated at that time that some further inquiry ought to be made, and the inquiry which he wished to have made was one on the part of Douglass himself as to the value of this property. It struck me that that might be another ground upon which to raise objection to the plaintiff's accounts. That ground has now been raised. If Mr. Douglass had then gone into the business the matter might have been disposed of at the time, but he was so put out by the result of Mr. Lloyd's inquiry that he would do absolutely nothing. He neither raised objections to the account in detail, nor made further payments with respect to that account, but pointed out that as the result of the settlement of March it should have been confined to only special items that were mentioned at the time. Mr. Douglass was undoubtedly dissatisfied with the account, and did not accept it, but he did not make that clear to the plaintiff. Then the meeting took place in Cape Town. I don't know that that meeting throws much light upon the present case, because undoubtedly Mr. Douglass wanted his share of what Barry paid in, as he was not going to discuss the plaintiff's claim, not being prepared to admit it. He put it to the plaintiff in a way which led him to believe: "If you give me your cheque, I will give you mine in return," but it does not follow that is what he meant to convey. Douglass might have insisted upon getting his cheque without absolutely positively saying that he would not pay the plaintiff. But I do not think he made it quite clear that the plaintiff should infer that he must necessarily get the cheque in return. There has been a long debate of the accounts, because counsel had to compare the different features of the case in order to draw their own conclusions, but it is not necessary now for me to go into all that. I merely say this, that it was necessary for the plaintiff to appear in court to substantiate the items of account, and I am satisfied from the way in which he gave his evidence that he is fully aware of the nature of the transactions, and that the entries that were made in the books do represent the transactions that actually took place. Upon that basis, the plaintiff is entitled to receive the sum of £610. He has a further claim for remuneration. Now, as a rule, a partner who devotes his services to a partnership is not entitled to remuneration, because he is expected to do his best for the partnership, unless there is some very clear understanding that there shall be remuneration, or, as Voet puts it, unless there are extraordinary services rendered, he is not entitled to remuneration. In this case I do not think there were extraordinary services rendered, and there has been no clear understanding proved that remuneration would be paid. That the plaintiff took a great deal of trouble, I think has been clearly proved. One way in which he wanted to establish his claim for remuneration was that he was out of pocket by expenditure on journeys made on behalf of the business. If the plaintiff had made a part of his account expenditure in travelling about on behalf of the syndicate, he might have been entitled to recover a part of the indebtedness of the partners to him, but that cannot be brought in as part of the remuneration. I merely wish to say that the plaintiff did take a lot of trouble with this business, and I think there is some evidence that he was out of pocket beyond what he now claims. But the items have not been proved, and have not been pleaded in the proper form, consequently he cannot recover them. Under the circumstances, judgment is given for the plaintiff for £610 with costs. I wish to mention this, that the defendants are not altogether unjustified in coming into court, because as executors they had not full knowledge of Douglass's transactions and they might fairly doubt whether the claim was a good one, and insist upon its being proved in court. But it having been proved that the claim was a good one and that their doubts were not justified, they must necessarily bear the consequences and pay the costs of the action. Upon the question of interest, I may say that the account had been fully entered into by Mr. Lloyd, and under ordinary circumstances Mr. Douglass should have accepted it. It was at that time a fair demand for payment of moneys to which the plaintiff was entitled at that time. That demand having been made, interest began to run from that date, and interest will now be allowed as from the 10th August, 1899. I have considered the question of absolution from the instance upon the item of expenses in the claim for remuneration, but I thought it better to give a definite judgment, as I think it is better that this matter should be now settled. Upon the matters of costs in the motion for joining Mr. Bradfield, I have come to the conclusion that this matter was disposed of without regard to any transactions between Bradfield and the plaintiff, and that the account could have been fairly stated without bringing Bradfield into court. Following, therefore the line of the Chief Justice's reasoning, the judgment of the Court must be that the defendants must pay the costs of the exception. The defendant was further ordered to pay a fine of £1 on an unstamped receipt which was put into court. The expenses of the plaintiff as a necessary witness were allowed, such expenses only to run from the point of entry into the Colony.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

BENNING V. CAPE TOWN } 1907.
TOWN COUNCIL. } Aug. 27th.

Cape Town Town Council — Unauthorized expenditure —
Promenade pier—Mole.

This was an action taken by the plaintiff, Anthony Fredrik Jacobus Benning, against the defendant, the Town Council of Cape Town, for an order to restrain the defendant from continuing the construction of a certain mole at the foot of Adderley-street, at the expense of certain funds amounting to £30,000, for a promenade pier and bathing places.

The declaration was as follows:—

1. The plaintiff is a ratepayer in the City of Cape Town, in which he resides, and he sues in this action in his capacity as a ratepayer. The defendant is the Town Council of the City of Cape Town, of which the plaintiff is a member.

2. In or about the year 1901 a proposal was made to the Mayor of Cape Town for the construction of a pier, or sea promenade, from the Central Jetty, at the foot of Adderley-street, in continuation of such street, and for the provision of bathing accommodation in connection with the proposed pier. At a public meeting of the ratepayers of Cape Town, held on November 9, 1891, the sum of £20,000 was voted for baths and a sea promenade, in pursuance of the said proposals.

3. On July 20, 1907, the ratepayers of Cape Town, by a poll held on that date, sanctioned a loan, part of which, namely, the sum of £25,000, was voted for the construction of a sea promenade and pier, which sum, together with the sum of £20,000 above mentioned, was estimated to meet the cost of construction of a pier, and the necessary approaches thereto.

4. In or about the year 1905 the defendant entered into certain arrangements with the Table Bay Harbour Board whereby the defendant, on certain conditions, agreed to undertake the cleansing of Rogge Bay beach (adjacent to the old Central Jetty referred to), one of the said conditions being that the said Board should assist the defendant in promoting the passage of a Bill to vest Rogge Bay beach in the defendant, and to give adequate power for the control and regulation of the fishing industry in Rogge Bay.

5. On or about September 28, 1905, the defendant Council passed a resolution that it should arrange with the Colonial Government for the immediate extension of the Central Jetty aforesaid, in the form of a mole to be constructed by tipping stone for a distance of about 100 yards out in the direction of the Bay from the end of the then existing structure, and that the cost incurred in connection with the formation of the said mole should be debited to the loan funds authorised by the ratepayers on the ground that the formation of the mole would be the first step towards securing the means of access to any promenade pier which might thereafter be constructed at the foot of Adderley-street.

6. In or about February, 1907, the defendant, purporting to act under the resolution of September 28, 1905, proceeded to construct from the foot of Adderley-street a rubble mole composed of ground and stones, the composition being supported for a considerable distance on the west side by a concrete wall some 3½ ft. in thickness, and about 340 ft. in length (which length may be increased), and the Council intends to extend the mole for a distance of some 600 ft. into Table Bay, including 300 ft., the distance previously occupied by the old Central Jetty, from which the defendant removed the wooden decking prior to filling in the jetty with ground and stones. The work, the estimated cost of which is £5,400, is still proceeding, and is being conducted at the expense of the loan funds in question.

7. The avowed object of the defendant in the construction of the mole is that it shall form part of certain harbour works contemplated by the defendant for the purpose of protecting the fishing industry of Table Bay and rendering the harbour of Rogge Bay more suitable for the accommodation of fishing, pleasure, or other vessels, and the mole is in no way connected with and cannot in any sense be found necessary for the erection of a sea promenade or pier and bathing places, authorised by the ratepayers.

8. The plaintiff says, further, that the Colonial Government and the Table Bay Harbour Board are, to the knowledge of the defendant, engaged in carrying out a scheme of reclamation of the foreshore in the immediate neighbourhood of the mole, the work of reclamation in connection with which scheme is already closing in upon the mole, which is being constructed upon part of the area embraced in the scheme, and will eventually be completely absorbed by the reclamation. The plaintiff says the mole is in effect only a portion of such reclamation work, and the defendant has actually proceeded to fill in the space intervening between so much of the mole as has already been constructed (some 500 feet), and the reclaimed ground to the east thereof, at the cost of the loan funds.

9. The defendant has sought the permission of the Harbour Board to erect a turpentine pile pier at the extension of the Central Jetty as at present being carried on by means of the mole, but the Board has refused its permission thereto, and the defendant has accordingly resolved not to proceed further than the 600 feet of mole already undertaken.

10. The plaintiff says that the mole is not a sea promenade or pier such as was contemplated by the ratepayers in sanctioning the raising of the funds, that its construction is not connected with the erection of such sea promenade or pier nor necessary thereto, and is not authorised by the sanction of ratepayers according to law, and that the action of the defendant in constructing the mole at the cost of the said loan funds is ultra vires and illegal.

In his plea, defendant admits that one of the objects in view in constructing the mole is correctly set forth in paragraph 7 down to the words "other vessels," in line 6, but the remainder of the paragraph is denied. The construction of the said mole out of the moneys voted by ratepayers as aforesaid is within the authority conferred by the ratepayers. As to paragraph 8, the defendant admits having information that the Colonial Government and the Table Bay Harbour Board have had in contemplation the further advancement of a scheme of reclamation along the foreshore in the immediate neighbourhood of the Central Jetty, and says that the contingency of absorption of the said mole in future reclamation is not relevant to the matter now in suit. A very small portion of the space left, the 500-foot mole and the reclaimed ground to the east has been filled in, this having been done as a necessary adjunct to the mole in question.

Save, as aforesaid, paragraph 8 is denied.

The defendant also says that paragraph 9 is irrelevant to this suit. Certain negotiations were carried on with the Board for the erection of a turpentine pile pier as alleged therein, and the Board did not agree thereto, but other arrangements were provisionally arrived at, and the defendant does not at present intend to proceed further than the 600-foot of the mole already undertaken.

The allegations in paragraph 10 are denied.

Mr. Burton, K.C. (with him Mr. Van Zyl) for plaintiff. Mr. Upington (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) for defendant.

Frank Robb, secretary of the Table Bay Harbour Board said in 1902 the records of the Harbour Board showed that the Board adopted a scheme for the extension of certain harbour works in the neighbourhood of the Central Jetty. This involved an extensive scheme of reclamation works. That scheme he had a plan of. It was submitted by the general manager, Mr. Hammersley Heenan, and the Town Council had knowledge of it. The scheme was authorised by Act of Parliament, and a sum of £500,000 was to be raised for the purpose. The reclamation scheme was proceeding slowly on account of lack of funds. It was provided in an agreement that the Harbour Board should support the efforts of the Town Council to provide proper accommodation for the fishermen at Rogge Bay, and if anything were put there the Harbour Board would compensate them, or, as an alternative, give the fishermen a harbour elsewhere. There were negotiations between the Town Council and the Harbour Board last year about the construction of a pier. He requested the Council to furnish a plan of the work before anything could be done. It was resolved afterwards to submit the scheme to the City Engineer and the Government Engineer. On the 24th July, 1906, the Town Clerk wrote witness asking whether the Harbour Board were prepared to pay for the expense of the construction of the mole. Witness wrote back stating that when the reclamation scheme swallowed up the mole the Board would pay for the work simply as so much reclamation work, but they would not bear the expense of roadways or ornamentation of any kind.

Mr. Burton: What is the position of the Harbour Board with regard to the promenade pier?

Witness: The position is contained in the last minute you read.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: How long will it take before this reclamation scheme is completed?

Witness: About 11 or 12 years.

How much money have you raised so far?

We have raised £600,000 against the £1,000,000 mentioned in the schedule of the Act.

As a matter of fact, I take your evidence to be this, that early this year a proposal was submitted by the Town Council for a pier to be erected at this mole?—Yes.

In the event of such promenade pier being constructed, the mole would form part of the pier?—I don't know.

Did you go into the matter for yourself?—No.

Geo. Taylor Nicholson, M.I.C.E., engineer of the Table Bay Harbour Board, said the rate at which the reclamation was proceeding was slow. A pier should start from the beach and not from the end of a mole. The mole he did not think was substantial enough to be used as an approach to the pier.

Mr. Upington: There is nothing on earth to prevent this mole being an admirable approach to the pier. Is this not a substantial structure?

Witness: No; I don't think so.

Is it not strong enough for people to walk upon?—As it is made of rubble, I don't think it would be strong enough.

You think that the pier should start from the beach?—Yes.

Does not the pier at Dover start from the end of a mole?—That mole is solid.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Hyman Liberman, Mayor of Cape Town, called, said he was fully acquainted with the history of the scheme for the construction of a pier at the bottom of Adderley-street.

Mr. Upington: The construction of such a pier. Mr. Liberman, has been before the citizens for many years?—Yes.

The report of one of the committees of the Town Council has been put in which authorises the construction of the work proceeding now at the bottom of Adderley-street?—Yes.

This mole would form an approach to the pier at the bottom of Adderley-street?—Yes.

Prior to the construction of this work, had the old Central Jetty been used as a promenade pier?—Yes.

The Central Jetty has become very dangerous?—Yes.

In fact there is a letter from the Attorney-General calling attention to that point?—Yes.

The Town Council has been advised by their engineers that this mole could be used for a pier?—Yes, it forms a pier in itself.

Then there is an alternative scheme proposed by the Harbour Board that you should extend this work for a certain distance into the Bay?—That was a matter of discussion.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Your Council is very anxious to protect Rogge Bay and to assist the fishermen?—Yes.

For this purpose you entered into an agreement with the Harbour Board?—Yes.

That agreement contains the provision for a rubble mole, which is to form one side of the fishing harbour?—That is it.

You intend to get the necessary powers to improve the present harbour?—Yes.

The agreement you entered into only provided that the Harbour Board would in certain eventualities compensate you for this mole or provide a harbour elsewhere?—That is quite right.

They did not say that they would compensate you in any case?—They were to compensate us or give us an alternative.

Now, in that case, what becomes of the money spent on the mole should the reclamation scheme cover it?—It will never cover it in the next fifty years.

You don't agree with the time set down by Mr. Robb and Mr. Nicholson?—I don't.

It may be that the country will become prosperous again, and the reclamation scheme would proceed faster?—In any case, Cape Town will have had full value in pleasure and profit from the scheme.

Witness (continuing) said the Harbour Board had no objection to erecting a mole. The Town Council had decided to go on with the pier, because they had authority from the ratepayers. There would be no trouble in getting the Harbour Board's consent to the erecting of this pier.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: He was performing his duty in going on with this work. The position that the Council took up was that if they waited till this reclamation ground was completed, they would have to wait about 50 years, it was much better to spend the money now, and give the people all the facilities for recreation and entertainment which is usually associated with piers.

[Buchanan, J.: This mole will answer the purpose of promenade and protection to the fishermen.]

The Mayor: Yes.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff in this action says he sues as a ratepayer of this city and also a member of the Town Council. He bases the action upon an allegation that the Town Council are committing an illegality in constructing certain works and charging the expenses so incurred against an amount authorised to be spent in other ways. I will not rest my decision in this case on the judgment recently given in this Court in the case of Bagnall v. The Colonial Government, because the question of locus standi has not been raised on the pleadings; but I will rather consider the question of the legality or illegality of the action of the Town Council. Looking then at the merits, it appears that as far back as 1891 the ratepayers authorised the amount of £20,000 to be spent by the Town Council upon the construction of a sea-wall and promenade. Subsequently, in 1897, another vote was submitted to the ratepayers for sanction. There was no definite plan of the scheme prepared at that time or specifically approved of in these votes. The Town Council were prepared at that time, or specifically authorised to expend first £20,000, and then £25,000 for the construction of a promenade and baths. The Town Council were now constructing a mole at the foot of Adderley-street. From the Mayor's minute, which was submitted to the ratepayers when the authorisation was first asked for, it appears that it was proposed that the promenade should be constructed from the foot of Adderley-street. Accordingly, with the permission of the Harbour Board, the Town Council are now constructing a rubble wall from the coast line at the foot of Adderley-street. The question is whether this work is within the authority given by the vote of the citizens. It is contended that it is not the work authorised by the ratepayers. That is a matter of opinion. The plaintiff himself has not been called, and consequently did not give his opinion. Engineers, however, have been called. One, the Harbour Board Engineer, states that the mole is not substantial enough for the purpose intended, whereas the City Engineer says that it is. This Court, however, does not sit as a Court of Appeal to review the Town Council resolutions as to the manner in which the work authorised should be carried out. The objection taken on the pleadings seems to me to be that this work is not intended as carrying out the mandate of the ratepayers, but that it is being done for the purpose of providing a harbour for fishermen. Evidence, however, goes to prove that this mole can be used both as a promenade, and also as a protection for the fishermen. It is also contended that where the mole is now running will eventually be dry ground. The Mayor says that may be so in fifty years time, while others think that from twelve to fifteen years hence the land will be reclaimed where the mole is now being built into the sea. Well, both parties are entitled to their conjectures. It is very curious that this scheme was authorised as far back as 1891, and sixteen years have already elapsed, but the reclamation work has made very little progress. The question is, can this mole in any way be found necessary for a pier or promenade, and, if necessary, can it be used as an approach to a pier. The Court cannot say therefore whether the Town Council were acting illegally in carrying out this work, and in that case I am of opinion that there is no ground for granting the order as prayed by the plaintiff. Judgment will therefore be for the defendant, with costs.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ALBOW BROS. V. ISSEROW. { 1907.
Aug. 27th.

Dr. Greer moved for the first adjudication of defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

VAN DER SPUY V. CARTOULIS.

Mr. Pohl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £3,300, with interest from the 1st July, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

BACON V. HANSLO.

Mr. Conradio moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £350, with interest from the 1st January last, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

EDWARDS AND OTHERS V. DISTRIBUTING SYNDICATE FOR COLD STORAGE.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on two agreements of lease for two sums of £40 and £17, due by way of rent.

Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Palmer applied, under Act 38, 1884 (section 14, sub-section 1), for the discharge from insolvency of Isaac Perl.

Granted.

Mr. Long applied, under section 107 of the Ordinance, for the release from insolvency of the estate of Susannah Mary Baker, formerly of Queen's Town. The estate had been sequestrated in 1904, and the creditors had all been paid in full.

Granted.

KENNEDY V. KENNEDY.

This was an action brought by Andrew M. Kennedy, of Cape Town, against Margaret Anton Mary Kennedy for restitution of conjugal rights, on the ground of malicious desertion.

Mr. Struben was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Evidence having been given of service of set-down upon defendant,

Mr. T. Birch (clerk in charge of the marriage register at the Colonial Secretary's Office), gave proof of the registration of the marriage.

Plaintiff said that he was married by ante-nuptial contract to defendant in Cape Town, on June 25, 1907. Defendant left him on June 28. He had known her about two years. They were married on the day of her arrival from England. They went and resided at Green Point. On the day after the marriage she informed witness that her feelings towards him had changed; but, thinking it her duty to go through with the marriage, she had not said anything to him. She then said that she had fallen in love with a man on board. She seemed wretched and miserable. She requested to be allowed to spend the week-end with her brother. Witness consented, and his wife went on June 28 to her brother's, and she had since declined to return to her home.

Defendant was ordered to restore conjugal rights to plaintiff on or before September 30, failing which to show cause on October 15 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with forfeiture of rights under the ante-nuptial contract.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte DUTCH REFORMED CHURCH, DARLING. { 1907.
Aug. 27th.

Mr. Payne moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute, except as to certain four lots, which applicants craved leave to withdraw.

Rule made absolute as prayed, and rule discharged so far as Lots 147, 148, 149, and 150 are concerned.

In re CAPE MINERALS, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Watermeyer moved for confirmation of the official liquidators' report. He also applied for an order settling the list of contributories and fixing the official liquidators' remuneration.

Report confirmed, list of contributories settled in terms of Annexure "A" to petition, and liquidators' remuneration fixed at five guineas.

In re BRITISH STEAM LAUNDRY (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Wallach presented the first and final report and account of the official liquidator.

Usual order granted, report to lie 14 days for inspection, and to be published once in the "Cape Times."

Ex parte ESTATES OF THE LATE THOS. BARRY AND JOHN BARRY.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl moved for an order authorising the issue of a certified copy of a certain mortgage bond for £72 odd, hypothecating certain property at Bredasdorp. A purchaser had been found for the property, but he declined to take transfer unless the bond were cancelled. The bond had been lost, and efforts to find it had failed.

Rule nisi granted, returnable on the 3rd December, publication in "Ons Land" and the "S.A. News."

Ex parte REFORMED CHURCH OF ALIWAŁ NORTH.

Mr. Long moved on the petition of the minister of the Reformed Church, at Aliwal North, and chairman of the Kerkeraad of the Church, for the amendment of certain two transfer deeds, so as to set out the correct name of the Church.

Order granted authorising the Registrar of Deeds to amend the deeds by the addition of the words, "now known as the Reformed Church of Aliwal North."

Ex parte VAN RENSBURG.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to petitioner to sue one Cornelis F. Vermeulen by edictal citation on a mortgage bond for £300 and a promissory note for £50, and for the attachment of defendant's half-share of certain property at Britstown ad fundandum jurisdictionem. Defendant when last seen was on his way to German South-west Africa.

Leave granted to sue by edict, citation returnable on the 26th November, and property attached, personal service, if possible, failing which, one publication in the Dutch language in a paper circulating in the district of Christiana (Transvaal), and also in the "Windhoekse Zeitung."

Ex parte VAN HEERDEN (BORN JOOSTE).

Mr. M. Bisset moved, as a matter of urgency, upon notice to the attorneys of Francois Daniel Jooste, to show cause why the action brought by petitioner against Jooste should not be set down for hearing on the 29th August, and, failing that, why a commission should not issue to take petitioner's evidence. It was stated that the case would not now be defended. Defendant was sued individually, and in his capacity as executor of an estate in which plaintiff claimed an inheritance.

The case was ordered to be set down for the Third Division on the 29th August, costs of the present application to be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

EATON, ROBINS AND CO. V. { 1907.
SCHREUDER. { Aug. 28th.

Removal of case to another division.

Mr. Buchanan moved, as a matter of urgency, in the case of Eaton, Robins and Co. v. Schreuder, listed for the First Division, now to have the case removed to another court. He explained that the case would be a default case.

The solicitor of the defendant had withdrawn from the case, and he understood the defendant would not appear. As there was little likelihood of the case being taken in the First Division, he asked as an alternative that the case be removed to the Third Division. The Registrar had stated that as the case was not on the list, he would not call it. The plaintiffs were a business firm, and if they had to stay in the Court, it would be a detriment to the firm.

Maasdorp, J., said he would grant the application, but, of course, it would have to be subject to the judge in the Third Division consenting to take it.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

EHLEERS V. ESTATE LOUBSER. { 1907.
Aug. 28th.

This was an action for an interdict restraining the defendant from paying to any of the plaintiff's said daughters during the lifetime of the plaintiff, and without her consent, the sum of £1,000, or any portion thereof, and from dealing with the said joint estate in contravention of the terms of the said will.

The plaintiff, in her declaration, says that her name is Jacomina Hendrina Ehlers, born Van Tubergh, that she is the surviving spouse of Andries George Hendrik Loubser, the defendant is Marthinus Christoffel Fourie, secretary of the Malmesbury Board of Executors, and as such the executor testamentary of the estate of the plaintiff's late husband, to whom she was married in community of property in July 21, 1904. On the 10th of May, 1901, the plaintiff and her said late husband executed a mutual will, copy whereof, together with a true translation, is hereunto annexed marked "A," and the testator died leaving the said will of full force and effect, and also leaving the plaintiff and the six children mentioned in the will surviving him. The plaintiff duly adiated under the will. By the terms of the said will the testators bequeathed to their three sons by way of prelegacy certain farms, for which legacy the said sons were jointly to pay to the survivor during his or her lifetime interest reckoned on a capital of £3,000, and to each of their three daughters the testators bequeathed the sum of £1,000. After making the said bequests the testators proceeded to nominate, as heirs of all their estate not bequeathed as above, all their children in equal shares. They also provided that nothing need be paid to their heirs during the lifetime of the survivor, unless the survivor should otherwise desire. A first liquidation account has been filed in the said estate, copy of which is hereunto annexed marked "B." Two out of the testators' three said daughters are married, namely, Catherina Maria, married to Albert van der Westhuizen, and Rykie Hester, married to Hendrik Schalk Bester, and the defendant has intimated to plaintiff his intention forthwith to pay to each of the two said daughters, at their request, the sum of £1,000, as bequeathed to them under the said will. Apart from the said farms bequeathed to the testators' sons, there are not sufficient assets in the said estate from which to pay the sum of £2,000, proposed by the defendant to be paid to the testators' said daughters. The plaintiff has not consented to the said payments or either of them being made during her lifetime, and she contends that, without such consent, the defendant is not entitled to make the proposed payments, the true construction of the will being that the testators intended their said daughters to be paid the sum of £1,000 each out of the money for which the said farms were bequeathed to their said sons, and that the said sums are not claimable by the daughters until after the death of the survivor, unless the latter should otherwise desire.

Defendant, in his plea, states that the available funds, apart from the farms referred to, are sufficient without the realisation of any bond to pay to each of the three daughters her legacy of £1,000 (i.e., £3,000 in all). He admits plaintiff has not consented to the daughters' legacies being paid to them, but defendant states that according to the true construction of the said will, to which defendant craves leave again to refer such consent, is not necessary.

Mr. Burton, K.C. (with him Mr. Inchbold), appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. D. Buchanan (with him Mr. Lewis) appeared for the defendant.

After formal evidence and argument were heard, the Court reserved judgment.

Postea (September 24th).

Hopley, J.: The plaintiff, now married to Ehlers, was formerly married in community of property to Andries Loubser, now deceased, and on May 10, 1901, she and her late husband executed a mutual will disposing of their joint estate. Andries Loubser died on July 21, 1904, leaving the will of full force and effect, and the plaintiff adiated and took benefits under it. The will itself, after the usual clause revoking all previous testamentary writings, goes on to say that before proceeding to the election of heirs the testator and testatrix bequeath and devise by way of prelegacy, their immovable property to their three sons—to wit, the farm

Witteklip to Johannes Tobias, Zandheuvell, part of Philipskraal, and part of Byzanderskip, to Andries, and Byzanderskip (presumably the part not bequeathed to Andries) to Jacobus, on the condition that the said three sons should pay jointly to the survivor, interest reckoned on a capital of £3,000 during the lifetime of such survivor, and upon a further condition which need not be herein referred to. The spouses then proceed to bequeath as a prelegacy to each of their three daughters the sum of £1,000 sterling. As to the remainder of their joint assets they will that the same shall be sold by public auction after the death of the first dying of them, but in a further clause they ordain that mortgage bonds need not be called up till after the death of the surviving spouse. As heirs of all of their estate not bequeathed as above, they nominate all their children in equal shares. The will proceeds to say: "It is, however, our wish and desire that nothing need be paid to our heirs herein before mentioned during the lifetime of the survivor unless the survivor wishes so to do." The further terms of the will need not now be referred to. Upon the death of the testator the farms were handed over to the sons, who have paid the interest on the sum of £3,000 to the testatrix, but no payment of any sum was made to any of the daughters. Two of them have, however, been married, and are demanding the prelegacy bequeathed to them. The executor wishes to pay to each of them the sum of £1,000, and the present action is brought by the survivor to obtain an order interdicting him from paying such sums during her lifetime without her consent. It will be observed that the survivor's rights to benefits under the will, save as to the interest from the sons, are not specifically defined; but I think that it was clearly the intention of the parties that such survivor should have a usufruct for life over such property as belonged to the joint estate, which was not specifically disposed of and payable to the beneficiaries upon the death of the first dying. Now, it clearly was the intention of the testators to benefit their sons immediately upon the death of the first-dying by giving them possession of the farms at that date, so that if the survivor should elect to abide by the terms of the will it would not be in his or her power to postpone the date of their coming into possession of the farms to a later date. Was there any different intention with regard to the prelegacies to the daughters? The testators throughout their will benefit only their children, but they distinguish the benefits bequeathed to them into two classes, making them as to certain specified farms and sums of money prelegatees, and as to the residue of the estate heirs or residuary legatees. The plaintiff now contends that all benefits of any kind must depend as to the payment of them upon her pleasure during her lifetime, with the exception of the possession of the farms; and the defendant contends that the true meaning of the will is that the only benefits which depend upon the survivor's pleasure are the residuary rights to which the children were instituted as heirs. I am of opinion that the latter is the correct view to take. The testators intended that upon the death of the first-dying, the farms should forthwith pass to the possession of the three sons, as directed, upon the conditions laid down, and that the survivor should have the benefit of the annual income of £180 derived from that source; they intended that each of the daughters should forthwith have the sum of £1,000; that of the residue of the estate, the survivor should have the usufruct for life, unless such survivor should elect to pay any portions thereof away to any of the heirs during her lifetime, and that after the death of the survivor, such residue should be equally divided between the children as heirs or residuary legatees. The plaintiff's claim must therefore be dismissed, and the costs may be paid out of the residuary estate.

RICHARDS V. VAN BREDA.

This was an action to recover the purchase price of a certain house.

In her declaration the plaintiff says her name is Susie Jessie Richards, and she resides in Graham's Town; the defendant is Dirk Cynbert van Breda, a general dealer, residing at Simon's Town. On or about April 26, 1907, the plaintiff sold and the defendant bought, through one Clifford Hooke, a broker, of Cape Town, the house and premises situated at Wynberg, known as Garwood, for the sum of £1,500, it being agreed that the said purchase price should be paid against transfer of the said house and premises. The defendant has failed and neglected, and still fails and neglects, to take transfer and to pay the said purchase price or any part thereof, although repeatedly requested to do so.

Defendant's plea states that he did agree to purchase the property for £1,500, through one Clifford Hooke, a broker, but says at the time the property was mortgaged for £1,250, and it was a special and essential term of the agreement that the sale should only take effect if the said Hooke obtained the consent of the then bondholder to allow the said bond of £1,250 to remain upon the property, and to give the defendant the benefit thereof as mortgagee for a period of three years certain, defendant agreeing further to pay plaintiff the remaining £250 upon completion of the sale. The sale was never completed, as the said Hoole never obtained the aforesaid consent from the bondholder. Defendant refuses to take transfer of the said property and to pay the said purchase price because no sale had actually taken place, although he is willing to do so provided that the conditions he insists upon are complied with.

Mr. Roux was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Van Zyl for the defendant.

Benjamin Clifford Hoole said he was a broker in Cape Town. The plaintiff placed the property Garwood in his hands to let. He wrote to the defendant, Van Breda, with reference to an inquiry he made for a house. He received no reply, but Van Breda called personally and stated he wanted to buy. The question of the purchase of the house was discussed, and defendant agreed to purchase the house for £1,500, provided the bond remained. Witness sent a telegram to plaintiff to that effect, stating also the amount of the commission. There was no condition made by the defendant that the bond should remain for three years. Defendant visited him again, but he made no mention of the condition that the bond would remain for three years certain on the property. Mr. Breda and witness went across to Messrs. Findlay and Tait's office, the latter stating that the bond could not remain on for three years. The mortgagee, however, was still willing to let the bond remain on the property. The bond was the usual bond, subject to three years' notice on either side.

Cross-examined by Mr. Van Zyl: This was the first property he had sold; he was brokering more in produce than in property. He did not take up the attitude that the property was to be paid for at £1,500; the condition of sale was briefly set forth in the telegram sent to plaintiff.

Geo. Marquard Findlay, of the firm of Findlay and Tait, said that when he was first informed of the sale by Mr. Hoole, there was no idea then that the bond was to be guaranteed to remain on the property for three years. The bondholder said that he was quite willing that the bond should remain at 5 per cent., but he was not going to tie up the bond for three years. Witness said that in his opinion there was little probability that the bond would be called up, as in his opinion the bondholder had no need of the money.

Cross-examined by Mr. Van Zyl: He knew nothing about the actual terms of the sale. If it had not been for this new condition introduced by Mr. Van Breda, it would not have been necessary to consult the bondholder at all, as he (witness) had full power to act. The bondholder would not consent to the bond being tied up for three years, especially as the bond was given at a low rate of interest. He wrote to that effect that they were prepared to take Mr. Breda as a mortgagee, but they could not agree to tie up the bond for three years. There was nothing said in his office to the effect that if these three years were not guaranteed there would be no sale.

Dirk C. van Breda, the defendant, said that at first Hoole, the broker, asked £1,650, witness saying that he could not give that amount. He offered £1,500 on the condition that the bond remained on the property for three years, and that his (witness's) wife approved of it. If those conditions were guaranteed, he was still willing to take up transfer.

Counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J.: The matter seems to me upon the pleadings to be a very simple one. It is whether the Court will grant specific performance of a contract of sale. It appears that Mrs. Richards, who resides at present in Graham's Town, had a house called Garwood, Wynberg, and had instructed Mr. Hoole to let this house or sell it if possible. That the house was to let or for sale Mr. Hoole had advertised upon a board, and it is perfectly clear that the defendant had his eye upon it. He left a letter at Mr. Hoole's chambers, saying he had called about the house, and would like to know the lowest price. Mr. Hoole concluded that he meant the rent, and quoted £8 as the lowest figure, and wrote to him to that effect. The defendant then wrote that Mr. Hoole had misunderstood him, as he wanted to buy the house, not to rent it. Mr. Hoole saw Mr. Van Breda, and a conversation took place between them. Now, although Mr. Hoole had not had many transactions as a property broker, still he has been for a couple of years a broker in produce, and has had a great deal of experience in the making out of brokers' notes. I take it, therefore, that Mr. Hoole, being a careful business man, would know what he was doing, and he says that when he drew out the telegram to his principal, and Mr. Van Breda does not deny that he saw the telegram, his wording of the telegram was in keeping with the facts. The telegram simply conveyed to his principal in Graham's Town information that he had sold the house at £1,500 for £250 in cash, the bond for £1,250 to remain at 5 per cent. If Mr. Breda said then that he could not buy the property unless his wife approved, or unless the bond remained for three years at 5 per cent., it seems impossible that a business man could have sent such a telegram as this. The fact that these conditions do not appear on the telegram strongly incline me to the idea that the evidence of Mr. Hoole as regards the interview and conversation is correct. Thereafter Mr. Breda received a telegram from Mr. Hoole that his offer had been accepted, and this telegram I consider concluded the bargain. But Mr. Breda wrote at once: "I don't want you to consider the matter closed, don't let my offer prevent you letting or selling the property. I am going to look at the property on Sunday, so as to let my wife see it." I am of opinion that it was then too late for the defendant to recede from his contract. It is probable that immediately after his interview with Mr. Hoole the defendant went home and discussed the matter with his wife, and that something emanating from her had induced him to endeavour to import a new condition, viz., that the bond of £1,250 should be fixed for three years. Mr. Van Breda in his evidence attempted to show that he had offered to purchase this property for £1,500, provided that the bond should remain for three years and that his wife approved. If that was so it is impossible to understand the telegram and the letter. Mr. Breda, all through, does not take up the line that he was being bounced into the contract. He is not a man in any way deficient in natural ability, and he did not take up this line and repudiate the contract indignantly. Moreover, to show that Mr. Hoole considered the bargain closed, he encloses in a letter two inquiries from persons who were desirous of hiring the house. Mr. Findlay, the agent of the bondholder, saw Mr. Breda, and there was a conversation about the bond remaining on the property. He asked Mr. Findlay that the bond should be fixed for three years. Mr. Findlay informed him that this imported a new condition which he must see Mr. Trill, the bondholder, personally upon. I cannot believe that in this matter Mr. Findlay's memory of the proceeding is at fault. Mr. Findlay says that he is quite certain that Mr. Van Breda did not say: "Oh, no, this is not a new condition, it is the only condition upon which I bought the property." Again, Mr. Hoole knew how careful he had to be in setting out the terms in the broker's note, and the broker's note states definitely the terms upon which the property is to be sold. There is nothing in the note about a three years' guarantee for the bond, and from the evidence it appears that it was not necessary to get the consent of the bondholder before the sale was completed. The bondholder has stated that he is willing that the bond should remain as formerly upon the property, and the plaintiff asks the defendant to fulfil his contract, and to pay £250 and take transfer. I think that the documents and the evidence show that the contract was as alleged, and that it was in subsequent correspondence that Mr.

Breda asked for the three years' guarantee. Judgment must be for the plaintiff with costs.

WOODMAN V. WOODMAN.

This was an action brought by Mary Jane E. Woodman, of Rosebank, Cape Division, against her husband, Wm. A. Woodman, for restitution of conjugal rights, on the ground of his malicious desertion.

Mr. De Villiers was for plaintiff; defendant, who was sued by edictal citation, was in default.

Plaintiff said that she was married to defendant in September, 1896, without community of property. They lived for some years in the suburbs, and at times the defendant deserted her without giving any reason, but eventually returned to his home again. In May, 1905, he left her without stating any reason. She subsequently saw him once or twice in the street, but he declined either to return to her or give her any money. In 1906 she ascertained that the defendant had gone to England. She was informed that he had been seen somewhere in the neighbourhood of Southampton, and she had communicated with his relatives. Defendant had been employed in Cape Town as an insurance clerk. She was not aware of his present whereabouts.

Decree of restitution granted, with costs; defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before the 31st October, failing which, to show cause on the 14th November why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed, with costs; rule to be published in the same manner as directed in regard to citation.

EATON, ROBINS AND CO. V. SCHREUDER.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, K.C. (with him Mr. Howes), appeared for plaintiffs, and asked leave to mention this matter, which had been set down in the First Division. Defendant's attorneys and defendant himself had, he said, withdrawn, and the case was now one of default.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would hear the matter.

Mr. Buchanan read the plaintiffs' declaration, from which it appeared that in November, 1904, defendant engaged himself to plaintiffs to give security on behalf of one Marthinus Johannes Kirsten, of Riebeeck's Kasteel, district of Malmesbury, for goods supplied, and signed a document binding himself as security in solidum and joint principal debtor to the amount of £75. In April last Kirsten was indebted to plaintiffs for goods supplied in the sum of £81 14s. 6d., which sum he failed and neglected to pay. Plaintiffs prayed for judgment for £75, with interest a tempore moræ and costs. Defendant, in his plea, said that he was ignorant of the English language, and that he was induced to sign the document by false representation, and that he signed it in bona fide ignorance of its contents and without agreeing thereto. In reconvention, he prayed for an order declaring the document to be null and void, and of no effect.

Formal evidence was led in support of the plaintiffs' claim.

John L. C. Commaille, a bookkeeper in plaintiffs' employ, said that he knew Kirsten. The plaintiffs had been supplying him with goods, but they stopped supplying him in November, 1904, until he got security. Subsequently the firm received a letter from the defendant, and finally they got a document from Kirsten signed by Schreuder. Goods were thereupon supplied to Kirsten from time to time, and an amount of £81 had become due. Defendant came to plaintiffs and admitted his liability for the debt. Kirsten was the defendant's brother-in-law. On Monday last Schreuder called, and said that he was liable and wished to withdraw from the case.

Judgment in terms of plaintiffs' declaration, and absolution from the instance on the claim in reconvention, defendant to pay costs.

Ex parte TSHONA AND OTHERS.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., moved, on the petition of Elijah Tshona and others, of Fort Beaufort, for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent a certain minor in an action to be instituted by petitioners to have the will of their mother, Sarah Bobi Tshona, declared null and void. The minor concerned, Alvin Tshona, was one of the heirs under the will, and was without parents. The case would probably be heard in the Circuit Court at Fort Beaufort.

Order granted appointing Richard D. Henry, Inspector of Locations, Fort Beaufort, as curator ad litem of the minor, failing Mr. Henry's acceptance, the Rev. Thomas Major to be appointed, costs to be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REX V. POLEVNIK. { 1907.
Aug. 29th.

Liquor licence—Native—Proclamation 64 (British Bechuana-land) of 1889.

Proclamation 64 (B.B.) of 1889 prohibits the giving or selling of liquor to natives. One N., a white man, sent B., a Bastard, on several occasions to P., a hotel-keeper, with a note, requesting P. to supply him (N.) with liquor per bearer. On one of these occasions B., not having been supplied with the money to pay for the drink, borrowed it from a native constable, who followed him, saw him served with the liquor and arrested him. P. was thereafter convicted of selling drink to B. It appeared, that on receiving liquor, N. was in the habit of giving some of it to natives.

Held on appeal, that P. had not contravened the proclamation, though N. might have done so.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Resident Magistrate, Gordon, fining appellant, a hotelkeeper in Upington, £25, or in default, six months' imprisonment, for contravening Proclamation (British Bechuanaland) 64 of 1889. The accused Polevnick was charged with selling wrongfully and unlawfully to a Bastard named Daniel Beukes a bottle and a half of brandy. By the terms of the Act, this Bastard was not entitled to be supplied with the liquor. The case had been remitted to the Magistrate for sentence.

Appellant pleaded that the offence he was convicted of was not proved. The liquor was supplied by appellant to Beukes upon an order given by a European, who was entitled to be supplied with liquor.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Dr. Greer), was for the appellant Polevnick; Mr. Nightingale was for the respondent.

Dr. Greer, in the course of his argument, quoted the terms of the Act bearing upon the case. The accused Polevnick had no doubt of the genuineness of the note received from the native, as he had supplied liquor on former occasions upon the production of similar notes. Counsel quoted the case of Rez v. Francis (11 "Cape Times" Reports, p. 76), Queen v. Wright (11 Supreme Court, p. 84).

Mr. Nightingale quoted Rez v. Robertson (9 Juta, p. 303), Rez v. Mathetus (13, C.T.R., p. 646), in support of his argument for respondent. He contended that the word "giving," as printed in the section of the Act 2 B.B., Proclamation No. 64 of 1889, actually meant the manual handing over of liquor, and this was the interpretation put upon it by the Magistrate. The whole wording of the section was designed to keep liquor from natives under any circumstances.

Hopley, J.: In this case the appellant is an innkeeper at Upington, and he appeals against the sentence of the Magistrate of that place on a conviction of contravening the sub-section of the Proclamation No. 64, British Bechuanaland, 1889, in that he wrongfully and unlawfully sold or gave to one Daniel Beukes, a Bastard, in the said district, a quantity of spirituous liquor. Now the things that he is charged with here are selling or giving brandy to Daniel Beukes. The section of the Act says that whoever sells, exchanges, gives, or procures liquor for any native in British Bechuanaland shall be liable to certain penalties. From the evidence it appears that there was a white man of a low class called Newhoek, who sent notes to the hotel at Upington.

The notes are in this man's handwriting in pencil, on slips of paper written by an apparently quite sober man, and they are all practically in the form as follows:—"Upington Hotel.—Mr. Polevnick,—Please send for me by the bearer of this note a bottle of pale Cognac brandy." Now the selling of brandy to white people is not prohibited in that district, and it seems to me a pity that it is not, more especially where black and white are mixed up so much. However, there is no such restriction. In this case a white man takes advantage of his white skin to procure liquor for himself and his coloured associates. The question is: whether the accused has contravened the section of the Act by supplying the liquor to Beukes? Now it is clear that in two of the first notes that went in on May 29, the money was actually sent by Newhoek, and so I can only think that the sale was conducted with Newhoek through the agency of Beukes. When the brandy got to Newhoek he undoubtedly contravened the Act by sharing it with Bastards. He brings liquor into his own house, and there distributes it among his coloured associates. Beukes, having got the liquor for Newhoek on the two previous notes, asks for a note so as to procure liquor for himself, and he got a note written exactly in the same terms as the other. Now, if Newhoek was under the influence of liquor at the time, certainly his handwriting does not show it, and there is nothing to show that the hotel proprietor, Polevnick, knew that Newhoek was carrying on a carouse at this time. All he knew was that Newhoek had sent these notes and that the money had come with the notes in each case. In this particular case, Beukes had not got the money himself, and so he borrowed it from a native at the location. This native happened to be a native policeman, who followed Beukes to the hotel, and saw him get the liquor. The policeman tackled him, and arrested him. Beukes became somewhat violent in going to the police station, and undoubtedly he had had some drink that night. The question is, however, did the hotelkeeper contravene the Proclamation when he sold the brandy? If he had actually sold the liquor to Beukes he certainly would have contravened the Act, but upon production of the note he was certainly entitled to consider that he was selling to Newhoek through the agent. There is nothing in the section which says that a white man could not purchase liquor through an agent. In handing this bottle to the Bastard, the barman undoubtedly thought that he was not contravening the section of the Proclamation. This is a penal section, and one should not construe it more widely than its natural meaning warrants. At the same time, one must look into the policy of the law and see if it goes as far as is contended in the present instance. Without taking the extreme illustration of whether a man who sends a bottle of liquor to someone by his native servant, who draws the cork and drinks the spirit, is guilty of contravening the Act, it seems hardly possible to prevent the handling of bottles of liquor by natives. In the case of Mathebus, Mr. MacGregor argued that his client was not guilty, because he had not given the liquor for a consideration; but the Court ruled that "giving" must be taken in its ordinary sense. In the case of Francis it seems that a native purchased liquor upon a note signed by a certain person, who swore that he had given the native the money so that the liquor might come to him, and that the native in appropriating the liquor had acted unjustifiably. The Court however held that in terms of the law which it was then construing the only way the native could really get the liquor was by a note from the Magistrate, and that the liquor had been supplied to the native upon a note signed by a man not a Magistrate. Mr. Nightingale, in the present case, argued that the policy of the law was to keep liquor from natives in Bechuanaland, but the law does not say that it prevents a native handling liquor in any way. Supposing that everything had been proper in this case, and that the hotelkeeper got a note like any of those in court, and supplied brandy, he would think he was sending it to the man Newhoek, and he was in that case not giving it to the native. It seems to me that the words "supplying or giving" must be confined to the meaning of supplying or giving for the use or disposal of the person to whom the liquor is handed. Therefore, if you supply liquor in such a way that it may be used by a native for its own consumption, then that undoubtedly would be a contravention of the section of the Act. It seems to me, however, in this case that the hotel proprietor was within his rights in handing over the liquor to the native upon production of the note, there being no reason to suppose that it would not reach the writer of the note. The appeal is, therefore, upheld, and the conviction quashed.

REX V. MYBURGH.

This was an appeal from the A.R.M., Maclear. Appellant, Johanna Elizabeth Myburgh, was charged on June 18 with the theft of a ring, the property of Mrs. Katrina Wilkinson, thereby contravening section 196 of Act 24 of 1886. Accused pleaded not guilty, but was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of £1, or in default three days' imprisonment. The appeal was brought up on the ground that the verdict of the Magistrate was against the weight of evidence. The complainant, Mrs. Wilkinson, said she missed her ring, which she had in a box, and informed Mrs. Myburgh that the ring was missing. Afterwards she saw it on the finger of a neighbour, Mrs. Biljoen, who said she had received it from Mrs. Myburgh in exchange for another. Complainant said she recognised this ring as the one she had lost by its general appearance. Appellant said that the ring was given to her by her daughter.

The Magistrate held that the complainant had identified the ring as her property. The husband of the accused, called for the defence, stated that his daughter did possess a similar ring, but he was unable to say whether the ring produced was the same. The daughter, Miss Myburgh, marked her ring on the inside with an awl, so as to be able to distinguish it from the complainant's ring, but he was convinced that the mark spoken of was absent, as the mark on the inside of the ring in question seemed to be simply a join.

Mr. Upington was for the appellant, and Mr. Nightingale for the respondent.

Counsel for the appellant contended that undoubtedly there were two rings of a similar nature, and that the mark on the ring produced was actually that made by appellant's daughter. There seemed to be a good deal of jealousy on the part of complainant towards accused, and he contended that the Magistrate had not taken this, as well as the other evidence, sufficiently into account.

Hopley, J., after reviewing the evidence, in the case, said: "I am convinced that the Magistrate has not given due weight to the fact that complainant had failed positively to identify the ring, and that the whole circumstances of the prosecution were such as to have raised doubt in the mind of the Magistrate in the accused's favour. The appeal was upheld, and the conviction quashed."

ILLIQUID ROLL.

AHLBOM, GULLANDER AND CO. V. WIID.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for £123 4s. 7d., for goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

VAN HEERDEN V. JOOSTE.

This was an action brought by Anna Elisabeth van Heerden (born Jooste), of Krugersdorp, Transvaal, against her brother, Francois Daniel Jooste, of Murraysburg to recover a certain inheritance.

Mr. M. Bisset was for plaintiff; there was no appearance for defendant.

Mr. Bisset stated that the hearing had been postponed from time to time at Jooste's request. The defendant's attorneys had now withdrawn from the case, and, although the defendant had filed a plea, he did not appear to defend. Counsel proceeded to read the pleadings.

Plaintiff, in her declaration, said that she was married out of community of property to Petrus Johannes van Heerden, and by him assisted as far as need be. The defendant resided at Murraysburg, in this colony, and was sued individually and in his capacity as executor testamentary in the estate of the late Roelof Alwyn Jooste. Plaintiff and defendant were children of the latter. Under the joint will of their parents it was provided that certain landed property in their ownership (to wit, one-sixth share of the farms Bloemfontein, Klipfontein, and Lilyfontein) should be sold to Frans Daniel Jooste (meaning defendant) for £500. Testatrix died about 1891, and the testator died about 1902. The latter appointed plaintiff and defendant as heirs, and defendant as sole executor. Defendant thereafter took out letters of administration, and proceeded to administer the estate, and thereafter filed an account wherein he wrongfully and unlawfully brought up as an asset in the surviving testator's estate the said land at a valuation of £500 (being the bequest amount), and wrongfully and unlawfully awarded the same to himself without paying into the joint estate £500, or paying over to plaintiff any part thereof. Plaintiff said that she had, in consequence of his wrongful action, been damaged, and that as co-heir she was entitled to £250. She prayed for judgment for £250, or, alternatively, that the defendant pay into the joint estate for the benefit of herself and defendant, the said sum of £500.

Defendant, in his plea, entered at some length into the position of the estate. He said that the sole asset in the testator's estate was the landed property, and that the liabilities thereof comprised the sum of £500, being portion of a bond for £700, also £40 6s. 6d., funeral expenses, the cost of liquidating and administering the estate, and sundry petty accounts, and £35, medical charges. He said he took over the aforesaid liability of £700, and thereupon the landed property and the bond thereon were transferred to him. In the testator's estate. The net balance of the of £150, whereof £50 was due to plaintiff, £50 to defendant, and £50 to the testator's estate. The net balance of the testator's estate, including the £50 mentioned, showed a liability in favour of defendant, and there was nothing due therefrom to the heirs. Defendant also said that plaintiff was indebted to him in the sum of £57, moneys lent between 1899 and 1905, and £79, price of seven horses sold by defendant to plaintiff in or about 1897. He prayed that the claim be dismissed, with costs. In reconvention, defendant (now plaintiff) prayed for judgment for £136, moneys lent, and the price of horses sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Plaintiff, in her replication and plea in reconvention, said that a bond of £200 which had been mentioned by defendant, had been discharged out of the movables. The other bond of £700 was passed by testator after his wife's death, and did not constitute a debt of the joint estate. The proceeds of the bond were devoted to paying certain debts of the defendant, with his knowledge and consent, or by his acts or agency, and defendant acted unlawfully, improperly, and negligently in treating the bond as a liability of the joint estate. She denied any liability in regard to the alleged loans and purchase of horses.

Formal evidence having been given by plaintiff.

Mr. Bisset said that he had to ask for judgment for £83 6s. 8d., being one-third of the sum of £250. That was the amount of inheritance to which plaintiff appeared to be entitled.

Judgment for plaintiff for £83 6s. 8d., with costs, including costs of application to set down the case, plaintiff to have her expenses as a witness, and absolution granted on the claim in re-convention.

LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Burton, K.C., moved for confirmation of the official liquidators' report. Report confirmed.

In re GOOD ROPE FUNERAL ASSOCIATION, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for confirmation of the first and final report of the official liquidator. The report stated that the company was established in 1886, with a nominal capital, according to the deed of partnership, of £1,000, with power to the directors to increase the capital to £2,000. The actual issued capital was £1,350. The assets of the company consisted of landed property, situated at the corner of Wale and Bree streets, Cape Town, and also movable assets. The latter had realised £450, and the former £1,500. This result enabled the liquidators to discharge the preferent as well as all concurrent liabilities, and provided for a refund to shareholders of 4s. 8d. per share. All the capital had been fully subscribed, and all calls had been paid. The failure of the company was entirely due to the excess of expenditure over receipts for the last three years, during which period there was a loss of about £300 per annum. The liquidators added that as the liquidation would be finally completed after the confirmation of this report, they desired authority from the Court to destroy all books, documents, and papers of the company now in their possession, and to pay all unclaimed dividends and refunds due to shareholders to the Master. They prayed for an order, (1) confirming the report and accounts; (2) as to disposal of books, accounts, and documents of the liquidation; (3) to deposit with the Master one month after confirmation of this report all unclaimed dividends and refunds to shareholders; (4) to dissolve the company.

Order granted confirming the account, and authorising the destruction of the books, accounts, and documents on a certificate by the Master that the liabilities have been met and a dividend paid.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., moved, in terms of consent paper, for removal of trial to the Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn. Order granted, costs of the application to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte DUCKITT.

Transfer—Mistake—Amendment of title.

Two sisters jointly purchased certain cottages; but, by the mistake of the conveyancer, transfer was effected in favour of only one of the sisters. After the death of one of them, the survivor applied for leave to rectify the transfer by adding her name as one of the transferees, and no objection being raised by the executor of the deceased sister or by the Registrar of Deeds, the order was made.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for leave to have transfer passed of certain property free of duty. From the petition, it appeared that petitioner and her late sister acquired certain six lots of ground at Wynberg, and had twelve cottages erected thereon. Petitioner's sister was a better business woman than deponent, and she managed their affairs. Subsequently to her sister's death, petitioner discovered that the whole of the property was registered in the name of her sister alone. As indicating that she had a half-share of the property as acquired, petitioner stated that in her last will her sister gave her a life interest in her six cottages. Petitioner asked for leave to have the error in the transfer amended by transferring one-half of the property to herself free of duty. Application had been made to the Treasury, but the Government officials referred the applicant to the Court. The matter had previously been before the Court, and counsel now put in a consent paper, signed by the niece of deponent, who was the only person interested in the deceased's estate.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear that there has been a mistake, and the party concerned consents to this amendment. The cottages which are in question were bought with monies supplied by both sisters, and by some mistake transfer of all the cottages was made to one of the sisters now deceased. It would not be right that the other should have to pay transfer duty over again in order to have the half transferred in petitioner's name. Transfer duty has been paid upon the whole. A mistake was made, and I think that mistake should now be rectified in the manner asked for in the petition. The Court will therefore grant the order as prayed.

CARLYLE V. BARSDORF AND { 1907.
ANOTHER. { Aug. 30th.

This was an action in which the plaintiff Carlyle sought to effect transfer of certain property purchased by him from the defendants, or, in the alternative, to recover the sum of £70 purchase money paid, and £30 damages, and costs of the suit.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, said he was a carpenter, residing at Kitcheners-road, Woodstock. The defendants are (1) Edward Barsdorf, and (2) Alfred Theodore Hemmery, Thomas Herbert Hazell, and Edward W. McLachlan Thomas, in their capacity as trustees of the insolvent estate of Philip John Porter, of Claremont. All the defendants reside and carry on business in Cape Town. In or about October, 1903, the said Barsdorf and Porter entered into a transaction in co-partnership in and about the purchase, and subsequent sale for their commission profit, of certain landed property situated at Plumstead, in the Cape Division, and known as the Heatherhurst Estate. Thereafter, on or about the 9th December, 1903, the said Barsdorf and Porter caused the said estate, which had been purchased by them, to be put up for sale on their behalf in lots at public auction, under certain printed conditions. Plaintiff at the said sale purchased for the sum of £70 certain lots in the estate. It was provided in the conditions of sale that upon payment of the whole of the purchase money, transfer would, if the purchaser so desired it, be effected in favour of the purchaser. Plaintiff paid the whole of the price to the said sellers, or their duly authorised agents. Plaintiff demanded transfer, but the defendants failed to effect this. Subsequently Porter surrendered his estate as insolvent, and the second named defendants were duly appointed trustees in the insolvent estate.

Defendants deny that they ever purchased the estate, or put it up for sale, as alleged. They say that one Hackenberg is still the registered owner of the said estate referred to as the Heatherhurst Estate. They entered into an agreement with Hackenberg by which the latter should put up for sale at public auction the estate under the condition that should the estate, when so sold, realise a sum in excess of £4,500, the said Barsdorf and Porter should be entitled to receive all sums of money so realised over and above that sum, in consideration of which the said Barsdorf and Porter agreed to pay, and did pay, the said Hackenberg the sum of £500. Defendants say that no payments were made to them by the plaintiff, and that if any payments of amounts as alleged therein were made, they must have been made to Hackenberg or his duly authorised agents. They deny that the refusal to give transfer was wrongful or unlawful, and they deny that they were in law bound to effect transfer.

Mr. Murray Bisset was for the plaintiff. The defendant Barsdorf appeared in person; Porter, the other defendant, did not appear.

Henry Carlyle, called, said he was a carpenter, residing at Woodstock. In consequence of certain advertisements, he attended a sale of land in Plumstead in 1903. It did not appear from the conditions of sale who the actual sellers of the property were. He signed certain conditions of sale, but the copy produced he could not swear to. He paid for several lots, and had asked transfer from defendants, but could not get it.

John Thomas Carlyle, son of the plaintiff, said he also purchased lots in the same property from I. and J. Hermann, the auctioneers. He did not know for whom they were selling the property. Afterwards he paid the instalments to Mr. Porter, the second defendant. He asked Mr. Barsdorf to give him transfer. Barsdorf promised to give transfer in a month or two, but failed to do so.

Samuel Chapman said he was son-in-law of one Hackenberg, now in Australia. Hackenberg sold the estate in question. Barsdorf and Porter were considered the actual purchasers. In reply to his lordship, witness said that if Hackenberg had received all the money got from purchasers, it would have amounted to over £3,000. For the past three years he had been pressing Barsdorf and Porter for the money, but could get no settlement.

The defendant Barsdorf stated that Porter and himself did not actually take transfer of the property until £4,500 had been paid,

I believe Hermann got £1,600, but personally I received nothing.

Buchanan, J.: The defendant Barsdorf has not surrendered his estate like the other defendant, Porter, and he personally is liable. It appears that the defendants were partners, and agreed to purchase the property for £4,500. They expected to make a profit out of the sale. The unfortunate purchasers, of whom the plaintiff is one, have already been defrauded out of their money, and I sincerely hope the plaintiff will be able to recover the amount owing. The defendants are ordered to give transfer within 14 days, failing which they are ordered to repay the sum of £70, purchase money, together with £10 12s., damages and interest, a tempore morae and costs of suit.

SHASKOLSKY V. FISHER.

Mr. Wallach moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Wynberg, for £10 11s. 6d. and £10 2s. 4d. costs. Counsel also applied for provisional sentence against the defendant, who had removed from the Magistrate's jurisdiction.

Defendant said that he was a building contractor, and was without means. He declared that he had made a payment of £3 to Attorney Steer, with which he had not been credited.

The application for provisional sentence was ordered to stand over until Tuesday next, and the application for civil imprisonment was refused.

DU TOIT V. ROUX.

Mr. Pohl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £470, less £120 paid on account, with interest, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Counsel explained that the case had not been set down owing to the neglect of the plaintiff's attorney.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would grant an order as prayed in this case, but it must be clearly understood that it should not be quoted as a precedent where there had been neglect in not setting down the case in the ordinary course.

SCHMITT V. SCHMITT.

This was an action brought by Heinrich Schmitt, of Claremont, against his wife, Auguste Schmitt, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, on the ground of defendant's malicious desertion.

Mr. De Villiers was for plaintiff; defendant, who was sued by edictal citation, did not appear.

Heinrich Schmitt (the plaintiff) said he was married to defendant in Glasgow, Scotland, on the 23rd August, 1895. There were two children of the marriage, both boys, living with witness. In 1903, witness came to this colony, arranging with his wife to join him in the following year. In March, 1904, he received a letter in German from the defendant, in which she said that she could not live with him again, and that she had found she loved somebody else, whom she named. She also said that she was going to live with the other man. Witness asked her to reconsider her decision, and told her that he would forgive her, and asked her to join him, but she did not do so. He had arranged with the steamship company that she should have a free ticket to the Cape. The children were brought to witness by a friend. He had since heard that his wife had gone to live with the other man. He desired to have his wife's interest in an insurance policy on his life to be declared forfeited and to have custody of the children. Witness was employed as a confectioner.

By the Court: Under the terms of his engagement his wife could at any time obtain a ticket from his employers to come out to the Cape.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before November 1, failing which, to show cause on November 14 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and defendant to have declared to have forfeited all benefits of the marriage, including the insurance policy and custody to plaintiff of the children, service by registered letter addressed defendant's sister, Mrs. C. E. Ditttrich, of Elgin, Scotland, also to make it clear to the defendant that a free passage is provided for her from Scotland to Cape Town, to enable her to obey the decree of restitution of conjugal rights.

Mr. Nightingale moved for an order of contempt of Court against the trustee in the respondent estate, John O. Walter. An order was made by the Supreme Court on the 2nd July calling on the trustee to file the dividend receipts in the insolvent estate. That order was duly served on the trustee on the 6th July, and according to the Master's affidavit he had failed to furnish these receipts or to give any evidence of the payment of the dividends in the insolvent estates. He had failed to prove that the creditors had been paid the amounts that had been awarded them in the account. The order had been served on him, and had not been complied with.

A wire had been sent that morning asking for a postponement of the matter, but Counsel was informed that this trustee on prior occasions had given a great deal of trouble. There had been previous orders of the Court against him. He also moved for costs against the trustee.

De Villiers, C.J., said there was no reason for suspending the order. The respondent had had ample time to abide the order of Court, and he must be committed for contempt of Court. The order granted as prayed, with costs against the defendant.

MASTER V. TRUSTEE INSOLVENT ESTATE MORRIS.

Mr. Nightingale moved for an order compelling the trustee, John Hope Simpson, in the insolvent estate of Frederick D. Morris, to file an account within one month, with costs against the trustee personally.

Order as prayed, with costs.

Ex parte BRUMMER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved on behalf of the petitioner for an order declaring certain property free from fidei commissum on the ground that it was impossible for the petitioner, who was now 68 years of age, to have issue.

Order granted.

Ex parte KOTZE AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Roux moved for an order authorising the registration of an antenuptial contract. The petitioner and his wife were married in the Orange River Colony on the 6th August, 1907. It was their intention to be married out of community of property, but previous to their marriage they instructed a notary public at Aliwal North that it was not convenient for them to appear before him in person, and they executed a power of attorney, but the power of attorney, although posted in time, only reached Aliwal North on the evening of 6th August, 1907.

Order granted.

Ex parte MEINTJES.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to the petitioner to be examined for admission as a notary. The petitioner also wished to be examined in Pretoria, which, however, was not in the petition, in order to save expense.

Order in terms of petition, but no further order as to examination in the Transvaal until notice had been given to the Law Society.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

COLLISON LTD., V. VAILE. { 1907.
 " Sept. 2nd.
 " 4th.

This was an action brought by Henry C. Collison, Ltd., to recover an amount of £4,440 0s. 9d. from Reginald Francis St. Frere Vaile.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows: By a resolution of the plaintiff company, confirmed on June 10, 1904, the defendant Vaile was appointed a director of the company and vice-chairman of the Board, he to be allowed such salary or emolument as the company might think fit and proper. In accordance with the above resolution, it was agreed that the defendant should come to South Africa in order to take the chief control of the company's business, and he did so; and thereafter, in or about the year 1904, he proceeded to Johannesburg, in the Transvaal, and established and took charge of the branch business of the plaintiff company there; the salary or emolument of defendant was fixed at £1,200 a year whilst holding the office of director and vice-chairman in chief control of the whole South African business. During the period from which the defendant took charge of the Johannesburg branch business as aforesaid, up to the present date, the defendant mismanaged the plaintiff company's business, acted illegally in incurring liabilities in the name of the plaintiff company, and himself incurred large liabilities to the plaintiff company, and is now indebted to the plaintiff company in the sum of £4,440 0s. 9d. in all. The amount of £2,082 8s. 7d. is the balance on the Johannesburg current account as between plaintiff company and the defendant as at November 30, 1906; the defendant from time to time drew monies and obtained goods from the business, and from time to time paid sums into the business; the details of the said account have been rendered to the defendant. The amount of £1,729 4s. 2d. is the balance of the purchase of certain landed property at Johannesburg, styled the City and Suburban Hotel; this property was purchased by defendant for £17,000, and transfer passed into his own name and a bond of £15,000 passed upon the property; the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully obtained the said amount of £1,729 4s. 2d. from the plaintiff company's branch business as aforesaid, and utilised the same in paying for the said property. The amount of £776 17s. 6d. is in respect of sums illegally obtained by the defendant from the said branch business, and wrongfully and unlawfully expended in and about a property at Johannesburg styled the Standard Brewery, between December, 1905, and October, 1906. Particulars of the said account have been rendered to the defendant. The sum of £253 19s. 3d. is the balance due by defendant in respect of interest at 8 per cent. upon advances from time to time made to him out of plaintiff company's business, after deducting interest due on advances made by him; particulars of the said account have been rendered to the defendant. The sum of £25 18s. 6d. is in respect of an account for personal accommodation of the defendant at Rosebank Hotel in November, 1906, disbursed on his behalf out of the plaintiff company's business. The sum of £1,026 19s. 2d. is the balance due by defendant upon a debit and credit account with the Cape Town business of the plaintiff company, in respect of moneys advanced and goods supplied from time to time to defendant, and sums from time to time credited to him in respect of salary, fees, and travelling expenses; particulars of the said account have been supplied to defendant.

Defendant in his plea says he admits paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration, and also paragraph 3, save that he denies that he took charge of the branch business of the plaintiff company at Johannesburg. He says that one Edward W. Collins was appointed by the company, who gave him a plenary power of attorney as managing director of that branch, and that the said Collins continued to act as such until his services were dispensed with by the plaintiff company in or about November, 1906. Defendant admits that there has been financial transaction both on the debit and the credit sides of the account between him and the plaintiff company, but otherwise denies the allegations in paragraph 4 of the declaration. He specially denies that the account marked "A" correctly shows the position between him and the company, or that he owes the company any portion of the sum of £4,440 0s. 9d., as claimed. Defendant says that on a proper statement and debate of accounts as between him and the plaintiff company, the position will be as shown on the account herewith annexed and marked "B." The City and Suburban Hotel referred to was bona fide and legally bought for and on behalf of the plaintiff company for £17,000. It was arranged that defendant should take transfer of the property in his name, and should pass a bond for £15,000 to one Nicholson, with the contemplated object of preventing such bond prejudicing the preference of the preferent shareholders of the company, and that the company should pay the balance of £2,000. The company sold the goodwill of the licensed premises to one Levison for £3,000, let the premises to him for £85 per month, and also tied him down to purchase all the liquors he required for his business from the company. The said Levison paid the company in respect of goodwill £1,000 in cash, and gave promissory notes for the balance of £2,000. The whole of the financial aspect of the said transaction was entered in the books of the Johannesburg branch, and was known to the company, who also adopted the entire transaction. Subsequently on its appearing that the transaction did not prove the financial success it had at first promised, the directors sought to repudiate it, and the defendant agreed to adopt the purchase as his personal transaction, and it was agreed that the entries in the books should be adjusted accordingly. In making such adjustment the company has wrongfully failed to credit defendant with the sum of £491 16s., being an amount paid by the said Levison in account of the promissory notes given by him for goodwill. The proper debit against defendant in this item should be £1,237 8s. 2d., instead of £1,729 4s. 2d.

Defendant admits that the sum of £25 18s. 6d. became due from him for board and lodging at Rosebank Hotel in November, 1906, but says that after plaintiff company took over the hotel from Mrs. Roberts he paid for account of the company in respect of the said hotel various sums of money totalling £23 0s. 6d. for sundry articles, as per detailed list marked "C" annexed hereto. He claims to set this off against the £25 18s. 6d.; otherwise, he denies paragraph 9. Defendant says that on the 31st January, 1906, he advanced to plaintiff company the sum of £2,501 16s. 4d. in connection with a liability of the company, which arose out of an agreement between the company and the Standard Brewery, by which the company took over the management of the brewery and the sale of the output thereof, and undertook to pay for wages and goods and general expenses of management, on the condition that out of the proceeds of the sales the company should be reimbursed its outlay, and should receive a commission of 15 per cent. on such proceeds. This transaction resulted in a loss to the company, and the defendant, by agreement, advanced the aforesaid sum to the company to cover this loss of cash, and is entitled to be credited therewith on account. At divers times between the months of March, 1904, and December, 1906, the defendant, at the special instance and request of the company, and for the furtherance of its business and interests, made several special journeys in Africa, England, Scotland, and on the Continent of Europe generally, and expended various sums of money on such journeys and visits, and he is entitled to charge the company on this account the sum of £1,800, which is a fair and reasonable charge for such special services rendered and moneys expended.

Defendant refuses to pay the sum of £4,440 0s. 9d. which plaintiff company has demanded. He says specially that he was justified in resigning his office and ceasing to take any further part in the management by reasons which need not be set out herein.

For a claim in reconvention defendant (now plaintiff) says: (1) He craves leave to refer to the several matters and things in the above plea set out. (2) He is legally entitled to, and does claim, formal judgment for the sums of £23 0s. 6d., £2,501 16s. 4d., and £1,800 for the reasons set forth in his plea, and that the said items shall be credited to him in account, and says that on a proper statement and debate of accounts between him and the company it will be found that there is a balance due to him by the company of £1,417 8s. 10d., as shown on the account annexed marked "B."

Wherefore he claims: (a) Payment of the sum of £1,417 8s. 10d., due to him as aforesaid in a proper statement and debate of accounts; (b) interest thereon à tempore morae; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for plaintiff. Defendant in person.

Jno. Ed. Paul Close, called, said he was an accountant, carrying on business in Cape Town. He was an inspector under H. Collison and Co. The company was not in liquidation at all. It was a going concern, and a good going concern. In June, 1906, as auditor of the company, the balance-sheet for 1906 was sent to him for examination. Certain items in the account he queried and made inquiries into. He wrote defendant upon the matter, and got two replies. Witness was examined at considerable length as to the details of the items set forth in the pleadings.

Further evidence having been heard on both sides.

Postea (September 5th). Counsel and Defendant were heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiffs who are a limited liability company carrying on business in South Africa under the title of H. C. Collison and Company, have as one of their members Mr. Henry Collison, of London, who is very largely interested in the affairs of the company. He appears to be a large holder of preferent securities in the company, and he to a great extent controls or directs the operations of the company in South Africa, where the business is carried on by a board of directors.

Mr. Collison and the defendant, Mr. Vaile, met in London, and Mr. Vaile takes up the position that certain inducements were held out to him to join the company, to accept shares, and to give financial assistance to the company. As a result of negotiations with Mr. Collison, defendant came to this country early in 1904 with credentials from Mr. Collison. At a meeting of the board of directors out here he was appointed vice-chairman and managing director at Johannesburg, where the company carried on a large branch business. Whilst the defendant was such vice-chairman and manager certain transactions were entered into which are in dispute in this case.

The defendant's association with this company has now terminated, and he is being sued on an account which contains several large items, some only of which are in dispute. The first claim in the account annexed to the declaration is for £2,092 8s. 7d. stated to be the balance on current account. This amount is not disputed, and therefore the plaintiffs are entitled to be credited with this amount of £2,092 8s. 7d.

The next item in the account is a claim made in connection with the City and Suburban Hotel. It is for an amount of over £1,700, of which defendant admits the sum of £1,237 8s. 2d. This amount as far as it is admitted must be awarded to the plaintiffs. But in connection with this claim an amount of £491 16s. is in dispute. This hotel, situated in Johannesburg, was bought by the defendant while he was the company's manager there. I think it is proved from the documents put in that this hotel was bought by the defendant personally and on his own account, although in making the purchase he was acting to advance the interests of the company of which he was vice-chairman by endeavouring to secure business for his company by making the hotel what is called a "tied house."

There is no doubt that the statements placed by Mr. Collins, the local manager of the company, before the defendant, who was then in England, when Mr. Collins was endeavouring to induce the defendant to make the purchase, were of a glowing nature, and described the transaction as a good investment, out of which much could be made. Whether the defendant was misled by Mr. Collins' very roseate estimates, or whether he was a little sanguine himself, the defendant purchased this hotel property on his own account. He scoured the business of the hotel for the plaintiff company, and made advances to keep the business going out of the company's funds. Had the amount so advanced still remained on the company's books the question might fairly have arisen whether defendant should be regarded as personally liable, or whether the transactions in connection with the business of the hotel should not be regarded as those of the company. But after the question had been raised between the parties the plaintiff agreed that all items connected with the business of the hotel in regard to the purchase thereof should be eliminated from the account in Collison's books, and the defendant himself should only be liable for them. The defendant originally bought the hotel for £17,000, of which purchase amount £15,000 was allowed to remain on bond, the balance of £2,000 having to be paid to the vendor. Mr. Collins, in urging the purchase, represented to defendant that a lease of the hotel could be made to one Lewison, who had offered to pay £3,000 for the goodwill, and to pay a monthly rental of £135 for the hotel. This £3,000 was to have provided the £2,000 necessary to be paid to the vendor, leaving a profit of £1,000 over, while the £135 per month would have paid the interest upon the bond. Therefore, if Lewison had carried out the contract, there would have been no call on either defendant or the company. Upon paper this looked a very good transaction. What seems to have been done was this, the £2,000 to pay the vendor was taken from the plaintiff's funds at the Johannesburg branch, and the property was transferred to the defendant, who passed his own bond for the £15,000 unpaid. Lewison paid the plaintiff company £1,000 and gave bills to Collisons for the balance of £2,000. He also passed a general covering bond in favour of the plaintiff company to secure this £2,000. Now this all shows, I think, that the defendant acted in the transaction with perfect bona fides. The original transaction was initiated by the company's manager and all payments made appeared in the books of the firm, and defendant believed he was acting in a way which would very largely benefit the company. But after the matter came into dispute he himself agreed with the company that all the items in connection with the purchase of the property should be eliminated from Collison's account and passed to defendant's private account. The transaction turned out a failure, and a disastrous one, and the defendant undertook to bear the loss. It may be unfortunate for the defendant, but there was a distinct agreement entered into by him as to what was to be done in connection with this account.

Mr. Close, an accountant of standing in Cape Town, was sent to Johannesburg by the directors to report and to adjust accounts. Acting upon instructions received from the directors and in pursuance of the agreement come to with the defendant, Mr. Close eliminated from the accounts in the books of the company the items connected with the hotel, and debited them to the defendant. He left, however, the sum of £491 16s., which had been paid by Lewison off his promissory notes, and which ought to have been, in my opinion, eliminated with the other items in the account. But, on the other hand, as Lewison's promissory notes had been renewed from time to time there were discounts and stamps paid upon their renewals, which Mr. Close seems to have allowed to stand in the account as against the £491. The proper course to have adopted under the agreement, I think, would have been to have eliminated both amounts, the £491 on the one side and £196 on the other side. If he had done that there would have been a debit against the defendant beyond the amount admitted by him of this £196 which will have to be added to the plaintiff's account.

The next item in dispute is a small one. There was a claim for hotel expenses and a counter-claim, both of which are now admitted, and setting one against the other there is a balance of £2 18s., which will also have to be debited against the defendant.

The next item in the account is a debit balance upon the defendant's account in Cape Town of £1,026 19s. 2d. This amount is not in dispute, as the defendant agrees that this ought to be debited against him.

The other two items in dispute, one on each side of the account, are connected with the Standard Brewery Co. of Johannesburg. This company was a limited liability company, the chairman of which was Mr. Collins, plaintiff's manager at Johannesburg. Collins had thus two capacities, one connected with the brewery company and one connected with the plaintiffs. It has been stated that the fact of his connection with the brewery was not objected to by Collisons. The brewery company was getting into difficulties, and the defendant, to keep the company afloat, made certain proposals on his own behalf, quite apart from his position as vice-chairman and managing director of Collisons at Johannesburg. The proposals were to re-float the company or obtain financial assistance for the company by means of debentures. This proposal, made by the defendant, I take it from the evidence, was not made on behalf of Collisons, but on his own account.

It became necessary to keep the brewery going while these negotiations were in progress and to do so defendant made certain advances to the brewery company out of Collisons' funds. Even after the brewery company was placed under liquidation, defendant on the authority of the Transvaal Supreme Court, made a further advance which was to be a preferent charge in the liquidation. This last amount has now been paid into Court and awaits the result of this case, but as a matter of account between the parties this £776 17s. 6d. advanced by the defendant from the plaintiffs' funds must be debited against the defendant personally.

There was a further sum of £2,501 standing in the plaintiffs' books as a debit against the brewery company. This was the money previously advanced by the defendant out of the plaintiffs' funds in the course of business. Defendant had obtained for Collisons a very favourable contract, by which Collisons would have the vending of the whole of the brew of the company on certain terms, and out of the returns they were to get a commission of 15 per cent. Had the brewery company gone on well there would have been no dispute, as then this money would have been paid off. But unfortunately, like the City and Suburban Hotel, the brewery failed, and the company has gone into liquidation. The defendant while vice-chairman and director of the plaintiff company in Johannesburg made these advantages admittedly on behalf of Collisons to the brewery company. Had the matter rested there, there might have been a great deal to be said why Collisons should have borne this loss and not the defendant. But the defendant, instead of leaving this amount on the books, has taken this amount out of the case. When the company's balance-sheet was prepared at the end of January, 1906, the defendant admitted his personal liability for these advances, and gave a cheque to Collisons for the total amount of the amount due by the Standard Brewery to Collisons, and closed the account in the books. The defendant was able to do this because he had at that time £2,500 to his credit on loan account with Collisons. By giving cross cheques he paid out his own credit balance; and, as between the brewery company and Collisons, he paid off the debt due by the brewery to Collisons, taking it over entirely on his own account. Had he not done so there might have been considerable argument adduced to show that the loss suffered in connection with the brewery should be borne by Collisons and not by the defendant.

The defendant had in reconvention sought to recover back this £2,501. But he has not shown any agreement to repay it or any just cause why, after taking over the debt, he is now entitled to repayment. I have not the slightest doubt that the defendant in all these transactions acted for the best of all parties, and with the full intention of benefiting Collisons as well as himself. There is no imputation of fraud against him, or of misappropriation of funds, or anything of that kind. But he voluntarily took this liability upon his own shoulders and, much as I regret that he should suffer this loss, he has no legal claim to have the amount refunded by the plaintiff company.

The only other item which the plaintiffs claim and which has not been disposed of is an account of £263 for interest. I have looked at the interest account which has been put in by the plaintiffs. There was no agreement between the parties that the current account should bear interest, although the defendant was receiving interest upon the capital which he advanced to Collinsons. I do not know whether it is usual to charge interest in regard to such current accounts. I think as a matter of practice it is rather unusual to charge interest on such accounts. At the same time the defendant very fairly says that he does not wish to dispute the right to make the charge. But the account, as an account, cannot be passed as it stands, both as regards the rate of interest and the items on which it has been charged. As the plaintiffs have left it to the Court to say what would be a fair amount to allow, and have also said I may deal generously with the defendant, I have decided, rather than leave this one item open for further adjustment and thus incur further expense, to allow the plaintiffs £150 as the balance of interest due to them. In so doing the amount will be within the mark, and the defendant will not be overcharged.

There is another item claimed in convention, and that is a sum of £1,800 claimed by the defendant for travelling expenses. The defendant when he first took up his duties claimed certain expenses incurred in travelling to Johannesburg and elsewhere on behalf of this company. The plaintiff company admitted this claim, and paid the amount to that date, and then, at the defendant's suggestion, the company agreed to pay from the 15th June, 1904, a sum of £100 per month to the defendant for his services. Since then up to the time of the action no question of travelling expenses was ever raised between the parties. The £1,200 a year was paid, and no claim was made for any other expenditure incurred by the defendant. The defendant now says that he has expended a great deal more than the £100 per month which was allowed him, but I think he must be considered to have accepted this £100 per month as an equivalent for any expense which he may have incurred in his position as vice-chairman of the company. He himself had shares in the company, and was largely interested in its success. His services as director have been paid for with those given by the other members of the Board. He may not have been compensated for all his outlay, but he has been drawing a fair amount; and I think that, under the circumstances, he is not entitled in addition to charge travelling expenses.

The various amounts for which I find for the plaintiffs are as follows: £2,082 8s. 7d., £1,237 8s. 2d., £2 18s., £1,026 19s. 2d., £776 17s. 6d., £196 3s. 9d., £150. Against which there is admittedly the items of £1,075 6s. 5d., the balance to the credit of defendant's current account, and £400 salary, making a total of £1,475 6s. 5d. This subtracted from the total of the other amounts leaves £4,007 8s. 9d. in favour of the plaintiffs, for which amount judgment will be given with costs.

Postea (September 6th).

Buchanan, J.: In giving judgment in this case yesterday, I am afraid I took the wrong figures in connection with the item £491, which is in dispute. I have given plaintiffs credit, not for £1,729, which they claimed, but for £1,237, which the defendant admitted. Then I said the principle was that the £491 ought to have been omitted by Mr. Close on the one side, but the company ought to have credit for £196 for stamps and discount. In adding up the amounts, instead of debiting £196, I took the difference between the two, £285, so the amount of the judgment will have to be reduced, and instead of allowing plaintiffs £285 12s. 3d., I should have allowed them £196 3s. 9d. Judgment will therefore be given for plaintiffs, not for £4,106 17s. 3d., as stated yesterday, but for £4,007 8s. 9d., with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for plaintiffs) asked whether the Court would be prepared to make any order in regard to the amount of £260 in the hands of the attorneys?

Mr. Justice Buchanan: I may state formally that I consider that the £260 is part of the £776 which is in dispute between the parties. It has been awarded to plaintiffs, and consequently the money is the plaintiffs'.

Jurisdiction of Supreme Court—
Charter of Justice—Attachment to confirm jurisdiction

1929 E.D.L.

Cause of action arising abroad.

The petitioner, a resident in this Colony, applied for an order to attach certain goods of the respondent, who resided in German South-West Africa, in order to found jurisdiction in an action for damages for the respondent's breach in German S.W. Africa of a contract there made by him with the petitioner.

Held, that as the cause of action did not arise in the Colony, the petitioner was not entitled to the order.

Case of Einwald v. German West African Co. (5 Juta, 86) commented upon.

The petitioner also applied for the attachment of two mules, which he claimed as his property and which the respondent claimed and detained in this Colony.

Held, that as the respondent claimed the mules as his property, the Court would be justified in ordering an attachment thereof, in order to fortify its jurisdiction over a non-resident in respect of a cause of action alleged by the petitioner to have arisen in this Colony.

Dr. Greer moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Paul Kahn, transport driver, of Steinkopf, district of Namaqualand, for the attachment of certain movables belonging to one Johannes P. Mostert ad fundandam jurisdictionem, pending an action to be brought by petitioner to recover a balance of £684 10s. 4d. for transport riding, etc., in German South-West Africa. Petitioner said that Mostert had paid him £375 17s. 3d. on account of a total indebtedness of £990 7s. 7d., but had ignored all requests for payment of the balance. Mostert had hitherto resided at Warmbad, German South-West Africa, but, on account of a fresh outbreak of hostilities, he had removed to Homansdrift, Cape Colony, and had brought movables to the value, petitioner believed, of about £500.

De Villiers, C.J.: There is not sufficient information before the Court to justify this attachment by the Court.

As far as I can gather, Mostert is domiciled in German South-West Africa, the contract was entered into there, and the action should be brought there. The breach took place in German South-West Africa. If you can give me further information as to Mostert's domicile, I might reconsider the matter.

Dr. Greer asked the Court if leave would be given to mention the matter again upon further information being obtained as to domicile.

Postea (September 17th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The petitioner, who is domiciled in this colony, asks for an order to attach certain cattle and other property in this colony belonging to the respondent, in order to establish the jurisdiction of this Court. The action which the petitioner proposes to institute is for damages for the respondent's breach of a contract which was entered into and was to be performed in German South-west Africa. The petitioner admits that the respondent resides and is domiciled in German South-west Africa, and the question must now be definitely settled whether a resident of this colony is entitled to an order for the attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem of property locally situated of a non-resident in respect of a contract which was neither entered into nor is to be performed in this colony. The jurisdiction of this Court is defined by the Charter of Justice, the 30th section of which enacts that the Supreme Court "shall have cognizance of all pleas and jurisdiction in all causes, whether civil, criminal, or mixed, arising within the Colony, with jurisdiction over the King's subjects, and all other persons whomsoever residing and being within the said colony, in as full and ample a manner, and to all intents and purposes, as the Supreme Court of Justice now existing within the said colony now hath or can lawfully exercise." The Charter took effect on the 1st of March, 1834, and there can be no doubt that the then Supreme Court, as well as the Supreme Court created by the Charter, always exercised the power of attaching the person or property of non-residents, in order to fortify the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in respect of contracts entered into or torts committed in this colony. In the year 1839, this Court, in the case of Dunell v. Van der Plank (3 Menz., 112) exercised the power in order to found jurisdiction in respect of two bills of exchange drawn on the defendant in England, and by him there accepted, and thereafter by the drawer and payee indorsed to the plaintiffs in this colony. Unless the indorsement of a negotiable instrument to a holder in this colony makes a difference—a point which need not now be decided—the case is an authority for the proposition that an attachment to found jurisdiction can also be granted in respect of a contract entered into in England, and there to be performed. I am not, however, aware of any other case, certainly none has been cited, in which this Court has attached the property of a non-resident for the purpose of enforcing a contract neither entered into nor to be performed in this colony. On the contrary, in every case that I can remember in which the question was raised, the Court refused an order of attachment under such circumstances. In 1876 the Court refused the order in the case of Wilhelm v. Francis (Buch. Rep. 1875, p. 216), where the plaintiff and defendant resided out of the jurisdiction and the contract had been entered into out of this colony and was not to be performed here. This decision was followed by the Supreme Court of the South African Republic in Cloete v. Benjamin (1 S.A.R., p. 191), Kotze, C.J., correctly stating in his judgment that this Court by its decision in 1876 had departed from the position laid down in 1839. In 1887 this Court again considered the question in Einwald v. German West African Company (5 Juta, 86), and I then took the opportunity, in view of the great importance of the matter, to enter into a full examination of the grounds upon which the assistance of the Court should be invoked for the purpose of establishing a jurisdiction which without such assistance would not exist. The applicant in that case was a foreigner, but every one of the grounds stated by me for refusing to attach the goods of the then non-resident respondent would equally apply to a case in which the applicant is a domiciled citizen. In the subsequent case of Springle v. Mercantile Association (T.S. for 1904, p. 163), the Transvaal Supreme Court followed Einwald's case, Wessels, J., saying: "The case of Einwald gives us the Roman Law as it existed in Holland, and as it to-day obtains both in the Cape and here." I would, therefore, have had no hesitation in refusing the present application, which is made by a person domiciled in this colony, were it not that the Supreme Court of the Transvaal has distinguished between the rights of residents and non-residents, and has decided that an incola of the Transvaal is entitled to attach ad fundandam jurisdictionem the property of a peregrinus locally situated, and that no ratio jurisdictionis other than the attachment is required to found jurisdiction. The case is that of Le Comte v. W. and B. Syndicate (T.S. for 1905, p. 696), which was decided in 1905. The learned Judge (Solomon, J.), who delivered the opinion of the Court, fully approved of the judgment of this Court in Einwald's case, saying emphatically that to the question raised in that case, "there could be only one answer upon the Roman Dutch Law authorities, and the Court naturally refused to make an order attaching the property." He then proceeds to quote previous decisions of the Supreme Court of the Republic, as well as of the present Supreme Court. In one of them, Cloete v. Benjamin, Kotze' Reports, 1881-4), Kotze, C.J., is reported to have said: "It appears from Voet (2.4.22) that only at the request of a person residing in this country can an arrest be granted against the property of a stranger found within the Republic." The translation of the words actually used by Voet is that the practice had been introduced "in order that greater facility might be afforded to creditors to sue their debtors residing in another jurisdiction, and litigate in the place of their own domicile with less trouble and expense," and so on; but he does not say that when once the practice was introduced only residents could avail themselves of it. It is true of every civilised country that Law Courts are established therein in order to enable its inhabitants to enforce their legal rights, but it is equally true that when once such Law Courts were established they were open to non-residents, the only condition generally being that they shall give security for costs. In another passage, Voet (2. 4. 33) states that every one who has a legitima persona standi in iudicio is entitled to obtain an attachment for good cause, and the same statement is repeated in most other text-books on the subject. According to Bort (van Arresten, p. 3, par. 14) the Sheriff, in executing an order of attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem, was bound—where the plaintiff was a foreigner and unknown—to demand security for any damage the defendant might sustain by reason of the attachment. The inference is obvious that, subject to this provision, which is analogous to the provision that a peregrinus shall give security for costs when demanded by the defendant in an ordinary action, non-residents had the right to obtain an order of attachment to found jurisdiction equally with residents. The only further limitation to this right that I can find is that in some of the provinces of the Netherlands it was a special rule that one peregrinus could not arrest another peregrinus if they were both fellow-citizens of the same country, but this rule was introduced because these fellow-citizens would not be allowed to arrest each other ad fundandam jurisdictionem in the country of their own mutual domicile. This exception to the general rule, which is fully treated by Voet (2. 4. 45), and by Van Leeuwen (Cens. For., p. 2.1.1, c. 15, s. 16), would show that the general practice was not to withhold the right from non-residents. With all due deference, therefore, to the learned Judges of the Transvaal Supreme Court, I am unable to concur in their view that under the Dutch law residents enjoyed any greater rights than non-residents to obtain the assistance of the Courts by attachment to found jurisdiction. If, under the Dutch practice, a non-resident could not attach the property of another non-resident to found jurisdiction in respect of a contract entered into or to be performed, or a tort committed abroad, I am satisfied that the same disability would have attached to a resident plaintiff. In regard to the question whether, under the Dutch practice any plaintiff, resident or non-resident, was entitled to an order to attach, ad fundandam jurisdictionem, the property of a non-resident, it is by no means clear that he was so entitled. According to Groenewegen (Ad. Cod. 3-18), a person could not be sued in the country where he committed a tort or entered into a contract, or had to fulfil the contract unless he was there found, and the learned commentator adds: "I have no manner of doubt that it was this custom of ours, which gave occasion to the modern attachment of debtors than which no practice is more prevalent." From this statement it might fairly be inferred that he considered the right of attaching property ad fundandam jurisdictionem only to arise where the defendant had committed a tort or made or broken a contract, as the case might be, in the country in which his person or property was sought to be attached. Voet (2, 4, 22) refers to the practice as one established for the purpose of strengthening (not of founding), jurisdiction, and he says that it was introduced, not only for the benefit of commerce, but because the jurisdiction of the Dutch Courts was so limited that no one could be sued in the country where the contract had been entered or was to be performed unless there found. "It was," he adds, "to remedy this inconvenience that the Magistracy of each territory adopted this right of arrest, in respect of the person as well as property, more especially as they bore in mind that it would greatly widen the extent of their jurisdiction." I cannot agree with the view that it is the duty of Courts of Law to seek to widen their jurisdiction, even if it be done in disregard of the statutes by which they have been called into existence. A practice may have been so long and firmly established, and may have been attended with such beneficial results, that it could not be abandoned without grave detriment to the due administration of justice. The practice, for instance, of attaching the property of non-residents in order to give the Court jurisdiction in respect of causes of action, which arise in the Colony, has been in almost daily use for 80 years, and even if it be inconsistent with the Charter of Justice, it is so firmly grafted in our system, and has been so useful in the administration of justice, that it could not now be discontinued. The power of extending the right to actions arising abroad has been once exercised, and may possibly have been more than once exercised per incuriam, but its legality has been repeatedly questioned by this Court, and it certainly has never been so firmly established as to form an acknowledged part of our system. There is every reason why a defendant should be sued for breach of contract in the country where he entered into the contract, or for a tort in the country in which he committed the tort, and if he does not reside there, that he or his goods, if found in the country, should be attached in order to confirm the jurisdiction of the Courts thereof. There appears to me, however, to be no reason whatever why a Court of law should attach the goods of a defendant who does not reside within the territory, and has not made or broken a contract, or committed a tort therein, for the purpose of founding a jurisdiction which, without such attachment, would have no ground for existence. In the present case the proper forum in which to sue the defendant is in German South-West Africa, where the contract was entered into, and had to be performed, and where the Judges must be presumed to be conversant with the law applicable to such contract. We have several seaports in this colony from which there is a large passenger and goods traffic to the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, and it surely is not reasonable that inhabitants of this colony, who choose to enter into contracts in either of the two sister colonies, should have the right to claim this Court as their forum in respect of the breach of such contracts, merely because the defendant happens to be passing through this Colony on his journey to or from Europe, or is the owner of goods, however insignificant in value, passing through. Although the laws of the different British colonies in South Africa are founded upon the same system, there is a considerable tendency to divergence, and where they so diverge the Courts of the Colony in which the cause of action originated are in every way the most competent to adjudicate thereon. Take the case of a contract made in the Transvaal by a resident of this colony, in which the defence is raised that there is no consideration for the defendant's promise. If the contract had been entered into here it would be a good defence unless it was clear that a donation had been intended, in which case the contract would require registration in the Deeds Office if the amount exceeds £500. If the contract was entered into in the Transvaal, the result, if I understand the case of Rood v. Wallach correctly, would be different, but in either case the Court of the Colony in which the contract was entered into would be the best tribunal to decide as to the law applicable. Without the evidence of legal experts from the Transvaal, this Court could not decide whether a contract there made, but not there registered, for the payment of more than £500, without consideration for the promise, would be enforceable, and if it was found to be enforceable, the question might still arise whether and to what extent the contract could be here enforced, if not registered here as a donation. Similar difficulties might no doubt arise if the action were brought here by reason of the defendant being domiciled in this colony, but that is no reason for court-ing such difficulties by attaching property merely for the purpose of creating a jurisdiction which would otherwise not exist in respect of cases which the able and experienced Judges of the Transvaal are more competent than this Court to deal with. Independently, however, of all questions of expediency. I am of opinion that the order of attachment should not be made in the present case. Where a cause of action has arisen within this colony or where the defendant resides within this colony, one of the alternative grounds of jurisdiction mentioned in the Charter of Justice is forthcoming, but where the cause of action has arisen elsewhere and the defendant does not reside here, I can find no provision in the Charter of Justice or any other statute empowering this Court to obtain jurisdiction over him by ordering that his person or his goods happening to be here be laid hold of. One of the most salutary powers conferred on this Court is that of checking the abuse of their powers by inferior courts of law, and by corporations, and it should take care not to exceed its own powers, especially in cases like the present, where the widening of its jurisdiction would diminish and not increase its efficiency in the administration of justice. Acting upon the principles laid down in Einwald's case, I am of opinion that the application should be refused, so far as it applies to the claim for damages for the respondent's breach of contract abroad. It appears, however, that the respondent is detaining two mules in this Colony, which he claims as his own, but which the petitioner also claims. If the petitioner is the owner, such detention would give rise to a cause of action in this Colony, and the attachment would have a twofold effect, for it would prevent the removal of the mules from the Colony, and it would confirm the jurisdiction of this Court. It would have been quite competent for the Court to order an attachment of the respondent's person to confirm the jurisdiction, but as the petitioner is satisfied with an attachment of the mules detained by the respondent and claimed as his property, the Court will order such attachment for the purpose of confirming its jurisdiction.

MARAIS V. MCKENZIE. { 1907.
} Sept. 2nd.

Resident Magistrate's jurisdiction —Counter-claim.

The plaintiff sued the defendant in a Magistrate's Court for £13, and the defendant, while admitting the claim, filed a counter-claim for £25. The plaintiff objected to the counter-claim as being beyond the jurisdiction, whereupon the defendant reduced his counter-claim to £20.

Held, that after such reduction no objection existed to the jurisdiction.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Acting Resident Magistrate of Indwe in an action brought against appellant (Pieter Schalk Marais, of Doornkop) by respondent (Wm. Charles McKenzie) to recover £13, balance of an open account for goods sold and delivered and cash paid.

It appeared from the record that at the hearing in the Court below appellant admitted the claim, but raised a counter-claim for £25. Respondent's agent excepted that the counter-claim was beyond the Magistrate's jurisdiction, being for damages. Appellant's agent applied for a postponement until later in the day to enable him to look up the authorities. This was granted. Later on, however, he applied for leave to reduce the counter-claim to £20, so as to bring it within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. This was refused by the Magistrate, on the ground that defendant had already pleaded, and that he had filed his counter-claim. Judgment was given for plaintiff as claimed, with costs, and the counter-claim was dismissed.

Mr. M. Bisset was for appellant; Dr. Greer was for respondent.

Mr. Bisset submitted that the Magistrate should have heard the counter-claim, and cited De Wet v. Theron, (9, C.T.R., 452), Kerdel v. Bam (12 S.C.R., 13), and Collett v. Crooks (11 E.D.C. 75).

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that defendant might have brought his action instead of appealing. He did not see how defendant was going to obtain much advantage from his appeal. At the same time he could not understand why the Magistrate refused the application, it seemed such an absurd thing not to hear the case. Some confusion appeared to have arisen, because the Magistrate thought that the counter-claim could not be pleaded in compensation.

Dr. Greer submitted, on the authority of Colonial Government v. Stevens and Hollingsworth (10, Juta, 140), that defendant could not set up, by way of compensation a counter-claim in excess of the claim. It was now sought to have the Magistrate's decision upset on a point that was never raised in the Court below. The counter-claim came before the Magistrate in the form of a claim for unliquidated damages.

Do Villiers, C.J.: In this case there was a claim by plaintiff for £13. The defendant admitted the claim, but put in a counter-claim for £25 3s. Then the plaintiff's agent objected to his claim as exceeding the Magistrate's jurisdiction, whereupon the defendant's agent asked for time to consider the matter, and, after consideration, rightly or wrongly, he admitted that the plaintiff's objection to the jurisdiction was correct, and, consequently, he reduced the amount claimed by him from £25 3s. to £20. If the defendant had not so reduced his claim the question might have arisen whether the admission by the defendant that he owed £13 to the plaintiff debarred the plaintiff from objecting to the jurisdiction in the absence of any tender of the £13 by the plaintiff. In the case of Colonial Government v. Stevens (10, S.C.R., 139), the defendant's claim was for £37 3s. 8d. as unliquidated damages, and as he neither reduced his claim to £20 nor tendered £17 3s. 8d., the Court held that his claim could not be adjudicated on in the Magistrate's Court. In the subsequent case of Kerdel v. Bam (12 S.C.R., 13), the objection to the jurisdiction was taken by the defendant, but as he had admitted the plaintiff's claim for £18 the Court held that he could not object to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate on the ground that he had a counter-claim for £23. In point of fact, after his admission, his claim was for only £5. But the only question in the present case is whether the Magistrate ought to have dismissed the appellant's claim altogether, and refused to hear it merely because he had originally claimed £25 3s. instead of £20. It seems to me that the Magistrate wholly erred in this matter. As soon as the defendant reduced his counter-claim to £20, there could no longer be any possible objection to his counter-claim being raised, and the Magistrate ought to have heard it. It seems a wholly unnecessary proceeding to dismiss the counter-claim altogether after it has been reduced, and to put the defendant to the expense of having a fresh action in order to have his counter-claim decided. The Magistrate ought to have decided on the reduced claim of £20. The Magistrate seems to have thought that, because the defendant's counter-claim is an unliquidated demand, he would not be allowed to reduce it, but the fact that it was an unliquidated demand cannot affect the right of the appellant to reduce his claim to £20, and claim an amount which was clearly within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. The case will, therefore, be remitted to the Magistrate for the purpose of trying the defendant's counter-claim for £20, the judgment for plaintiff for £13 will stand, with costs of the day in the Magistrate's Court, but further and other costs will abide the judgment of the Magistrate, plaintiff to pay costs of appeal.

KING V. GREY. { 1907.
Sept. 2nd.
" 10th.

Contract—Public interest—Illegality—Matrimonial agents.

Contracts made with a matrimonial agent for the payment of a commission or reward upon the completion of a marriage brought about by his agency will not be enforced, being prejudicial to the public welfare.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg in an action brought by appellant against respondent to recover fees on certain contracts.

Appellant (Thos. H. King) appeared in person; Mr. Close was for respondent, Clement Gray, who is a chemist, of Wynberg.

Mr. Close, at the outset, pointed out that in the Court below appellant sued the present respondent and Mrs. Gray (nee Hunter) for sums of £10 and £12 2s., alleged to be due to him in connection with the marriage of the respondents. Appellant said that he was the editor of the "Matrimonial Post," and he claimed that it was owing to his services in introducing the parties that the respondents were married. The parties were sued separately in the Court below. They were married out of community of property. The Magistrate found that marriage brokerage contracts were illegal, and dismissed both cases. The plaintiff then noted an appeal as against Clement Gray, and paid the noting fee, and gave notice on that occasion to Mr. Gray. Since then, however, he had sent notice to Mrs. Gray that he was appealing in her case also, and that the matter would be set down for today. Counsel submitted that, so far as Mrs. Gray's case was concerned, the appeal had gone by default, and the Magistrate's judgment must stand.

Appellant said that he sued both the defendants in one case, and it was his intention to appeal so far as the decision affected both the defendants.

Mr. Close (in answer to the Court) said that he was prepared to appear for both defendants.

De Villiers, C.J., said the appeal would be treated as one in which both defendants were concerned.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, relied upon the case of Hermann v. Charlworth (93 L.T., 284), which was cited, and held such contracts to be against public policy, illegal, and that they could not be enforced.

The appellant proceeded to read letters which he had received from Miss Hunter, in which she finally reduced the prospective husband's salary from £600 to £300, adding that she knew times were bad. The appellant urged that the lady knew very well what she was doing. He then proceeded to read an extract from a Paris newspaper to the effect that a man who did the work he did was a benefactor to the human race. If the Magistrate had said each party should pay its own costs, he would not have appealed.

Mr. Close said the question of law was the one which he proposed to put before the Court. It was curious all the text-books one looked at concurred in showing these marriage brokerage contracts were invalid in law. Recently the Court of Appeal had dealt with the case of Hermann v. Charlworth (93 L.T., 284). The case was considered at some length, and it was held that the contract was illegal, being a marriage brokerage contract. Counsel also referred to Voet (2, 14, 16), Storey on Equity-Jurisprudence (sec. 260), Pollock (6th edition, sec. 879), which reprobated these forms of contracts, as also did Bell's Principles of the Law of Scotland (sections 37-39).

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the pernicious tendency?]

Mr. Close: I suppose, as suggested by Storey, the idea is that marriage brought about by mutual affection arising in the ordinary way has the greatest chance of happiness. Counsel submitted it was one of these cases in the interests of the public that persons should be protected even against themselves. He could conceive of a case of persons being badgered into marriage because certain preliminary expenses had been incurred.

The appellant having been heard in reply,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (September 10th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff, by his summons in the Resident Magistrate's Court of Wynberg, claimed from the first defendant the sum of £10, and from the second defendant the sum of £12 as commission for his services rendered to both of them in giving them introductions with the view to their marrying each other. His scale of fees for such introductions varied with the incomes of the persons to whom his clients were introduced. For introduction to a lady or gentleman with an income not exceeding £50 per annum the fee was only a guinea, but the fee gradually increased up to 50 guineas for introduction to a lady or gentleman with an income of £5,000 per annum. In addition to such fees a sum of £10 was payable in all cases upon marriage, but where the fortune of the lady wedded exceeded £400, a further 2½ per cent. was payable on the excess. It would appear that both the defendants paid the preliminary fees, and that the second defendant, upon receiving the introduction to the first defendant, promised the plaintiff to pay the commission usually charged by him. It is not clear that the first defendant knew that he was liable to pay more than the preliminary fee, and, in the absence of any promise on his part to pay the commission, the summons against him was properly dismissed. As to both defendants, the Magistrate held, on the authority of the English case of Herman v. Charlworth (93 L.T., 284), that the contract was contrary to public policy, and could not be enforced, and he consequently gave judgment for the defendants, with costs on the higher scale.

The case relied upon by the Magistrate was decided by the Court of Appeal as recently as 1906. It had been agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant in that case that the defendant should introduce gentlemen to her with a view to matrimony, and that she should pay him £52, which was to be repaid to her if a marriage did not take place within a specified time. The plaintiff paid the defendant £52, and he brought about some introductions, but before the expiration of the specified time, the plaintiff repudiated the contract and reclaimed payment of the £52, no marriage having then taken place. The County Court Judge held that the contract was illegal, but the Divisional Court held that there was marriage brokerage only when there was a contract to bring about a marriage with a particular person. On appeal, however, the Court of Appeal held that the principle of the law relating to marriage had been violated, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the money which she had paid under the contract. There can be no doubt, therefore, that under the English law a contract such as that now in question would not be enforced, and the question remains whether under our own law the plaintiff is entitled to relief.

It is not quite clear whether under the Roman law before the time of Justinian, a promise to pay a person a reward for bringing about a marriage could be enforced, but judging by a constitution of that Emperor, it would appear that in his time considerable business of that kind must have been carried on. He seems to have considered that a trade of that kind was liable to great abuse, but instead of repressing it altogether he limited the amount which a marriage broker (prozeneta nuptiarum) was entitled to receive for his services when successful to 5 per cent. on the amount of the dos obtained on the marriage. In no case, however, was the amount to exceed ten libra of gold, and if more was paid the marriage broker could be compelled to repay it in addition to forfeiting the sum of ten libra as a penalty (Cod. 5, 1, 6). In his commentary on this constitution, Groenewegen says that it must be confined in its operation to the Italians, among whom it was the duty of fathers to find suitable matches for their daughters, and the fathers were in the habit of employing marriage brokers for that purpose. Voet (23, 1, 1) briefly mentions the terms of the constitution without expressing any opinion as to whether it held good in the Netherlands. In another passage he states that agreements interfering with the liberty of marriage are invalid, as for instance, where two persons mutually agree that whichever of the two first enters into a marriage shall pay to the other a certain amount of money. This passage shows that in his time questions affecting marriage were regarded as matters of public right, and that any interference with the freedom of marriage was treated as an injury to the public. The principle is well established in our law that the Court should not enforce agreements which are contrary to public policy or prejudicial to the public welfare (see Voet, 2, 14, 16). Agreements, for instance, in general restraint of trade will not be enforced, because they are opposed to the public policy, which requires that the freedom of legitimate commerce shall not be unduly hampered. Now, at first sight, it would appear as if the practice of employing matrimonial agencies for finding suitable matches rather deserves encouragement, as tending to promote lawful wedlock and legitimate increase of population, and if marriage could be regarded as a contract, and nothing more than a contract, I should see no objection to the employment of brokers to bring about engagements, or to give introductions with a view to such engagements. But over and above the contract of marriage is the status which the contract confers on those who have entered into it. That status is a matter of important public concern, involving as it does the relations of the parties, not only to each other, but towards the offspring of the marriage, and even towards the State. So important is the maintenance of that status considered by the law that the parties themselves cannot by agreement put an end to it. In bringing about an ordinary contract between two parties, a broker has only to consider the advantage of the one who employs him, and if unsuitable or ill-advised contracts are thus made, it is generally the parties alone who suffer, and it is competent for them to agree upon annulling such contracts. If the broker is the means of bringing about an ill-assorted marriage, the act is irrevocable unless the State intervenes, and by means of a judicial decree puts an end to the contract and its consequent status on special grounds allowed by law. By making the possession of wealth the only consideration, the broker would naturally lose sight of the still more important matter of mutual regard and affection, which are so essential to the peace and happiness of family life. Then there is the temptation for the broker to use illegitimate means to attain his end. His sole object is to bring about a match, and earn his commission. Few people would care to confess that they owe their marriage to the intervention of a matrimonial agency, and the consequence is that even if a person were entrapped into an ill-advised marriage by the most glaring falsehoods on the part of the agent, his mouth would generally be kept closed as to the real cause of his misfortune. The recognition of contracts such as that now in question would tend to expose the guardians of wealthy wards to great temptation at the hands of unscrupulous matrimonial agents, and would, in my opinion, prove generally prejudicial to the public welfare. For these reasons I am of opinion that the Court below rightly refused to enforce the contract, and that the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

} Sept. 3rd.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., moved for the admission of Horace F. A. Yeld as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Aliwal North.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

SHASKOLSKY V. FISHER.

This was an application for judgment upon an unsatisfied judgment of the R.M.'s Court at Wynberg for £10 11s. 6d. and £2 2s. 4d., taxed costs.

Mr. Wallach (for plaintiff) said that since the case was last before the Court he had ascertained that the defendant had paid £2 10s. to plaintiff's former attorney. Defendant had now agreed to pay 10s. a month.

Defendant said that he had agreed to pay 10s. a month. The amount claimed now was correct.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court had already refused the application for a decree of civil imprisonment.

Mr. Wallach said that if the order were now made by consent it would no doubt save future proceedings.

Judgment was given for plaintiff for £10 3s. 10d., with costs, no further proceedings by way of execution or otherwise to take place against the defendant if he shall pay 10s. per month, beginning with the 1st October, until the debt and costs have been paid.

LOUW V. WESSELS.

Mr. Marais moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,200, with interest, and for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MATHEW V. EXECUTRIX ESTATE YULE.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence upon certain mortgage bonds for £350 and £1,000, with interest, less £163 2s. 6d. paid on account, bonds due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted, subject to production of executor's appointment.

SUBERSKY V. FRIEDGOOD.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the R.M.'s Court, Cape Town, for £20, with interest, and £1 14s. 1d., taxed costs.

De Villiers, C.J., said that a letter had been received from the defendant denying that he had had any previous knowledge of the matter until he received the summons in the present case. He also denied indebtedness.

Mr. Toms said he could not understand that, as there was a return of nulla bona to the writ in the Resident Magistrate's Court.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the defendant was at present at Kimberley, and he denied that he had been served with the summons in the Resident Magistrate's Court.

Order granted.

MORUM BROS. V. HERSELMAN.

Mr. P. T. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £274 8s. 6d., with interest from May 31, 1907, and costs.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLI.

ESTATE LLOYD V. JACOBS AND MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. OF NEW YORK.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., moved for judgment against the second defendants under rule 319, in default of plea, for payment of £1,000, proceeds of a certain life insurance policy. Defendants did not appear, but had filed an affidavit, in which they intimated that they were perfectly willing to pay the amount of the policy so long as they themselves were protected. The policy had been lost, and there was no indication as to its whereabouts.

Mr. Benjamin said it was impossible for the executors to provide security as required by the company.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the company would be protected by Act 13, 1891 (section 27).

Mr. Benjamin said that the section had been referred to in the correspondence.

De Villiers, C.J., asked if the company were prepared to pay if the Court granted a rule nisi.

Mr. Benjamin: That is so.

Rule granted, calling upon all persons concerned to show cause on September 17 why the second defendants shall not pay to the plaintiffs the amount due under the policy in question, rule to be published once in two Cape Town newspapers.

WIENER AND CO, LTD. V. MOHOWSKY.

Mr. Payne moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £101 8s. for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.
Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

WILKINSON V. WILKINSON. { 1907.
Sept. 3rd.

Mr. Sutton moved on the petition of Katrina Hendrina Wilkinson, late of district Maclear, to make absolute a certain rule calling upon petitioner's husband, Wilhelm J. Wilkinson, also of district Maclear, to show cause why he should not pay to her attorneys in Cape Town a sum of £50, to enable her to institute an action against him for divorce on the ground of his alleged adultery. Counsel explained that when the matter was called on Friday last, his learned friend, Mr. De Villiers, said he had been instructed to oppose on behalf of respondent, but he had not received full instructions, and he then applied for a postponement, which was granted. It now appeared that there had been a misunderstanding. Mrs. Wilkinson had removed to the village of Elliot, and she had heard that her husband intended to dispose of the property—the parties were married in community—and she desired to interdict him from doing so. An urgent telegram was sent to Cape Town, but the wording was somewhat vague, and it was read as an instruction from respondent to oppose the rule. Respondent, as a matter of fact, did not appear to show cause against the rule being made final. Counsel said that he had also to apply for an interdict restraining defendant from disposing of the joint property, pending the action. An auction sale had been advertised to take place to-day, and it was important that applicant's rights should be protected.

Rule nisi made absolute, costs to be costs in the cause. The Court also granted a further rule calling upon defendant to show cause on the 24th September why he should not be interdicted from parting with more than one half of the joint property of plaintiff and defendant pending action against him for divorce, and calling upon F. C. A. Pote, or any other auctioneer appointed by defendant, to show cause on the same day why he should not be interdicted from parting with more than half the proceeds of any property sold by him pending such action as aforesaid, rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime, with leave to telegraph the order.

ESTATE DE KLERK V. LOMBARD.

This was an application by the executors testamentary in the estate of the late Willem A. C. de Klerk, division of Somerset East, for confirmation of the sale of certain one-tenth share in each of three properties in the division of Albany.

It appeared that the will prohibited the sale of the property to a stranger as long as the legatees were prepared to give an equal price. The farms in which the estate held certain shares had been offered in entirety, as it was thought a better price could thus be realised than by offering the undivided shares merely. An offer of £11,050 had been received, so that the amount which would accrue to the estate would be £1,105. There were 34 legatees interested under the will, and consents to the sale of the shares of the properties had been obtained from all except four.

Mr. De Villiers was for applicants; Mr. H. S. van Zyl was for respondent, M. J. Lombard, one of the legatees under the will.

Mr. De Villiers said that the ground had been offered to the non-consenting heirs at the price which had been offered, but none was prepared to take it over at that figure.

De Villiers, C.J., asked Mr. Van Zyl on what ground his client objected to the sale?

Mr. Van Zyl said that they submitted that the condition was one that the executors could not take advantage of, but only the legatees could avail themselves of. They said that the survivor had no right to sell. They also said that the heirs could only sell in case one of them was not prepared to give the price offered by a stranger. By the way in which these shares in the farms had been offered, a higher price had been obtained than would have been the case had the estate's undivided shares been offered as such.

De Villiers, C.J., said he must consider whether an offer was made before the petition was presented, and his opinion was that there was not such an offer before the presentation of the petition, as to amount to a compliance with the codicil, which required that there should not be a question of asking, but a definite proposal. He considered the objection fatal that the time had not arrived yet at which any legatee could be called upon to decide whether he would purchase a share or not. The application would be refused. The respondents took up the attitude which seemed to him in some way to be an unreasonable one, but they had got the law on their side, and they were entitled to raise the objection. He considered the petition a perfectly bona fide one, and the costs of the petition would come out of the estate.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., Lt.D.).]

SMITH V. IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE. { 1907.
 { Sept. 4th.

Personal injury — Negligence — Damages.

The plaintiff, while in the service of the defendants as an agricultural labourer, was injured while assisting to work a steam threshing machine. The machine was in the same condition in which it had been supplied by the manufacturers, except that some extra precautions had been taken to prevent anything from falling into the drum. The injury was caused by the plaintiff slipping and his leg coming into the drum, but it was proved that every precaution had been taken to prevent an accident of that kind.

Held, that the defendants were not liable in damages.

This was an action brought by Hendrik Smith in forma pauperis against his late employers, the Imperial Cold Storage Co., to recover a sum of £2,000 damages for the loss of a leg which had to be amputated through an accident plaintiff met with on defendant's farm while engaged in threshing operations.

Plaintiff's declaration stated that he was in the employ of the defendant company from about the middle of December, 1906, on their farm Bonne Esperance, Tulbagh district. He was not employed for any definite work, but as an all-round handy-man. Whilst engaged on a certain threshing machine, without any fault, neglect, or negligence on the plaintiff's part, and by reason of the carelessness of the defendants or their duly authorised servants, was injured. The plaintiff, together with Herman Robinson and Klaas Stuurman, were engaged in feeding the machine as it was impossible for one man to be continuously in the feeding box, since a great deal had to be done at this part of the machine. Whilst Robinson was in the feeding box, something or other went wrong with the drum of the machine, and the engineer was obliged to stop it from working to enable him to ascertain the cause and to put it into good working order. It was the plaintiff's turn to get into the feeding box, and while proceeding thither, he slipped on certain oats that were lying about on the top of the machine, and thus got into the drum, which as a result caused the injury sustained. The drum of such machine is practically always covered by a lid, but the machine used on this occasion by the defendant company was without a lid, and had been without a lid for the past two years.

The defendant company denied that there was any carelessness, neglect, or omission on their part or on the part of their agents in not providing a lid or other protection to cover the drum, and deny it was their duty to provide any such covering. They do not admit that plaintiff has suffered loss or damage in the said sum, and they deny that they are liable for any sum.

Dr. Greer (with Mr. Thoms) was for plaintiff, and Mr. Buchanan, K.C. (with Mr. Lourens), was for the defendants.

Hendrik Smith, the plaintiff, stated that in December last he entered the employment of the defendant company. He was a general labourer employed on the company's farm in the Tulbagh district. On December 18 he assisted in threshing. Three men were attending to the machine. His particular work was to cut the bands of the sheaves, but he was told by the foreman to make himself generally handy.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The sole issue is whether there is negligence on the part of the defendant.]

Dr. Greer: Yes, my lord; the defendant does not allege any fault upon plaintiff's part.

[De Villiers, C.J.: So it is simply a question of engineering?]

Dr. Greer: That is so.

Witness (continuing) explained that he slipped and fell into the drum of the machine, which was unprotected. In reply to his lordship, he said he could not tell how he came to slip.

[De Villiers, C.J.: As we understand your case, Mr. Greer, you contend that this drum should have been protected?—Yes, my lord.

Witness stated that after his accident he was conveyed to the Somerset Hospital, where his leg was amputated. His wages with the defendant company were 2s. per day, rations, and wine.

(Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: How did you manage to get your foot in the drum?)

Witness: I don't know.

You had been feeding the machine before it stopped?—No; Hermanus Robinson.

Witness (continuing) said he did not know that Mr. De Villiers had paid all his expenses while in hospital, or that his father had told him that he could go back to the farm and work.

Klass Stuurman, a fellow-labourer with plaintiff, described certain parts of the threshing machine. The drum was always exposed—there was no lid. He saw Smith slip and fall, but he was not sure why he slipped.

John Christian Simpson said he lived at Maraisburg, and had 28 years' experience of threshing machines. The particular machine responsible for the accident was, he believed, a Ransome. In his personal experience he made it an invariable custom to keep a covering over the drum, not simply to prevent men falling into it, but to prevent foreign objects like stones or iron or rakes from getting into the drum. A feeder on a threshing machine always closes the lid on the drum before getting out of his box.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Ransome's machines are very well known—in fact, he used four of them himself.

Dr. Greer closed his case.

Benjamin Geo. S. Plumley said he had considerable experience of threshing machines. He was not present when the accident occurred. He had seen machines without protection for their drums. He had seen a Marshall and a Rustin and a Proctor's machine without the protecting drum lids.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: He had seen machines without a lid, and even a hinged feeding board which could cover the drum.

Witness Simpson, recalled, in reply to his lordship, said his evidence amounted to this, that in his experience he had never seen a machine without a cover or an adjustable feeding board.

Counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: One must feel very great sympathy with the plaintiff in the accident which cost him his leg, and if it were possible to give him relief consistent with the provisions of the law, I should only be too glad to do so, more especially seeing that he does not come under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Under that Act, agricultural labourers are expressly excluded. If plaintiff had been in other employment, he would maybe have been entitled to relief, but being engaged in agriculture the law has exempted him from the operations of the Act. Now, the plaintiff can only succeed in the present action if he can satisfy the Court that the accident happened through negligence. It appears that the machine was one of Ransome and Sams, of which a model has been put in. The machine was used in the same condition as supplied by the manufacturers, with the exception that the ledge above the drum was slightly raised, which indeed added to the protection of any person employed; it certainly ly did not add to the danger. The evidence seems to prove that no matter how perfect a machine may be, when that machine is actually at work there is danger, and, in fact, you cannot work it without danger. Other machines, it seems, are provided with a lid, the object of the lid being to prevent articles or persons falling in while the machine is not in actual working order. The danger, however, would still exist when the machine was actually at work. It appears in the present case that the machine had begun to work, but the drum had not got sufficient speed upon it. The plaintiff slipped in some extraordinary manner; how that happened seemed to him inexplicable, and then his foot caught in the drum. An accident of this sort could never have been contemplated by the manufacturers or the defendant company. It could never have taken place when the drum was not working. The evidence simply shows that there is no machine yet invented without an element of danger. I consider, therefore, that the defendants were not guilty of any negligence. They had provided a complete machine, and they had given protection, and when the unfortunate accident happened it could not have been provided against. Moreover, it would have depended upon the plaintiff himself whether he would have put the lid on the drum or not. Under the circumstances, I do not think there was any negligence on the part of the defendants. Judgment will therefore be for the defendants. There will be no order as regards costs.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, F.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BOOTH V. BOOTH.

Sept. 5th.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan applied on behalf of Annie Sophia Booth for an order to sue her husband by edictal citation in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights. Petitioner alleged cruelty and desertion.

The application was granted.

PARSONS V. PARSONS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan applied on behalf of Mary Ellen Parsons for an order allowing her to sue her husband, Walter Hillier Parsons, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights by reason of malicious desertion, and, failing this, for a decree of divorce. Petitioner asked the Court to give direction as to the mode of serving the citation and all other necessary processes.

Application granted. Service to be made by registered letter addressed to defendant in England. Citation to be returned by November 14.

Ex parte EXECUTOR ESTATE WHITLOCK.

Mr. P. Lewis applied on behalf of Roelof Andries Jansen, secretary of the Graaff-Reinet Board of Executors, in his capacity as executor testamentary of the estate of the late Jas. Whitlock, for an order authorising him to mortgage the properties in the estate for £650, and to dispose of the second-mentioned property in the petition when a fair price can be obtained for it, and use the proceeds in paying off a portion of the said bond, and that the cost of this application, together with the cost of raising the loan and passing the bond, may be paid out of the said estate.

Application granted as prayed.

Ex parte LIQUIDATOR OF ORANGE RIVER IRRIGATION CO.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., applied on behalf of Mr. G. W. Steytler, as liquidator of the Orange River Irrigation Co., in liquidation, for an order confirming the sale of certain property, and authority to distribute the proceeds of the sale in legal order of preference.

Application granted.

BUTLER V. BUTLER.

Mr. H. S. Van Zyl applied on behalf of Elizabeth Amelia Butler, born Allison, married without community of property, to Chas. Arthur Butler, for an order authorising and directing the Registrar of Deeds at Cape Town to amend an ante-nuptial contract, which described her therein as Elizabeth Amelia Allison instead of Elizabeth Allison. Mr. Van Zyl informed the Court that petitioner was not present, but she would be present on the 10th.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why is he not here?]

Mr. Van Zyl: She was not aware that the Court would hear the petition today.

Petition ordered to stand over sine die.

Ex parte ESTATE OOSTHUISEN.

This was a petition by Elizabeth Gertrude Adriaan Oosthuisen, widow of Jacobus Frederick Oosthuisen, and her major children. By the mutual will and testament of the said Jacobus Frederick Oosthuisen and his spouse, it appeared that the farm Bergfontein shall be sold, which must be divided amongst the eight children now living. Petitioners stated that the farm was of great value, and enabled the petitioner first mentioned to suitably maintain and educate the minor children, whereas, if sold, petitioners would, of necessity, have to purchase another farm, which might not be desirable for them. Petitioners therefore prayed that the Court would grant an order authorising that the landed property belonging to the estates of the late J. P. Oosthuisen and his predeceased, and surviving spouses, may be retained, and not sold by auction, as directed in the wills, and that they may be transferred to the said heirs, for which purpose the executrix—the petitioner first mentioned—be authorised to sign all necessary papers, and that the costs of the application be brought up against the estate.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The surviving spouse is still living.]

Mr. Lourens (for petitioners): Yes, my lord.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is quite clear that the provision was intended for the survivor and the benefit of the eight children of the testator. After the death of the survivor, provision was made that the property was to be sold, and I take it that the testator must have intended the sale for the purpose of paying any debts, and it was in the interest of the children that the debts should be paid. It would be quite competent for the children to buy the property, and in that case they would be fulfilling the terms of the will. To all intents and purposes, by remaining on the land, they become purchasers, and I take it that the intention of the testator is carried out by leaving them in possession of the property. I think that the arrangement should be carried out, instead of allowing strangers to get the property.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte THE MCGREGOR MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., applied on behalf of the Mayor of the Municipality of McGregor, in the division of Robert son, for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register the remainder of the farm Over de Berg, situate in the division of Robertson, and in extent 1,811 morgen, as the property of the Municipality of McGregor, on the petition of Adriaan de Waal van Reenen, in his capacity as Mayor of McGregor. The petition set out that on October 15, 1838, the following landed property was granted to Alewyn Petrus Smit and Johannes Jacobus Smit, namely, certain quitrent land, situate in the division of Worcester, being the place called Over de Berg, comprising 2,720 morgen. On March 21 a portion of the farm, 2,480 morgen, was transferred to one Jacobus Stephanus Naude. In 1865 Naude sub-divided the farm into several portions that were sold and transferred by him, leaving the remainder of 1,811 morgen upon which was laid out the village of Lady Grey, now called McGregor. Portions were disposed of and sold to several purchasers, and a portion was left for commonage for the inhabitants of the village of Lady Grey, now called McGregor. Since 1865 the inhabitants of the village have used the remainder of the farm as commonage before the municipality was the municipality of McGregor. Jacobus Naude is deceased, his estate was finally wound up by the Master of the Supreme Court, and is now unrepresented. The remainder of the farm still stands registered in the name of Stephanus Jacobus Naude.

De Villiers, C.J.: There appears to be a prima facie case for granting the rule, as there was an almost similar case in that of De Villiersdorp. The Court will therefore grant the rule in terms of the Act of 1881. The rule must be twice published in English and twice in Dutch in one or more newspapers circulating in McGregor.

BOFFEY V. BOFFEY.

This was an application by Cissie Johnson Lois Lucy Boffey for an order compelling her husband, Henry Sutton Boffey, to pay over to applicant a sum of £100 on account of legal expenses in the action for divorce instituted by her; £50 to provide for her maintenance during the period that must elapse prior to the hearing of the action, and £30 to discharge certain obligations incurred by her and costs of the motion.

Applicant stated she was married to the said Henry Sutton Boffey at Middleton-square, Islington, London, on August 21, 1902. Respondent was at that time a hotel proprietor in Salt River, and came to England for the purpose of marrying her. The parties arrived in Cape Colony and stayed for some time at the Locomotive Hotel, Salt River, of which the respondent was proprietor in partnership with his brother. Thereafter they moved to the Montpelier Hotel, Woodstock, and remained there till they removed to Wynberg early in the year 1904. There was no ante-nuptial contract or marriage settlement.

Mr. Struben appeared for applicant, and Mr. Upington for respondent.

Applicant stated that she and respondent lived very happily until about December, 1906, when the latter became very friendly with a barmaid employed at the Railway Hotel, Wynberg, which together with the Royal Hotel acquired by respondent in 1906, was carried on by the parties. Applicant objected to her husband's attentions to the barmaid; thereafter she alleges she saw a change in his manner towards her. He became extremely unkind, and she began to suspect that his relations with the barmaid were improper. She alleges that she can provide abundant evidence of misconduct, and as corroboration she was filing an affidavit by one Phyllis Jacobs on the subject. There was also the evidence of applicant's sister and other persons. Applicant further stated that besides being the owner of the Royal and Railway Hotels, Wynberg, he is the registered owner of valuable property in Cape Town and Sea Point. Respondent offered £30, but this applicant considers quite inadequate having regard to the fact that he is evidently opposing the divorce, which will make the action a most expensive affair.

Respondent stated that he only came to this colony as a consequence of ill-health, and he had told applicant that as soon as he could afford it, he would give up business here and return to England. He had not adopted the Colony at his marriage as his domicile, nor had he done so at the present time. He denied that he was particularly friendly with the barmaid mentioned. She was an old servant, and that he had great respect for her. He denied having at any time used violence towards applicant, save in absolute self-defence, when under the influence of extreme temper she scratched him severely. Respondent further states that his wife evinced an uncontrollable aversion to his attending Masonic or similar functions, and it was usually on these occasions that trouble arose. He denies that he was ever the registered owner of the properties of the Royal or Railway Hotel. He was merely the tenant of each, and was now a monthly tenant of the Royal Hotel. The properties in the name of his brother and himself in Cape Town if sold would not pay the bonds upon them. The girl Phyllis Jacobs had made another affidavit repudiating the first she signed implicating respondent and the barmaid. She signed the first affidavit simply through a desire to do the latter an injury.

De Villiers, C.J.: The question must depend very much upon the condition of life in which the parties lived, and also whether they were married in community of property. As to the question whether they were married in community of property, I will not give a definite opinion at this stage, but to all intents and purposes respondent seems to have made this country his domicile even before he married, and if he married his wife so as to have domicile here, then the marriage is to be considered as if made in the Colony. Respondent will have to pay £100 towards the cost of action as applied for. There will be no order as to alimony, and costs will be costs in the cause.

HOFFMAN V. HOFFMAN.

Mr. R. Marais applied on behalf of Johanna Maria Hoffman for an order to sue in forma pauperis her said husband, Andrew Francis Hoffman, for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, and in default of compliance therewith, for a decree of divorce, custody of the minor child of the marriage, as well as the maintenance of the latter. It appeared that the petitioner was married in Cape Town, and there was one child of the marriage. Petitioner alleged ill-treatment and that her husband took no steps whatsoever nor provided funds to enable her to return to him.

The respondent, in the course of correspondence, stated that he did not oppose the applicant's application for leave to sue in forma pauperis. He could not, he added, contribute anything towards the costs of the action, as he was not in a position to do so.

The applicant, called at the request of the Chief Justice, said that her husband was a cabinetmaker, but at present he was doing nothing. The respondent was living with his father.

[De Villiers, C.J.: By his letters it would appear he is willing to take you back?—He acknowledged he had nothing, and was unable to take me back.

[You are prepared to certify?]

Mr. Marais: Yes.

De Villiers, C.J.: Upon that certificate the Court will grant a rule calling on the respondent to show cause by Tuesday week why plaintiff should not be allowed to sue defendant in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with custody of the child of the marriage.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. M. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

REX V. VAN WYK. { 1907.

Magistrate's finding on credibility of witness overruled—Inadmissible evidence.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Ceres, who had convicted appellant, a domestic servant, of the theft of some whisky and brandy, the property of her master, Charles Steytler, and had sentenced her to one week's imprisonment.

The appeal was brought on the following grounds: (1) That the owner of the goods alleged to have been stolen did not prosecute; and (2) that the evidence for the prosecution as to the alleged theft is insufficient to convict, inasmuch as the witness A. N. Lottering, if the theft had been committed, was an accomplice, and she was contradicted on material points by the other two witnesses for the Crown, and, further, that she admitted that she was actuated by spite in the matter.

Mr. enjamin, K.C., was for applicant, Johanna van Wyk; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts:

De Villiers, C.J.: The whole story told by the witness Lottering was so improbable that it would have been better to have acquitted the accused. Mrs. Steytler's evidence does not carry the matter much further. She gives statements as to some other occasions which, I am afraid, may have had some effect upon the Magistrate. A good deal of her evidence was not admissible. The whole evidence is so weak and so unconvincing that I consider the Magistrate ought not to have convicted, and the appeal will be allowed and the conviction quashed.

REX V. GOUS.

Wild Ostriches Acts—Resident Magistrate's jurisdiction.

Where a person is tried for a contravention of Sec. 1 of Act 30 of 1890 before a Resident Magistrate under his ordinary jurisdiction, the fine imposed cannot legally exceed £10.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Kenhardt, who had convicted appellant of contravening section 1 of Act 30, 1890, as promulgated by Proclamation No. 145, 1907, and sentenced him to a fine of £15, or two months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

From the record it appeared that Johannes Gous and Isaac Gous had been charged with having, on the 30th April last, in the district of Kenhardt, wrongfully and unlawfully killed, pursued, or hunted certain wild ostriches, a close or fence season being then in force. Accused both pleaded not guilty. Johannea Gous was found not guilty, but Isaac Gous was found guilty.

The Magistrate admitted that he had inflicted a penalty in excess of his powers under the Act, and he reduced the penalty to £10.

Dr. Greer was for appellant, Isaac Gous; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Having heard Dr. Greer in argument, De Villiers, C.J.: In this case it is unnecessary to hear Mr. Nightingale on behalf of the Crown. It is clear that the ostriches were killed on Government ground, and the question is whether there was sufficient evidence before the Magistrate to justify him in coming to the conclusion that it was Isaac Gous, the appellant, who shot the birds. Upon that point we have the evidence of Cornelius, who was present. He was told to hide himself behind a bush, and he saw the accused kill these ostriches. And his evidence is corroborated by the evidence of Blaattjes, who afterwards saw Cornelius and his brother coming back, and Cornelius and Isaac Gous each carrying a bag with ostrich legs in it, and the other Gous carrying a bag with feathers. Then the evidence is further corroborated by the evidence of the police. They saw marks at the place where cartridges had been recently fired, and lying at the place where they would be if the evidence of Cornelius is correct. It was suggested that Cornelius might have taken the gun and killed the ostriches, but that is unlikely. In my opinion the Magistrate was justified in convicting the accused. Then it was pointed out that under the Act there was no special jurisdiction, and that it was limited to the ordinary jurisdiction of the Magistrate which confines him to a fine of £10. He has imposed a fine of £15, and there must, therefore, be a reduction of the fine from £15 to £10. I must confess that I greatly regret that there is no provision in the Act for imposing a heavier fine than has been imposed in the present case. Here with interest at 8 per cent. from October 7, 1905; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated and attached, ad fundandam jurisdictionem, to be declared executable, and for leave to attach and pay over to the trustee the rents from the property.

Order granted.

DUNELL, EBDEN AND CO. V. FITZ-GERALD.

Mr. P. T. Lewis moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

MARCUSON AND CO. V. MAZOUZ.

Mr. Roux moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

GRAAFF V. SHATZKY.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

STONE V. MAREE.

Mr. Pohl moved for provisional sentence on certain promissory notes for £4 6s. 6d., £6, £8, and £1 12s., and costs.

Order granted.

INSOLVENT ESTATE GEARD V. WARD.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £90, with interest from June 13, 1907.

Order granted.

DOUGLAS V. GIBBONS.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £6, with interest from the 22nd May, 1907, and costs.

Order granted.

TRUSTEES DIOCESE OF CAPE TOWN V. REIDEL.

Mr. De Waal moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ESTATE HOPKINS V. COOMBBE.

Mr. H. G. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on certain five mortgage bonds for £3,000, £1,500, £1,400, £1,100, and £1,500, with interest, bonds due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

THE LAND CO., LTD. V. CROTE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a notarial mortgage bond for £150, and for £67 10s., less £25 paid on account, being interest due; counsel also applied for a lease specially pledged in the bond to be declared executable. Counsel said that defendant had failed to pay certain instalments which had fallen due this month.

Defendant produced certain receipts, and said that she had been told by Mr. Arderne that it would be all right if she did not pay the instalments at present, as long as she paid the interest. She was willing to pay the interest, and when things got better she would pay the instalments. She had paid off £250 in the way of instalments.

The matter was ordered to stand over, but

At a later stage judgment was granted as prayed.

PARKER V. HOFFMAN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £60, with interest from the 25th August, 1904, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

VAN NIEKERK BROS. V. } 1907.
BUCKLAND. } Sept. 10th.

Mr. Roux moved, under Rule 330a, for leave to sign judgment against the respondent for not proceeding with his action within the time fixed by the Rules of Court.

Order granted.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. NEL.

Mr. Howel Jones, K.C., moved for judgment for £7 2s., being the amount of a fine at the rate of 1s. per diem for the period between the 14th August, 1906, and the 2nd January, 1907, for failure to pass mortgage bonds in terms of section 4 of Act 40, 1885.

Order granted.

KRAMER V. VAN AAS.

Mr. H. G. Lewis moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £170 17s. 8d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered, etc., with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

CONNOLLY, LTD. V. VAN DER MERWE.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under Rule 329d for an account of goods received and sold by defendant for plaintiff, debate and payment of moneys found to be due.

Order granted, account to be filed within one month.

MENDELSSOHN V. MENDELSSOHN.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for judgment under rule 329d for an account, debate, and payment of moneys found to be due.

Order granted, account to be filed within a month.

CONRADIE V. CONRADIE AND CONRADIE.

Mr. Roux was for the applicant, and Mr. De Waal appeared as curator ad litem. The application was to have the respondents declared of unsound mind, and for the appointment of a curator bonis. Counsel for the applicant read an affidavit from a medical man to the effect that the respondents were imbeciles, and incapable of managing their own affairs. Mr. De Waal said he had seen both respondents, and found them physically and mentally weak. Both confessed to their inability to do any business.

Mr. Roux suggested the appointment of Jacobus Nicholas Conradie as curator to the respondents' person and property, failing him, the petitioner. The former stipulated he should have the legacies belonging to the respondents at once.

Application granted. Johannes S. Conradi appointed curator to person and property, with power to maintain the respondents out of the interest, and if that is insufficient, then out of part of the capital, costs to come out of the lunatic's estate; yearly accounts to be filed with the Master of the Supreme Court.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Homes applied for the rehabilitation of Christian Fredrick Klinck. The estate was sequestrated in June, 1902. The trustee's report contained nothing unfavourable.

Granted.

Mr. Marais applied for the rehabilitation of Barend Jacobus Lampbrecht, under 117 section of the Ordinance. The estate was placed under sequestration in July, 1904. Three-fifths of the creditors in number and value agreed to the application. There was an affidavit of full and fair surrender. The report of the trustees contained nothing unfavourable.

Granted.

Mr. Pohl applied for the discharge of Willem Gerhardus Voges from insolvency. There was an affidavit of full and fair surrender, and there was nothing unfavourable in the Master's report.

Granted.

Mr. Roux applied for the discharge of Rittenberg and Company, under the 117th section of the Insolvent Ordinance. The Master certified that all the creditors had given their consent.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

In re PARSONS. { 1907.
{ Sept. 10th.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for leave to alter the return day of the citation in this matter from November 14 until November 1, which would leave 50 clear days before the citation was returnable here. The plaintiff was a very poor person suing for restitution of conjugal rights, and she had had no maintenance from her husband for some time, and she was eager to have the matter settled as soon as possible.

Application granted.

PEREGRINO V. ALEXANDER

Mr. P. S. T. Jones, for the applicant, moved for an order calling on the respondent to pay the costs of a previous and this application. In the former case the respondent was the applicant, and he obtained a rule nisi in an ex parte application restraining the respondent from parting with a certain cession. The rule was duly opposed, but after several postponements the Court made the rule absolute, and ordered the costs to stand over. The present respondent stated that he intended forthwith to institute an action to recover his share in the cession, but he had not taken any further proceedings.

The respondent was ordered to pay the costs of the application made by him, and subsequent proceedings connected therewith.

Ex parte ESTATE BOTHA.

Mr. Louwrens moved for leave to the executor testamentary to mortgage certain property in the division of Oudtshoorn in which minors are interested.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte ESTATE MULDER.

Mr. Payne moved for an order confirming certain settlements.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte BURGER.

Mr. Howes moved for the appointment of a temporary curator bonis to represent the estate of petitioner's husband, Johannes Stephanus Burger, of Clanwilliam, who had been removed to the Valkenberg Asylum. Counsel quoted section 15, sub-section 3, of the Act, and cited ex parte J. J. de Villiers (14 C.T.R., 386). It was not desired to have the respondent declared a lunatic. There was a possibility of his recovery within three or six months.

De Villiers, (C.J.), said that he did not see how he could grant power to the curator to institute and defend actions on the present application. The curator would be given powers to carry through negotiations which the respondent himself had begun, and also to pass transfer of the property and receive moneys. To that extent, powers would be granted to the curator. Willem Petrus Burger would be appointed curator.

Ex parte ESTATE MARSH.

Mr. Inchbold moved on the petition of the executor testamentary for an order authorising the cancellation of a certain mortgage bond for £100, hypothecating property near Cape Town. The bond had been lost. All the mortgagees were dead, but certain parties had offered to pay the balance due upon the bond on petitioner obtaining cancellation. Counsel cited Ex parte Snell (7 C.T.R., 344).

Rule granted, calling upon all persons concerned to show cause on the first day of next term why an order shall not be made as prayed, rule to be published once in two Cape Town newspapers; if no objection is raised, rule to be made absolute without further application.

Ex parte NUGENT.

Mr. Howes moved for the appointment of a provisional curator bonis to petitioner's husband, Dr. Wilson M. Nugent, lately practising at Vryburg, pending proceedings to inquire into the respondent's state of mind. Dr. Nugent was confined to the Graham's Town Asylum.

Order granted, appointing Reginald de Beer as provisional curator bonis with powers prayed, and appointing the Resident Magistrate of Graham's Town to be curator ad litem, for the purpose of action to have defendant declared of unsound mind, with leave to give evidence on affidavit, summons to be returnable on the first day of next term.

ALBERTYN V. MOUNTAIN VIEW STONE QUARRY AND BRICKFIELD CO., LTD.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for a winding-up order against the respondent company, carrying on business in Cape Town. The company owed the estate of petitioner's late husband £3,500, by virtue of a mortgage bond, and also interest. The company's liabilities exceeded its assets by about £1,350.

Winding-up order granted, and Etto Gerhardus von Bonde appointed liquidator, with the powers mentioned in the 149th section of the Companies Act.

Ex parte WALKERS.

Mr. Louwrens moved for an order confirming sale of certain property in Oudtshoorn made by petitioner on behalf of his minor sons.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte KARSTENS.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis for judicial separation on the ground of his persistent cruelty.

Petitioner appeared, and was examined as to means.

Subject to counsel's certificate, rule nisi to issue, returnable on the first day of next term.

Ex parte BOOTH.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights. Petitioner's husband deserted her, and went to Johannesburg, and for some time past had had no communication with her. His whereabouts were unknown.

Petitioner appeared, and was examined as to means.

Rule nisi granted, returnable on the 1st November, personal service to be effected, failing which one publication in the "Star" (Johannesburg), and leave granted to sue defendant by edictal citation, citation returnable by the 1st November.

Ex parte CHRISTIANIE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis for divorce on the ground of adultery. Petitioner had had no tidings of her husband's whereabouts since the early part of August.

Referred to counsel for report, and upon certificate by counsel rule to issue, returnable on the 1st November.

In re SOUTH AFRICAN GENERAL WORKERS' UNION LOCKED-OUT CIGARETTE WORKERS' CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD.

Mr. Roux moved for confirmation of the first report of the official liquidator except as to prayer (b), to which objection had been taken by Mr. A. J. Chiappini.

Report confirmed as prayed, except as to prayer (b).

Ex parte ESTATE HOBSON.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on behalf of the executor testamentary in the estate of Johanna Jane Hobson, for an order authorising the sale and transfer of certain property. There was a consent by the major heirs, and the Master's report was favourable.

Order in terms of the Master's report.

WYKEHAM V. WYKEHAM.

This was an application on behalf of James Wykeham, of Worcester, for leave to sue his adopted daughter, Adeline Emma Blanche Wykeham, by edictal citation, for the return of certain documents and money, and for leave to attach certain property for the purposes of the action.

The petition of the applicant was as follows: Your petitioner resided formerly in the Hope Town District, and came to Worcester in the year 1884. His niece, Adeline Emma Blanche Wykeham, has been residing with him as an adopted daughter for the past 35 years. Your petitioner placed considerable sums of money at fixed deposit in the Standard Bank at Worcester, but of recent years has kept no set of books, the amount of the deposit, however, being about £33,000. This money or the greater part of it was originally deposited in your petitioner's name; afterwards, in consequence of certain dispositions contained in your petitioner's will, which he made after the death of his wife, your petitioner deposited the money in the joint names of himself and his niece, with instructions to the bank that the money was to be payable either to himself or to Adeline Emma Blanche Wykeham. Your petitioner latterly altered the terms of the deposit of the money so left with the bank, and deposited it in the name of his niece. Your petitioner bequeathed the residue of his estate to his niece, including therein the £33,000 so deposited in her name, with the exception, however, of certain legacies of landed property to other relatives. Your petitioner deposited the money in his niece's name in order to enable her to handle the same immediately upon his death, but your petitioner arranged with his niece, and it was clearly understood by her, that though the money was deposited in her name, it remained his full and free property to deal with as he pleased during his lifetime. Your petitioner moreover drew the interest accruing on the deposits, and renewed the same from time to time. Your petitioner kept control of the fixed deposit receipts, which were in his custody, and which he kept in his deeds box in his safe. Your petitioner informed his niece what steps he was taking with regard to the money deposited in the bank, and she agreed thereto, and your petitioner moreover informed her that he would remain entitled to the interest on the deposits, and advised her of the manner in which she was to dispose of the capital in the event of his sudden death. Your petitioner's niece was aware that by his will he had devised a large sum of money in her favour, and your petitioner verbally informed her that it was his wish that she was to reserve to herself an annual income of about £600, and devote the rest of the endowment of a certain college in England, with which proposal she agreed, and promised to carry out your petitioner's wishes. In or about the end of July, 1907, your petitioner's niece suddenly and without informing your petitioner of her intention, left Worcester by train, caught the mail steamer at Cape Town, and departed for England, where your petitioner is informed she resides at present at Woodbridge, Olive-avenue, Clive Vale, Hastings, Sussex. Shortly before your petitioner's niece's departure from Worcester, she administered to your petitioner some medicine, which rendered him unconscious, and on your petitioner refusing to take further doses on account of its nauseousness she forced the medicine on him by saying that his doctor had ordered it. Your petitioner has been informed by his doctor, who attended him shortly thereafter, that he was suffering from the effects of belladonna, and as your petitioner is about 86½ years of age, the administering of a drug of this sort was distinctly dangerous. Before her departure she found his safe had been opened, his deed box removed, and the contents rifled, but he was too exhausted to follow up the matter. Your petitioner

SCHMIDT V. SCHMIDT.

This was an application calling upon respondent to show cause why a further stay of execution should not be granted in an action in which respondent had obtained judgment against applicant for £90 11s. 11d., with costs, and with leave to attach the landed property of applicant.

Respondent had obtained judgment against applicant in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Wynberg, and he afterwards took provisional sentence on this judgment in the Supreme Court, but a stay of execution until the 31st August was granted by the Court to enable defendant (now applicant) to bring an action against the present respondent, against whom, he said, he had a counter claim. Applicant had not instituted his action within the time allowed, his explanation being that the delay was caused by counsel having been too busy to at once draw the declaration, and the fact that the declaration had had to be printed. In the meantime, however, a writ had been issued at the instance of the respondent. Respondent said that the applicant had received certain insurance money, and had been in a position to satisfy the writ.

Mr. Upington was for applicant, Wilhelm Schmidt, a Cape Flats farmer; Mr. Roux was for respondent.

Mr. Roux having been heard in argument.

De Villiers, C.J.: I am afraid that the delay in this case is not so much the applicant's fault as the persons who are employed. I do not think the applicant personally has been guilty of delay. It has been his attorney, and I am loth to punish him, because his attorney has not been quite diligent in the matter, or because his counsel has been so busy that he could not draw the declaration. I shall extend the stay of execution further until the 1st November. Before the 1st November the case must be brought to trial, all preliminaries must be taken now, and it must be set down early in the term for trial, so that the whole thing may be completed before the 1st November. This is the last day that can be allowed, and I trust that every care will be exercised to bring it on for trial in the first part of the term: the interdict will continue, so that applicant cannot part with his property, and costs will be costs in the cause.

REX V. GOUS AND ANOTHER.

Game Preservation Acts (36 of 1886 and 38 of 1891).

A person who allows a companion to use his shoulder as a rest for a gun while illegally shooting game is guilty of contravening Sec. 4 of Act 36 of 1886, as amended by Sec. 1 of Act 38 of 1891.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Kenhardt, who had convicted appellant (Johannes Gous) of contravening section 4 of Act 36, 1886, amended by section 1 of Act 38, 1891, and sentenced him to pay a fine of £25, or to be imprisoned with hard labour for three months.

It appeared that in the Court below Johannes Gous and Izak Gous were charged with having, on the 4th May, and in the district of Kenhardt, pursued, shot, killed, or destroyed certain three gemsbok, without having obtained permits from the Government.

Izak pleaded guilty, and Johannes, who now appealed, pleaded not guilty, but both were found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of £25, or undergo three months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

Mr. Roux was for appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Roux submitted that the conviction was against the weight of evidence, and that certain evidence was admitted which was legally inadmissible. Johannes was but a passive agent, and was therefore not liable to a penalty.

De Villiers, C.J.: Izak Gous, it is clear, was guilty. He was called as a witness, and in his evidence he said Johannes had not killed a gemsbok, but had allowed his shoulder to be used as a rest for the shooting of the gemsbok. It seems to me that a man who stands and allows his shoulder to be used as a rest is just as guilty as the other man who fires the gun, but I do not confine myself to that point, because I think the one is as guilty as the other. The evidence given by Cornelius, which was believed by the Magistrate—the Magistrate believed that not only Johannes became a rest for the rifle, but was an active instrument in pulling the trigger and killing one gemsbok, while Izak must have killed two gemsbok. The Magistrate has dealt very leniently with these men, because he might have fined each of them £25 for each buck which was shot. Now, it is suggested that if a man goes out shooting gemsbok that it is all one act how many he shoots, and that he could only be fined £25. I am wholly unable to take that view. The shooting of each gemsbok is a contravention of the law. It is possible that if a man fired at one gemsbok and hit two, another question might arise, which I do not wish to decide upon now. But if two separate shots are fired at two separate gemsbok, I consider them separate offences, and for each offence the offender is liable to a fine of £25. That being my view of the law, it is clear that both Izak and Johannes were equally guilty, and were properly sentenced at all events to pay a fine of £25 each. The appeal must therefore be dismissed, and the conviction confirmed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSIONS. } 1907.
(Sept. 17th.)

Mr. Roux moved for the admission of Jacobus Edmund Joubert Krige as an attorney and notary.
Application granted, and oaths administered.

Ex parte DONOVAN.

Attorney—Admission in the Transvaal and in Cape Colony—Matriculation certificate of the Cape University—Act 14 of 1899.

D., having been admitted as an attorney of the Supreme Court of the Transvaal, applied for admission as an attorney of the Supreme Court of this Colony. He produced no certificate in terms of Sec. 1 of Act 14 of 1899, but it appeared that the regulations of the Cape University provided that no student could be admitted to the Transvaal law certificate examination unless he had first passed the matriculation examination of the University.

Held, that D. be admitted as prayed.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for the admission of Richard Bartholomew Donovan as an attorney, and asked for leave to the applicant to take the oaths before the Registrar of the High Court of Griqualand. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that the applicant was an attorney of the Transvaal Supreme Court, and had passed the Transvaal law certificate examination.

De Villiers, C.J., said that, according to the Act of 1899, applicant must pass the matriculation examination of the Cape University or some examination which, in the opinion of the Council of the University, was equivalent thereto.

Mr. Buchanan said that he was not aware whether the applicant had passed such an examination.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further inquiries.

Postea (September 18th).

Mr. D. M. Buchanan again mentioned the application of Richard Bartholomew Donovan for admission as an attorney. The matter was before the Court on Tuesday, when it was stated that applicant was an attorney of the Supreme Court of the Transvaal, and the question was raised as to whether he had passed the matriculation examination of the Cape University, or an examination equivalent thereto. Mr. Buchanan now informed the Court that, according to the regulations of the Cape University, admission to the law certificate examination of the Transvaal was a notification that the applicant had passed the matriculation examination. The practice of the Court had been to admit when the law certificates was produced to the Registrar.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have you nothing from the University to the effect that the examination which Donovan has passed is, in the opinion of the Council, equivalent to the matriculation examination?]

Mr. Buchanan said that with the papers was a certificate that the applicant had passed the Transvaal law certificate examination. One of the regulations for that examination in the Transvaal was that no candidate would be admitted to the law certificate examination unless he had passed the matriculation examination of the Cape University, or such other examination as may be declared by the Lieutenant-Governor to be equivalent to that examination.

Do Villiers, C.J., said that the Act contemplated that the Court should be satisfied that the University of the Cape of Good Hope was satisfied. Where was the proof that the University of the Cape of Good Hope was satisfied?

Mr. Buchanan: In the fact of having this certificate of the Transvaal law certificate examination, which is a certificate given by the University of the Cape of Good Hope, and these regulations are the regulations of the Cape University. It will not give a law certificate unless it be satisfied that he has passed the matriculation examination.

De Villiers, C.J., said that under the circumstances the applicant would be admitted, and leave would be granted, as prayed, to take the oaths before the Registrar of the High Court of Griqualand, sitting at Kimberley.

BACKMAN V. SEGALL.

Mr. Long moved, as a matter of urgency, for an award of an umpire to be made a Rule of Court, in terms of the deed of submission. Counsel said that the matter was urgent, inasmuch as the respondent had just been sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and his wife was at present disposing of the goods which were the subject of the umpire's award.

Order granted as prayed.

Mr. Upington moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ESTATE FREISLICH V. DE VILLIERS.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on certain two mortgage bonds for £300 and £200, with interest from the 1st July, 1906, bonds due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MALMESBURY BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. HEYDENRYCH.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, with interest from November, 1906, bond due by reason of notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

EGMERTON PARK ESTATE CO., LTD. V. WILLIAMS.

Mr. P. T. Lewis moved for provisional sentence for £33 and £24, instalments upon two deeds of sale and purchase, with interest from the 20th May, 1907.

Order granted.

WICHT V. LYONS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,700, with interest from July 1, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable. Lyons was sued as surety in solidum and co-principal debtor.

Defendant said that the mortgages was receiving the rent for two properties in payment of the interest. The rent was sufficient to satisfy the interest.

Mr. De Villiers said he was instructed that that was not so. Plaintiff was the holder of a second bond.

Defendant complained that he had had no notice that the interest had not been obtained.

Order granted as prayed, credit to be given to defendant for any receipts plaintiff may have got from the property.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

VAN ZYL AND BUISINNE V. MACKENZIE.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for £27 10s. 8d., less £9 19s. paid on account, for services rendered and moneys disbursed, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

W. AND G. SCOTT, LTD. V. HERBERT (TRADING AS G. AND T. HERBERT).

Mr. Watermeyer moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for £130 4s. 7d., less £26 paid on account, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Ex parte VON BELOW.

Mr. Roxx moved on the petition of Gustav Adolph von Below, of Middelburg, for an order interdicting the transfer of a certain erf in Middelburg from Christian Jooste and Nicholas S. Lessing to Dirk Jacobus Biggs. Petitioner stated that he was engaged in certain negotiations for the purchase of the erf, the sale having been entrusted by the owners to Stephen Hugo, auctioneer, of Middelburg. Petitioner acquired an option over the premises for £300 from Mr. Hugo, and had offered £280 for the property, when he ascertained that the owners had, through another attorney, disposed of the property meanwhile for £300. Petitioner had since offered £300, and he claimed that he was entitled to exercise his option. Jooste resided at Philippolis, Orange River Colony, and Lessing resided in the Middelburg division. Petitioner prayed for leave to sue Jooste by editorial citation, and for an order restricting transfer of the property to Biggs and for a judicial attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

De Villiers, C.J.: The applicant does not make out a clear case that he has a right of action. He had an option, as he says, for £300, although Minnaar (Mr. Hugo's clerk) does not speak of any price being mentioned, but the petitioner himself admits that, after that, he made fruitless attempts to get the property for £280. While these fruitless attempts were being made, the property was sold to Biggs. I do not say that he had a right to sell it to Biggs. It may be that further facts may be disclosed to show that he had no such rights. Still, there was no clear contract of purchase. Moreover, there was nothing to show that Biggs knew about this. Even if he did know, I do not see how he could be prevented from getting transfer in terms of his contract from the owners of the property. If Lessing has broken his contract, well, let him be sued for damages. As to Jooste, I do not think there is sufficient before me to justify me in attaching this property, which would prevent Biggs from getting transfer. There will be no order.

Ex parte HOFFMAN.

Mr. Marais moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute admitting petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis.

Rule absolute, Mr. Marais to be counsel and Messrs Michau and De Villiers to be attorneys to the petitioner.

Ex parte BREGENZER.

Dr. Greer moved for an extension of the return day of certain rule calling upon petitioner's husband to show cause why she should not be admitted to sue in forma pauperis. Counsel said that respondent had now moved further up-country, and appeared to be about 400 miles beyond Livingstone.

Return day extended until the 1st February.

ESTATE LLOYD V. MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. OF NEW YORK.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute calling upon respondents to show cause why they should not be ordered to pay over to plaintiffs certain moneys due under a policy of insurance. There was no appearance for respondents.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte BROWNELL.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for a certain rule to be made absolute admitting petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights. Counsel read an affidavit sworn before a notary public at Calgary, province of Alberta, Canada, to the effect that service had been made upon respondent at Cayley, province of Alberta.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court had continually laid down that affidavits produced should be sworn before commissioners of this Court, or before people whom the Court was satisfied were entitled in the country in which the affidavits were sworn to take affidavits. There was nothing in this case to show that in Canada a notary public was entitled to take affidavits. What part of Canada had the affidavits been sworn in?

Mr. Bisset: In the province of Alberta.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In Quebec they have got the old French law, which confers very large powers upon a notary.]

Mr. Bisset said he thought that Alberta was a recently-constituted province.

De Villiers, C.J., said that in this case the Court would take the fact that the affidavit had been sworn before a notary as sufficient. There was, he added, great risk in getting affidavits of this kind. If there had been very great importance attaching to it, the Court might have declined to take the proof of service as satisfactory, but as this was merely a formal notice of service, an order would be granted.

Rule absolute, Mr. Bisset to be counsel, and Messrs. Walker and Jacobsen to be attorneys to the petitioner.

Ex parte MINI.

Mr. Roux moved, on the petition of William Mini, for leave to sue his wife Catherine by edictal citation, and also one Jeremiah Taleni. Petitioner said that he was married to Catherine at Tsomo, Transkei, and that subsequently they lived together at the Native Location, Maitland. His wife wrongfully and unlawfully deserted him, and she went and lived in cohabitation with Jeremiah Taleni. The present habitation of respondents was unknown to petitioner, but he believed they were living at some place in the Transkei. He desired to institute an action against his wife for divorce, custody of the minor child, and forfeiture of any benefits of the marriage in community, and for costs of the action against Jeremiah.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, citation returnable on the 1st November, personal service, failing which, one publication in the "Kokstad Advertiser."

Ex parte ESTATE HEYWOOD.

Mr. P. T. Lewis moved, on the petition of the executors testamentary of estate late Thomas William Heywood, for leave to sell and mortgage certain estate property. From the petition, it appeared that the late Mr. Heywood carried on business as an auctioneer and sworn appraiser at King William's Town, and he directed in his will that the business should be continued and carried on by his executors for the benefit of his estate. He also directed that none of the landed property, with certain exceptions, should be sold before his youngest son, who was 17 years old, had obtained the age of 21 years. There was, petitioners pointed out, an overdraft against the estate in favour of the African Banking Corporation of £689. The business had, so far, been carried on at a profit, enabling petitioners to support and maintain the deceased's widow and family, and they were sanguine that this would be maintained, although at the present time the business was extremely limited, owing to the depression and want of capital. The property wherein the business was carried on was of far larger dimensions than the business necessitated, and petitioners were strongly of opinion that if portion thereof could be disposed of so as to pay off part, if not the whole, of the mortgage bond, thus decreasing the amount payable monthly for interest, it would be to the benefit of the estate. They asked for leave to sell such portion of that property as they may deem advisable, and, if necessary, to pass a general bond hypothecating any of the property of the estate in favour of the African Banking Corporation. The Master approved of the petition. Order granted as prayed.

Mr. Philipson Stow moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,600, with interest from the 1st July, 1906, less £30 paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

ESTATE GILL V. ZIES.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence upon a mortgage bond for £500, with interest from the 1st January, 1907, less £5 16s. 2d. paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Defendant said that one of the properties had been handed over for collection to Mr. Arderne in lieu of interest, and that the rent was more than sufficient to cover the interest.

Mr. Toms said he was instructed that the rent from the property did not cover the interest, and that the only amount received from the defendant was £5 odd.

Ordered to stand over for inquiry.

At a later stage the matter was again mentioned, and provisional sentence was granted, execution to be stayed for a month.

BLANKENBERG V. SCHIETKAT.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, with interest from the 1st January, 1907, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

DE VILLIERS V. LIEBENBERG.

Minor—Surety—Tacit emancipation—Failure to repudiate on attaining majority.

Defendant, a minor, had, with the authority of his father and natural guardian, signed a promissory note as surety for his said father. At that time the plaintiff was upwards of 20 years of age and leased a farm and owned cattle in partnership with his father. During the currency of the note he attained majority, but he did not then repudiate liability on the note.

Held, that having been tacitly emancipated at the time he signed the note, and not having repudiated his liability on becoming of age he was liable as a surety.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £61 1s. 10d., with interest from the 8th November, 1906.

The affidavits of defendant and his father stated that the defence was that Hendrik Johannes Liebenberg signed the note at a time when he was aged 20 years and nine months, and was a minor under the guardianship of his father. The note represented the balance owing of a loan advanced to defendant's father. Defendant received no benefit from the note, and signed it at the request of his father, who was responsible. The latter had been unable to pay, and his estate had been surrendered as insolvent.

The answering affidavit of the plaintiff was to the effect that he sent the note for signature by defendant, and his eldest son, if the latter were of age. The note was subsequently returned to deponent, signed by the defendant and his father. When the father's affairs became entangled in difficulties, he said that his son, if allowed time, would pay the note.

Mr. De Villiers for plaintiff, Mr. Gutsche for defendant.

Mr. De Villiers: The defendant pleads minority, and says that he signed the promissory note at the request of his natural guardian. That a minor is not liable on a contract entered into with the authority of his guardian is surely a new doctrine, and I do not think that I need argue that point.

[Hopley, J.: You certainly had better argue it. Here a father gets his minor son to become security for the father's benefit. How can the minor be bound?]

The plaintiff did not know that the son was a minor.

[Hopley, J.: Could not the father be prosecuted for obtaining money by false pretences?]

There was no false pretences in this case. The father did not say that his son was a major.

The ward has his remedy against the guardian. My point is that for all legal purposes the ward and the guardian are a full legal persona. Then again the son had been tacitly emancipated. He was trading in his own name as his father's partner. They had hired a farm together, and as the father's letter of January 13th shows, possessed cattle in common.

Again, there was ratification by the son of this suretyship after he had attained his majority. He became of age on the 11th February, 1907, and the note had then still half the time to run before maturing. The son did not repudiate the note on attaining majority. He did not do so even in April, 1907, when the creditor wrote to him.

Even a minor who enters into a contract without his tutor's consent can ratify it after attaining majority Voet (26, 8, 4), Maasdorp's South African Law (Vol. 1, p. 247). By not repudiating the suretyship he damnsifies the holder of the note if he is allowed to do so now. As to the consent of the tutor making the contract binding see Voet (46, 1, 5). The only way in which he can escape from his obligation is by obtaining restitutio in integrum Voet (26, 8, 3), Maasdorp (Vol. 1, p. 246), and restitutio in integrum may be refused if it was generally supposed that the minor was a major Voet (4, 4, 43). As far as I know, restitutio in integrum has never been granted in this Colony.

Mr. Gutsche: It is common cause that when the defendant signed the note he was not of full age.

[Hopley, J.: Oh, no. The father held out his son as being of full age, and he now denies it.]

As to his age, we have the affidavit of his parents. If his father misrepresented his age, that cannot prejudice the defendant. In order that a contract entered into by a minor with his tutor's consent can be held to bind the minor, it must be proved that the contract is for the minor's benefit Aurri v. Hind (4, E.D.C., 283). Here the defendant received no benefit.

[Hopley, J.: He and his father were trading in partnership, it was surely a benefit to him that the partnership property should not be sold in execution.]

I submit that there was a partnership. As to restitutio in integrum, that is exactly what, to all intents and purposes we are asking for. Restitutio in integrum is either substantial or judicial, Van der Linden (Book 3). As to tacit emancipation; the facts here do not prove it. Even if the defendant had been tacitly emancipated it would have been necessary to have shown that the special benefit which he derived from his suretyship was connected with the trade which he carried on. As to ratification, the failure of defendant to reply to plaintiff's demand must be construed rather as a repudiation than as a ratification of the contract.

Mr. De Villiers, in reply, quoted Maasdorp's Institutes (Vol. I., p. 246), and submitted that it was not necessary, if the tutor consented, to show that the contract was for the benefit of the minor. On the point that any contract entered into by a minor tacitly emancipated must deal with the trade which he exercised, he cited Maasdorp at p. 237. Counsel also quoted Gericke v. Keytler (1879 Buch., 147).

Hopley, J.: Provisional sentence was claimed upon a promissory note dated November 8, 1906, in which two men called Liebenberg made themselves jointly and severally liable for the promissory note to the plaintiff or his order. The note is one made for six months, and fell due on the 8th May in this year. The first signatory, Christoffel Liebenberg, has now become insolvent. The note has been presented for payment, and proved in the estate, and the plaintiff is now suing the second signatory, Hendrik Liebenberg, who is the son of the insolvent. The defence set up is that of minority at the time of the execution of the contract, and it is said that Hendrik Liebenberg at the time of making this note was twenty years and nine months of age. Now, in ordinary circumstances, a minor who makes a contract at such an age as that without the authority of his guardian, by which he has not benefited, would be able to repudiate such contract, if he has not ratified it after attaining majority. In this case, when the note fell due, the minor was something like three months over the age of twenty-one, and I am assuming in the consideration of this matter that the proof of age is satisfactory, although no certificate has been produced, and for the present I will treat it on the basis that the age as set forth in the affidavits for the defence is the correct age of the defendant. Now, during the whole of the six months the plaintiff was clearly under the impression, I should say, from the correspondence and the affidavits that the defendant in this case was of full age at the time he made the contract. He did not ask that a minor should be drawn into this contract, but in writing that there was this balance due by the father he urged him to pay; and the father in writing back told him: "I now keep my cattle, and hire a farm, together with my eldest son." The plaintiff wrote back: "I have read your letter of the 6th, and I enclose an account to date making a total of £61 1s. 10d. I also enclose the promissory note to be signed by you and your eldest son if he chooses to do so, and also if he is of age." He added: "If your son signs I shall not take legal steps against you." In answer to that, the father sent a letter promising to comply with the suggested arrangement. "Your letter," he said, "with account and promissory note to hand, dated 15th November. I and my son will sign it and return it to you. He is at present not here. I shall see him next week. He is on the farm"—that is, the farm which they had hired together, according to the previous letter—"with our cattle. We shall then both sign it, and send it back to you." Later on, apparently, the promissory note was, in terms of the promises contained in those two letters, sent forward and signed by the son. Now, the first question that arises is the one taken by Mr. De Villiers, that the defence of minority cannot prevail in a case like this, where the minor has undertaken a responsibility, and entered into an obligation with the consent and by the authority of his guardian. It is true that he was not looked upon as a minor by the plaintiff, who believed he was contracting with a major, and he was led to thinking so by the father and the son, who entered into the contract as though he was a major. Now, it may very well be that the minor at that day was ignorant of his rights, and that he simply signed at the request of his father; still his father was his natural guardian, and so he was doing this act with the authority and at the request of his guardian. It may have been an improper thing on the part of the guardian to do, but, on the other hand, there is nothing to show this Court that the son was not fully aware of the position, and that he consented to undertake this for the sake perhaps of benefiting his guardian, who was using his authority to clothe him with sufficient power to enter into such a contract. In such circumstances a question might possibly arise as to the liability of the ward: but it is a point about which I do not think it necessary to express a final opinion. There are other points in the case which may fairly be taken to be decisive. The next contention on behalf of the plaintiff is that the defence of minority cannot prevail, because there has been a tacit emancipation of the minor; and that, it seems to me, has a good deal of substance in it. In April this year, when the note had not yet matured, the father wrote to say how sorry he was that he would not be able to meet his obligations as he had been very ill with typhoid fever, and that if he were pressed by his creditors he would be obliged to surrender his estate. He wrote about the son as though he were on the farm managing their cattle and in such terms as to lead to the conclusion that he and his son were farming in partnership. If it be true they were carrying on partnership together, I think it would be in all probability held that there had been a tacit emancipation, and that this young man was acting on his own responsibility. Then there is the further point, in which I think there is also substance, that after he had reached the age of twenty-one the defendant must be taken to have known his full legal rights. The promissory note had then still three months to run, upon which promissory note, although he is a joint maker, it is admitted that he was really in the capacity of surety; yet knowing that he was surety of this note, he still continued to allow these three months to elapse without raising a single word of protest. There was nothing in the way of repudiation on his part. Such conduct I think goes very far in the direction of amounting to a ratification. Do these facts I have related entitle a man who was a minor when he entered into such a contract in such circumstances, to get now what is practically a restitutio in integrum by being held irresponsible on such obligation? It seems to me that if he were to come here to claim a restitutio in integrum he would have to prove first of all that he had entered into this contract entirely without any benefit to himself and without the authority of his guardian. As to that it seems to me there is a great deal to be said, and one does not know whether he was being benefited or not at that time by guaranteeing his father's debt. It is true that the father benefited by it, and though the contract appears a voidable one, the defendant never took any steps to have the contract set aside. I think that the facts go very far to show that he had been tacitly emancipated. Shortly before the due date of the note, the holder of it wrote to this young man asking him to take steps to provide for the note at its due date; he took no notice of the letter, and never raised any defence such as that of minority. This would probably be taken to imply a ratification of the contract. In all these circumstances it seems to me there must be provisional sentence with costs, leaving it to the defendant if he thinks he can do so to succeed in a principal case.

IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE
AND SUPPLY CO., LTD. V. } 1907.
DISTRIBUTING SYNDICATE } Sept. 21th
FOR COLD STORAGE.

Mr. McGregor, K.C., for the appellants (the Distributing Syndicate), moved for leave to extend the time to appeal against a judgment of Mr. Justice Maasdorp, until the first day available next month for the hearing of appeals. Mr. Upington, for the respondents, appeared to consent to the application, and he also asked that two further special cases prepared by the referee should be heard at the same time.

Hopley, J., said he could not bind the Appeal Court to hear the further matters at the same time as the appeal, and ordered the matter to stand over on the application of counsel for the respondent.

KOPELOWITZ V. AUERBACH.

Attachment of goods ad fundandam jurisdictionem—Foreign defendant—Agent.

If a foreign firm has an agent within this Colony who is fully empowered to accept service of process on their behalf, the Court will not grant an order of attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem against them.

This was an application by Arthur Solomon Kopelowitz upon notice calling upon the firm of A. Auerbach, merchants, of Hamburg, Germany, to show cause why applicant should not sue them by edictal citation, and why certain goods should not be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

Applicant alleged that the respondents' late agent, one Schwere, had entered into a contract with him whereby he, on their behalf, undertook to furnish applicant with credit to the amount of £1,000, to enable him to start business as a general dealer in Montagu. He was an unrehabilitated insolvent, and, by reason of the breach of contract by respondents in their failure to furnish the credit as agreed with Schwere, who at the time held their general power of attorney, he had suffered damages.

He proposed to institute an action against respondents for damages as aforesaid, and he prayed that certain goods of the value of about £400 belonging to respondents, and at present lying at certain premises in Cape Town, should be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

The respondents' position, as disclosed in an affidavit by their present representative in Cape Town, was that Schwerts had no power to enter into such a contract as applicant proposed to sue upon without the authority of his principals. That authority had not been obtained. It was furthermore contended that there was no need to sue by edictal citation, as deponent had full power from the respondents to accept all judicial processes. Objection was also taken to the attachment of the goods in question as being unnecessary, and constituting a hindrance to respondents in their business.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., for applicant. Mr. Cloese (with him Dr. Greer) for respondents.

Mr. Benjamin, in argument, quoted the case of Einwald v. German West African Co. (5 Juta, 86), and contended that these orders of attachment were granted not merely ad fundandam jurisdictionem, but also ad firmendam jurisdictionem.

Mr. Cloese submitted that the application was quite superfluous, and that there was no need to ask for leave to sue by edictal citation or to attach the goods, as the respondents employed a duly-authorised agent to represent them in this colony. He quoted Van Zyl's Jud. Prac. (p. 110).

Hopley, J.: At this stage it is not necessary to enter into the merits of this case, which concerns a contract entered into here by a tradesman in this country with a foreign firm. He entered into a contract with the accredited agent, holding the general power of that foreign firm, whose domicile is in Hamburg. He entered into the contract which it is alleged has now been broken, and he says that on that account he has a right of action. The only question which arises for my consideration at this moment is whether, supposing he has such a right of action, he has any need to apply to this Court to attach anything belonging to that foreign firm for the purpose of founding or strengthening jurisdiction. The firm seems to be one which exports goods from Germany to Cape Town to be dealt with here by its agent in the fullest possible manner, and there are in Cape Town at the present moment—so it is alleged and admitted—certain goods which could be attached if the Court deemed it necessary. On the other hand, such a business as that of the respondents' requires the goods to be in circulation, and the Court would not order such goods to be attached with the possible result of para-lysing the business of such firm unless it was absolutely necessary for the purpose of gaining jurisdiction or otherwise satisfying the practice of this Court. Now, the firm of Auerbach has had occasion to change their agent. They have taken away from the agent who entered into this contract with the applicant, his power, and fully conferred it on another, a Mr. Otzen, who now represents them, and whose power of attorney prior to the date of this application the applicant had seen. So far back as July last he saw Otzen's power of attorney. Now, it is stated to-day that Otzen's power is of the fullest description, and authorises him to appear in this Court to accept the jurisdiction and abide the results. But Mr. Benjamin argues that it is not sufficient, and that his client, having a cause of action against the defendant, must go further for the purpose of getting the jurisdiction of this Court firmly established, and that although that foreign firm has placed a person here with the fullest powers, it is still necessary to attach some goods belonging to the firm. I do not think there is any case which goes to that length. A foreigner can accept the jurisdiction of this Court, and this has been frequently done by their empowering an agent with the fullest powers. They do it, no doubt, for the purpose of facilitating their trade. They empower someone they can trust to accept service to fight their legal battles for them and abide the result. They submit themselves through their agent to the jurisdiction of the Court, and do away by such act with any necessity to found or to confirm jurisdiction. Mr. Benjamin has also frankly admitted that the object of the application is to secure some goods upon which the judgment could be executed; but I see no reason to place a foreigner over whom the Court has jurisdiction in a worse position than any other defendant, and I know of no practice to that effect. The application was unnecessary, and is refused with costs.

Ex parte ESTATE NIEUWOUT.

Mr. Roux moved for confirmation of the sale of certain property in the estate of the late Susannah Nieuwoudt to the executor testamentary in the estate.

REX V. NAASON AND ANOTHER.

Juvenile offenders—Whipping—Acts 21 of 1869 and 8 of 1889, Sec. 1.

Sec. 1 of Act 8 of 1889 does not so modify Act 21 of 1869 as to allow a Magistrate to sentence any boy over the age of 14 to whipping for a first offence.

Hopley, J.: There was a small matter, Re: v. Johannes Naason and Petrus Lucas, which came before me from the Acting Resident Magistrate of Ceres last week, in which these two boys, whose ages are recorded as 15, pleaded guilty to petty theft of a little firewood, and were each sentenced by the Magistrate to receive a certain number of cuts with the cane. The age was recorded on the charge sheet as 15, but there was no evidence or finding of the Magistrate on the point, and I accordingly referred the matter to him with a query, asking him whether he could justify that sentence, pointing out that the Act, No. 21 of 1869 allows juvenile criminals not over the age of 14 to be whipped for a first offence, and this was a first offence apparently. The Magistrate has written back his reasons, saying that the boys and their parents were of a respectable class, and he thought that the whipping would have a better effect than to confine them within the gaol, where they would come into contact with criminals. He justifies his sentence by Act 8 of 1889 (section 1), where he says, "It is laid down that where any child under the age of 16 years is found guilty of any offence, whether a first offence or not, he may in lieu of any punishment be apprenticed," and he, therefore, draws the conclusion from that that he is entitled to inflict any punishment whatsoever, and, therefore, that in inflicting a whipping he was acting within his powers under the Act of 1889. That conclusion is founded upon a fallacy. Of course, the Act of 1889 in using the words "any punishment" means only any punishment which the Magistrate is legally entitled to order, and there is nothing in that Act to change the Act of 1869, which confines the power of whipping to children under 14 years of age. The conviction will be sustained, but the sentence must be quashed, and the matter will be sent back to the Acting Resident Magistrate to pass a legal sentence. As this sentence has been hanging over the accused about a week, I might suggest, if he does not wish to send them back to the contamination of the gaol, where presumably they have been confined, pending the execution of his illegal sentence, that he might, under the circumstances, simply admonish them, and send them about their business. This is merely a suggestion from the Court. He has to pass a legal sentence, and the matter will be remitted to him for that purpose.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

FRENCH AND CO., LTD. AND (1907.
OTHERS V. WOODS. (Sept. 30th.

This was an application to make absolute a certain rule nisi restraining the respondent (Alfred Woods) from performing certain play known as "The Silver King," pending an action to be brought by applicants.

Mr. Upington was for applicant; Mr. Benjamin, K.C., was for respondent.

The rule was granted on the petition of applicants by the Chief Justice on the 12th September, and leave was then given to telegraph the order to Aliwal North, where respondent was appearing, the applicant undertaking to be responsible for any damage respondent might sustain by reason of being compelled to discontinue the performances.

A considerable number of affidavits was read, from which it appeared that the applicants were Samuel French and Co., Ltd., publishers, of Southampton-street, London, and the executors and representative of the late Wilson Barrett. The petitioners stated that in 1882 a drama entitled "The Silver King," was written by Henry Arthur Jones and the late Henry Herman. Rights in the said play were secured and registered at the Stationer's Hall. Petitioners said that they were the holders of the rights. The respondent had been producing the play in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, and while he was producing the play at Kimberley, in August last, endeavours were made to secure from him the fees which were payable, but no settlement was effected. He thereupon proceeded with his company to the Orange River Colony, and had, notwithstanding the protest of petitioners' representative in South Africa, performed "The Silver King" at Bloemfontein and elsewhere. He was advertised to produce "The Silver King" at Aliwal North on the 12th September, 1907, and also to proceed to other towns in the Colony for a similar purpose. Petitioners' representative had endeavoured to prohibit the respondent from playing the piece, but he was defied by the respondent, and stated that he intended to continue to produce the play. An affidavit by Frank Wheeler was also read, in which he stated that he was the representative of the petitioners in South Africa, with instructions to look after their interests. He spoke of an interview that he had with the respondent in Kimberley in reference to the production of "The Silver King."

An affidavit by the respondent, Alfred Woods, was read, from which it appeared that his position was that he had authority from Frank Wheeler to produce "The Silver King." He had been touring the country in the earlier part of the year with this and other plays, under arrangement with Mr. Frank Wheeler, for a period of three months, and when the tour terminated at His Majesty's, Johannesburg, on or about the 30th April, he arranged with Mr. Frank Wheeler to start a tour from Johannesburg to Cape Town. It was agreed that he should have the use of the wardrobe, scenery, etc., of Mr. Wheeler on the contemplated tour, and the first performance took place at Klerksdorp on the 22nd July, 1907. When they commenced, Mr. Wheeler said he would have to charge a royalty. He said, "I must charge you something, but it won't be much, not more than £1 for each performance." This he (respondent) agreed to pay. No objection was taken to the performances until the company were at Kimberley on the 24th August, when an interview took place between Mr. Wheeler and deponent and their legal advisers. Mr. Wheeler said there had been a good deal of friction, and they had better settle amicably, and he asked for his profits to date, and demanded a weekly settlement. Deponent declined to make other than monthly settlements, and Mr. Wheeler lost his temper and said: "Now, for your — cheek, although I agreed to let you play 'The Silver King' for £1 a night, I will now charge you £5." Deponent subsequently sent £121 to Mr. Frank Wheeler, being his share of the profits of the first month's performances, and £15 for playing rights for fifteen nights. He went on to say that he found that overtures were being made to members of the company, including Horace Hunter and others, to leave the company, so that Mr. Wheeler could start him with "The Silver King." Deponent always had been and was still prepared to render monthly settlements to the said Wheeler, or to pay a royalty of £1 for each production. An affidavit by the manager of the Woods-Williamson Company (Mr. Thompson) was also read, in which he said that it was agreed with Mr. Wheeler that the settlements were to be monthly, and that respondent was to be charged not more than £1 a night.

In an answering affidavit, Mr. Wheeler entered at some length into the history of his business relationships with the respondent. He denied that he had agreed with the respondent that he should be charged not more than £1 for each production, and insisted that he was entitled to weekly settlements of his share of the profits of the tour. He said that he had to send to Cape Town to ascertain what the fee for the playing rights was, and that while he was in Kimberley, he informed respondent that £4 a night would have to be paid. Deponent said that he gave the respondent notice to terminate the tour. The affidavit of Alfred Wyburd, general manager for B. and F. Wheeler, Ltd., stated that after the receipt of the order at Aliwal North, respondent produced "The Silver King" at Aliwal North on the 12th September. Respondent and the company afterwards went to Burgersdorp, Queen's Town, Molteno, and Cathcart, but the play was not produced. Deponent had seen a statement by Mr. Thompson, the manager of the company, showing a profit of £400, and he had demanded £119, shown to be due to Mr. Wheeler for use of the "properties," share of profits, etc., but he had not succeeded in obtaining the money.

In the course of the affidavits, casual reference was made to the friction which took place between Mr. Woods and the press while he was appearing in Cape Town. It also appeared that Mr. Woods originally met Mr. Frank Wheeler at an hotel in London, and that negotiations took place with a view of providing him with an engagement in South Africa, en route for Australia.

Mr. Upington for applicant. Mr. Benjamin, K.C., for respondent.

Mr. Upington said it was common cause between the parties that not a word was said by Frank Wheeler that he was acting as agent for Samuel French, Ltd., in anything, or as agent for the executors of Wilson Barrett. The first question was really whether his clients, Samuel French, Ltd., and the executors of Wilson Barrett, had got the playing rights of the piece. Once that right was established it rested upon Woods to show where he got the right to play. There was not a word in the agreement about the play rights of the "Silver King." An agreement was entered into between Frank Wheeler, in his personal capacity, with Woods, Frank Wheeler to grant the use of wardrobe and scenery for the small tour, and in consideration of that he was to get 25 per cent. of the profits. Wheeler admitted that Woods should be allowed to play the "Silver King." The question was what were the terms of the agreement. Woods said that the agreement was that he was to be allowed to play this piece during the whole of the tour. Taking that as being the case, the tour had been terminated, and reasonable notice had been given to terminate an utterly indefinite contract. Was there anything in the document before the Court to show that Frank Wheeler would have been justified or entitled to enter into such a contract as alleged by Mr. Woods? This play was to be performed for their joint benefit, and the principals in England were perfectly entitled to stop these two persons in their individual capacities from performing this piece and a fortiori they could stop Woods.

Hopley, J., said he did not know whether counsel for the applicant should address the Court at this stage.

Mr. Upington said he would like to hear what his learned friend had to say.

Mr. Benjamin said his learned friend was seeking to draw a fine distinction between Wheeler in his private capacity and Wheeler in his capacity as representing Samuel French and Co. The distinction was a difficult one to grasp. Wheeler was the agent here, and he had authority to allow the performance of this play, and what the fees to be charged in any particular case were left solely to his discretion. The only question was what terms did Mr. Wheeler arrange? It was clear that it was contemplated by him that the "Silver King" should be played. Wheeler was aware of the movements of this company. The consent of the agent of Samuel French was given for the purpose of this piece. Counsel submitted that the balance of testimony was in favour of the position taken up by the respondent that this tour was to continue as long as Woods found it profitable right down to Cape Town. It was a matter solely within his discretion, and his discretion would be determined by the success or the failure of the tour. The respondent was quite prepared to give security pending an action. With regard to the continuance of the tour, the balance of testimony was also in favour of respondent. Counsel submitted that the real history of the case was that there had been an arrangement originally for a monthly settlement, but that Wheeler was pressed for money, and he wished to have weekly settlements. He was surprised no doubt that the tour was turning out a success, and his share of the profits for the first four weeks of the play, apart from the royalties, was over £100. Wheeler induced the members of the company to leave Woods—a most improper action on his part—and started these people on their own independent tour. That in every way he sought to embarrass the respondent was clear from the telegrams, and utterly irrelevant matter had been put before the Court on behalf of the applicant.

[Hopley, J.: On both sides, I think.]

Mr. Benjamin: The matter put before the Court on behalf of the applicant was really intended to prejudice the Court against the respondent. For instance, there was the reference to the assault at Kimberley. Counsel contended that no prejudice could be done to the applicant until the hearing of the action, and he submitted that the balance of justice was entirely in favour of the respondent, who should be allowed to continue the performance of this piece.

Mr. Upington having been heard in reply:

Hopley, J.: A great deal of irrelevant and unnecessary matter has been introduced into this motion, and had it not been that both sides seem to me to be equally guilty, I should have asked the Registrar to call the attention of the Taxing Master to the fact, and see that the enormous expense of some of these affidavits should be disallowed or considerably cut down, but, as I say, both sides seem to have indulged equally in the indiscretion, and I shall let them meet their own difficulties in their own way. The application is for the extraordinary remedy of an interdict on motion, and first of all it is necessary for the applicant in such a case to satisfy the Court that he has a perfectly clear right. Now, that point in the case has been considerably obscured by the amount of entirely irrelevant matter which has been introduced. It is perhaps inseparable from the circumstances, seeing that the applicants are represented here by Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler, Limited, and Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler, Limited, have also had an understanding, a contract of some sort or other—its exact nature I need not now determine—with the respondent, so that it becomes very difficult even for a trained mind to dissociate entirely the actions of Messrs. Wheeler in their personal capacity from those with which we are concerned in their representative capacity as the agents of Messrs. Samuel French and Co., Limited, and the executors of the late Mr. Wilson Barrett, who are the proprietors of the acting rights of the "Silver King." It is, however, perfectly clear that the respondent never has made any contract with the applicants to-day, who are the proprietors of these playing rights. The respondent has been touring the country since about the 20th July with the "Silver King" under an arrangement of the 4th July made with Mr. Frank Wheeler when he was in Johannesburg. That agreement, which is attached to the affidavits, is rather short and inexplicit in some of those details which become important as to this present motion, but, at all events, there is one thing that is perfectly clear in it, and that is that it is purely an agreement between Mr. Frank Wheeler or Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler (I suppose he was acting for them) and the respondent in this case. Now, it may very well be that different views may be taken as to the guarantee with regard to the "Silver King" when such an agreement as that was made. It may very well be argued hereafter that Mr. Woods was under the impression, and that he might be rightly under the impression, from the legal point of view, that Messrs. Wheeler in agreeing with him, if they did agree, that the "Silver King" should be staged during this tour, also guaranteed that they had the right to stage the "Silver King," and that they would pay any acting rights there may be to the proprietors of the play. It may be that such a construction might be put upon such a contract, but one thing is quite clear, and it is that they never said that, as agents of the proprietors, they guaranteed that the respondent should be allowed to play this play throughout this tour or so long as it may last. Now, Messrs. Wheeler come here and say: "We are not Wheeler, Ltd., at all, but here is a man going about the country playing this play under an agreement with one of us, it is true, but not under any agreement with our principals as agents of French and Co., Ltd., and of the estate of Wilson Barrett, and we ask that he may be stopped." Whether they are doing this for the purpose of putting pressure upon Mr. Woods to settle or get a settlement of their private complications with him, whether they are doing it, as has been suggested, from spite, because they have become annoyed with him, or whether they are doing it from any other reason whatsoever, it seems to me that this is a matter, which I think it has been fairly argued can well be settled afterwards between them. The Court has to see whether the applicants have come here with a clear right, and, as far as I can see, legally they have. They have a clear right to the acting rights and to make charges for each time the play is acted, and, therefore, if somebody is infringing these rights, and they are being irreparably damaged, the Court would interfere on motion even if there were other matters which might perhaps make it rather doubtful how the matter might finally end. They have their clear right. Is there anything in the way of irreparable damage they are likely to sustain if the play is allowed to be acted? Purely out of pocket expenses they are not likely to suffer. The play is there, it is a good property, and it is not easy to put that on the same basis as ordinary movable property which somebody or other is destroying or wasting. The play will be as good a play after a certain amount of acting as before. Still, this is part of the estate of Wilson Barrett and part of the property of French and Co., Ltd., and it ought to be bringing its proper return, and they say here it is being played by a person in the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, and he is not giving to us any proper returns for it. The answer to that is: "You are not irreparably damaged by that; you can fairly wait for the slower process of an action," to which the reply is: "Mr. Woods is not a man of any substance, he is a man on his way to Australia, he may be going at any time, he is an actor touring about the country in a precarious position pecuniarily, and, therefore, unless he be stopped now our property may be damaged and become stale in the eyes of the public of this colony, when someone else, who will pay us the proper fees, may wish to go on tour with the play, and in that respect we are irreparably damaged." It seems very hard to combat that view, and the only position I can see that the respondent could take in the matter to get himself allowed to produce this play is the one suggested by Mr. Benjamin, and that is that he give substantial security in the way of meeting the proper fees when they hereafter can be ascertained. I think that is the only arrangement the Court under the circumstances can give effect to by its judgment. Leaving it to Messrs. Woods and Wheeler to adjust their own private quarrels in the best way they can, and adjust their own accounts in the best way they can, and settle their own matters in the best way they can: putting all this entirely on one side, the only point the Court has to consider is whether it should accede to the application. I think the Court should intervene to stop Mr. Woods from playing the "Silver King," but, at the same time, give him the opportunity, if he can find the necessary security, to go on with the play and play it as much as he likes during this tour. The order of the Court will be that the rule be made absolute, to be suspended if respondent finds security in the sum of £200 to the satisfaction of the Registrar, to abide the result of an action, with leave to the applicants to bring their action for their fees or royalties or any other sum due to them, and leave granted to the respondent also to bring his action to have this order set aside or to obtain any other relief he may be entitled to in the premises, costs to abide the result of such action, but if the action be not brought by either side before the end of next term, then there will be no order as to costs.

Ex parte KATZIN.

Mr. Swift moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order authorising the attachment of certain goods and chattels, the property of one S. W. Garne, pending an action to be brought by petitioner for recovery of the sum of £4 2s. 6d., due to the Empire Steam Laundry, of which the petitioner is managing director. Petitioner said that the respondent owed the debt for washing done by the laundry, and had failed to pay the debt, though demands had been made. Respondent had taken his passage to England by the S.S. Gascon, which was due to leave Table Bay at 4 o'clock this afternoon. There were no assets except his goods and chattels, which had been taken to the ship.

Hopley, J., asked counsel under what Rule of Court he applied?

Mr. Swift said that he applied under the common law.

[Hopley, J.: You want to attach some of his luggage, because you cannot attach his person?]

Mr. Swift: That is so, my lord. The amount is under £15, and we cannot attach his person.

[Hopley, J.: I have never heard an application like that.]

Mr. Swift said that it had frequently been done.

Hopley, J., pointed out that no judgment had been obtained against the respondent.

Mr. Swift said that unless the Court granted an order, the applicant would have no remedy against the respondent.

Hopley, J.: Very likely. There are lots of people who give small credits and who have no remedy.

Mr. Swift said that he believed there was authority for the application, and he quoted from Van Zyl's Judicial Practice (pp 159 and 161).

Hopley, J.: Without saying that the applicant in this case is wrong in the procedure he has chosen to adopt, and without saying that there is not some process by which a debtor who owes less than £15, and who is about to depart from the jurisdiction of this Court, may be compelled to pay his creditor, and without being able to go into the law at such sudden emergency, I may say it is a curious thing that no one in court, and I should think not the oldest practitioner of the court, nor apparently Mr. Van Zyl in his "Judicial Practice," can remember a single instance of this sort as occurring. It is quite possible that creditors may have thought that amounts of £15 were too small to trouble about, and to try and stop their debtors from leaving, but it may also be that there is a quite well understood notion abroad that if a man does not owe as much as £15, you have really no remedy. I do not say that this is, nor that it should be the law. All I say is that when I am asked suddenly to do an unprecedented thing of this sort, I should be absolutely convinced that I am right in doing so, and counsel admits that the matter has come so suddenly upon him that he has not been able to find any direct authority or anything in our law which would authorise me to do what I am asked to do in this case. At present I can see no good reason for supposing that this remedy has been neglected all these many years by creditors without some good, sound, substantial legal reason underlying their conduct. There will be no order on this application.

ESTATE WELLS V. PATTERSON AND ORUICKSHANK.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £3,000, less £130 paid on account, with interest from the 1st July, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for £17 10s. insurance premiums, and for the property hypothecated to be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

HARRIS V. GORDON.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the R.M. Court at Woodstock, and to have defendant's salary, now due or about to become due, declared executable.

Order granted as prayed.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

WIENER AND CO., LTD. V. { 1907.
KOPELOWITZ. } Oct. 1st.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £127 19s. 9d., for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

STANDARD BANK V. FREEMAN.

Dr. Rainsford moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £963 14s. 3d., balance of overdraft, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

WRENSCH V. JOOSTEN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £22 3s. 4d., for professional services rendered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

INSOLVENT ESTATE FALSE BAY QUARRY CO. V. HIRSCH.

Mr. Close moved for judgment under Rule 319, for £502 2s. 8d., amount of deficiency as per second liquidation and distribution account of the insolvent estate of the company, of which defendant is one of the partners.

Order granted.

ZEVENFONTEIN ESTATE, LTD. V. VIJJOEN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for £280, with interest from the date of sale of each erf mentioned in the declaration, and 6 per cent. from the date of summons, and costs.

Order granted.

CLARABUT V. CLARABUT.

Judicial separation — Consent paper.

The Court will grant judgment on a deed of separation in terms of a consent paper.

Mr. Close moved for judgment, under Rule 319, on a deed of separation, in terms of consent paper.

Hopley, J., said he saw that a question had been raised recently in the Eastern Districts Court as to whether this was a correct practice.

Mr. Close said that it was an established practice in this Court to give judgment in such a case as this. The defendant had been summoned, and declaration had been filed. A deed of separation had been entered into, and the judgment of the Court was now sought upon it. Counsel cited Powrie v. Powrie (7 C.T.R., 191), Burslem v. Burslem (13 C.T.R., 1,200), and Liebenberg v. Liebenberg (14 C.T.R., 211).

Hopley, J.: This application seems to me to be in accordance with the practice of the Court, and judgment will be given in terms of consent.

MINNAAR V. GAAL.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £568 2s. 9d., less £264 paid on accounts, purchase price of certain granite macadam, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. De Waal applied, under the Act 38, 1864, for the rehabilitation of George Hugh Handler.

Granted.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones applied under section 14 of Act 38, 1864, for the rehabilitation of Morris Breger. Counsel read a letter from the trustee in the insolvency opposing the application, and explaining that there were no funds in the estate to enable him to appear to oppose. Counsel also read an affidavit by the applicant, who said that the trustee was quite mistaken in saying that he (applicant) was not present at the second meeting of creditors. He went to Austria, having been given to understand that his presence was not required at the third meeting. The other partner in the firm remained in the Colony.

Hopley, J.: I think in this case the application should be renewed in six months. If the trustee wishes to oppose, he may then do so by affidavit. The course he has adopted is rather an irregular one; still, he has drawn the Court's attention to the fact that there were irregularities in the keeping of the books, and he accuses the insolvent of having been away from the second meeting. In that he seems to have been incorrect, but he may have meant the third meeting, and he reports the insolvent as having absconded. Leave will be given to apply again in six months, the trustee and the creditors must have notice in the ordinary course, but applicant need not again file an affidavit of full and fair surrender.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied under section 117 of the Ordinance for the rehabilitation of Robert Warner, senior.

Granted.

Mr. Wessels applied for the release of the estate of Pieter Hendrik de Villiers from sequestration.

Granted.

Ex parte LUNTZ BROS.

Release from sequestration — Rehabilitation—Ord. 6, 1843 (Sec. 106).

An insolvent firm had entered into a composition with their creditors—it did not appear whether all the creditors had consented. Thereafter the second meeting of creditors was held, but no trustee was appointed and nothing further was done.

Held, that insolvents were entitled to release from sequestration, but not to rehabilitation under Sec. 106 of the Insolvent Ordinance.

Report of Ex parte Bouwer ("Bowern") 1, S.C. 48, corrected.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan applied for the release of the estate of Luntz Bros. from sequestration, and for their discharge in terms of section 106 of the Ordinance. Counsel cited Russow's case (12 S.C., 172), Bowern's case (1 S.C., 48), and Ex parte Wolff (20 S.C., 200). He said that applicants had entered into a composition with the creditors. A second meeting of creditors was held, but no trustee was appointed.

[Hopley, J.: I could grant you a release from sequestration; I do not think you are entitled to anything beyond that.]

Mr. Buchanan suggested that the Court should allow the release of the estate and reserve any rights of creditors so as to prevent any creditor who may be lying by from taking further proceedings against the applicants.

[Hopley, J.: I do not see how my order can possibly prejudice anybody's rights. I simply release the estate from sequestration, and let others take their own course as to what their rights are. If they have certain rights, then their rights will not be prejudiced, and the present applicants' rights, of course, will not be prejudiced either. You wish the applicants to be entirely rehabilitated. As far as I can see, the cases quoted only go the length of releasing their estates from sequestration.]

Mr. Buchanan: We will be quite willing to accept that, as long as it is understood that it will not prejudice the creditors if any attempt is made by those who have not entered into the composition to enforce their claims in full.

[Hopley, J.: I cannot say that that would be the effect of my order. That is a point that would have to be decided if a creditor came and sought to have a full payment of his debt. It seems to me that on the authorities, as far as they have gone, the applicant is entitled to have his estate released from sequestration. I cannot see that the authorities go so far as to show that he is entitled to rehabilitation, or a discharge in that sense. What the effect may be for the applicants I am not concerned about. An order will be granted for the release of the estate from sequestration.]

At a later stage the papers in the case of "Bowern" were produced, and Hopley, J.: I find that there is some error in the report of this case. In the first place, the name, as I suspected, ought to be "Bouwer." In the second place, there was never an application for anything but a release from sequestration. That was all that was asked for in the petition. The order of the Court is "release from sequestration granted as prayed," so that there was no idea at all of granting a rehabilitation under that. As I suspected all along, it was not a rehabilitation at all. It was simply a release from sequestration, and that was all that, under the circumstances, the Court would be entitled to grant. That is as far as I went this morning. I shall ask the Registrar of the Court to make a note that the case is badly reported. The Bar might do the same, and thus help some future Court in the matter.

BOOTH V. BOOTH.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for leave to the applicant to take out the rule nisi granted by the Court on an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, and for the edictal citation also granted to stand over for the present. Counsel explained that the Court granted a rule nisi and leave to sue by edictal citation at the same time, but it was now found that there would not be time to publish the citation before the return day fixed by the Court.

Hopley, J.: Leave will be granted to take out and serve the rule nisi only at the present time, leaving the matter of citation embraced in the existing order in abeyance pro tem.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

WOLSTENHOLME V. WOLSTEN- { 1907.
HOLME. { Oct. 1st.

Mr. Rowson moved for an amendment of a certain order granted by the Chief Justice in an action brought by the applicant against the respondent for divorce. The Chief Justice granted a decree of divorce, subject to proof of service upon the defendant. It now appeared that the applicant's attorney had inadvertently omitted to give the defendant notice of the proceedings for divorce, and the present application was for the notice served on the respondent on the 24th September to count in lieu of the notice which should have been given before the hearing.

Mr. Justice Hopley: I think you had better mention this application to the Chief Justice, who made the order that you desire to be amended. I certainly do not feel inclined to interfere.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. ESTATE
CLAASSENS.

This was an application upon notice to the respondent estate to show cause why a third arbitrator should not be appointed, under Act 29, 1898, section 8, in connection with certain arbitration proceedings to determine the price to be paid for land acquired by the Railway Department on the route of the Victoria West-Carnarvon railway.

Mr. Howel Jones, K.C., was for applicants; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondents.

Affidavits were read, from which it appeared that the arbitrators appointed by the respective parties had disagreed, and the parties were now unable to agree upon the appointment of an umpire. Each of the parties submitted nominations, and objections were raised by the other side on various grounds.

Order granted, appointing the Hon. J. N. P. de Villiers as third arbitrator, failing him, Mr. J. Collet, and failing both, Mr. A. J. de Villiers, and failing these three, Mr. N. J. S. de Villiers, costs to be costs in the arbitration.

Ex parte ESTATE FRASER.

Mr. Close moved, on the petition of J. B. Cleghorn and G. Jopp, as curators bonis of the estate of Thomas Helieson Fraser, of Cape Town, for leave to surrender the estate as insolvent. Petitioners stated that, owing to the extreme depression, which had caused a falling off of the rents of the property, petitioners had for some considerable time past experienced the greatest difficulty in carrying on the administration of the estate. In June last an application was made to the Court for leave to mortgage or sell certain of the property. This application was granted, but, although every effort was made by petitioners, it was found impossible to raise the amount required on mortgage or to sell property which would sufficiently rid the estate of its liability, and enable petitioners to administer the same in a proper manner. On the 3rd September last a meeting of creditors was held, at which it was proposed to assign the estate. The Standard Bank, which had a claim of £64,000, intimated that they would not agree to the assignment, but that they considered voluntary surrender was the proper course. In view of the position of the estate, petitioners said it seemed advisable that it should be surrendered. Counsel said that the application was brought under section 3 of the Ordinance.

Leave was granted to the curators bonis to surrender the estate, costs of this application to come out of the estate.

Hopley, J. (in answer to counsel) said that the question of the curators' remuneration must come up for determination in the ordinary course.

Ex parte FAGAN

Mr. Swift moved, on behalf of petitioner, who is one of the trustees in the insolvent estate of Mr. C. Barnard, for confirmation of sale of certain ground at Somerset West to petitioner. The co-trustee and the mortgagees consented.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SMIT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for cancellation of a certain mortgage bond hypothecating property in the division of Clanwilliam. Petitioner said that the indebtedness had been paid off, but the bond had been lost or mislaid.

Rule nisi granted, returnable on the 29th October, rule to be served on the executor of the estate of the late J. H. Norgarb, and to be published once in "Ons Land."

Ex parte FERREIRA.

Mr. Toms moved for leave to petitioner, who resides at Knysna, to sue her husband, Cornelius J. Ferreira, in forma pauperis, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Rule nisi granted, subject to certificate by counsel, rule returnable on the 1st November, service to be effected on the father of the respondent, and proof to be given on the return day that the rule has reached respondent.

Ex parte BARTIE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband, John Wm. Bartie, late of Observatory and Kalk Bay, by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Respondent's present whereabouts were unknown.

Hopley, J., commented on the paucity of information in the petition. The respondent, he said, was alleged to have left his wife a few months ago, and there was nothing to show that he intended to desert her. It might be that he was in such a position that he could not return to her, and that he had not maliciously deserted her. It might be, indeed, that he was dead,

Mr. Jones pointed out that the petitioner said that some little time earlier respondent left her, but returned again.

[Hopley, J.: That fact does lend colour to the theory of desertion. I had overlooked that portion of the petition.]

Leave granted to sue by edictal citation, citation returnable on the 1st April, 1908, personal service, failing which, publication in the "Gazette," and in the weekly editions of the "Cape Times" and "S.A. News" once every month for the next four months.

In re BRITISH STEAM LAUNDRY, LTD.
(IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Wallach moved for confirmation of the official liquidator's first and final report. The report had duly lain for inspection, and no objection had been raised thereto.

Report confirmed, company dissolved, and official liquidator's fee fixed at ten guineas.

In re PETRUSVILLE PROSPECTING SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. Wallach presented the first report of the official liquidator, and applied for the usual order.

Ordered that the report lie for inspection for 14 days at the Master's Office and the liquidator's office, one publication of notice in the "Midland News" and "Oms Land."

Ex parte ESTATE HAYWARD.

Dr. Greer moved, on the petition of the executor testamentary, for an order authorising transfer of certain property in accordance with an agreement entered into between the parties concerned. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted as prayed, subject to the Master's approval of the terms of the bond to be passed, and (Mr. G. N. Hayward appointed curator ad litem for the purpose of assisting the minors to pass the bond.

WILKINSON V. WILKINSON.

Mr. Inchbold moved for a certain rule nisi interdicting respondent, Peter W. J. Wilkinson, from dealing with certain property in the joint estate of applicant and respondent, to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

KOENIG V. FRIEDMAN.

FRIEDMAN V. KOENIG.

Mr. Toms appeared for Koenig (plaintiff in the action); Mr. W. Porter

Buchanan, K.O., appeared for Friedman (defendant in the action).

In the first matter, the plaintiff asked leave to have a Commissioner appointed to sit at Kimberley to take his evidence and that of five other persons.

In the other matter, the defendant asked leave to have a Commission appointed to take his evidence in German South-West Africa.

It was stated that the amount in dispute between the parties was very small, viz., about £48.

Hopley, J., said he thought it would be much better if the evidence could be given before a Commission sitting within the jurisdiction, say at Upington.

Mr. Buchanan did not object to this proposal, but he said that he did not see how, in that event, the case could be heard next term. He thought the case had better stand over until the February term.

Mr. Toms said that there had already been considerable delay.

Both applications were granted. Mr. F. J. Collison, barrister-at-law, was appointed commissioner to take the evidence of Koenig and his witnesses at Kimberley, and the R.M. of Upington, and failing him, the Assistant R.M., commissioner, to take the evidence of Friedman, costs of both applications to be costs in the cause. The case was ordered to be taken off the roll for the 15th October, so as to be set down for some other convenient date.

Ex parte LIQUIDATORS S.A. CO-OPERATIVE DAIRY CO.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Peter Davidson and Reginald Barker, as official liquidators of the South African Co-operative Dairy Company, for leave to enter into a certain arrangement for the letting of the company's premises and machinery. Petitioners said that among the assets were creamery buildings and machinery situated at Adelaide, which were now shut down, business having ceased, and proceedings were being taken for the compulsory winding-up of the company. On the 23rd September a meeting of former shareholders and cream suppliers of the company was held for the purpose of considering some mode of continuing the dairy business at Adelaide pending the final liquidation of the company. As a result of that meeting, petitioners had received an application from the former directors for the hire of the dairy premises and plant until the liquidation shall have been completed. As the premises were not at present in use, and as it would be in the interests of the creditors of the company that petitioners should be in a position to dispose of the concern as one in which business is being carried on, petitioners were, subject to the Court's sanction, agreeable to let the premises and plant as aforesaid. They asked the Court for some direction as to the rent to be charged to the lessees. Mr. De Villiers said he recognised the difficulty of asking the Court to fix the rent.

Hopley, J.: I quite agree that it is a most desirable thing to do, instead of having the plant lying idle all the while. I do not, however, see how I can fix the rent. I think the best thing would be for the liquidators to make the best bargain they can. An order will be granted as prayed, the liquidators to arrive at the amount to be charged for rent with the lessees, and in the event of not being able to agree they may apply to the Court, giving full information.

Ex parte LANG.

Dr. Greer moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Frederick J. C. Lang, hotel manager, Claremont, for the attachment of certain moneys in the hands of Christopher Brady, attorney, Cape Town, due to one Samuel Lang, pending an action to be instituted by petitioner to recover £20 balance due to him from the said Samuel Lang for commission. Respondent was stated to be in the Transvaal.

Order granted for the attachment of the moneys in the hands of Mr. Brady, as stated, ad fundandam jurisdictionem, the said moneys to be placed in the hands of the Registrar of this Court, pending an action to be instituted, and leave granted to sue respondent by edictal citation, personal service to be effected, returnable on the 1st November.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REVIEW.

REX V. JOSEPHS. { 1907.
Oct. 8th.

Liquor—Act 28 of 1898, Sec. 4—
Voters' list—Native voter.

As soon as a voters' list has been compiled and initialled by the Civil Commissioner, any aboriginal native, whose name appeared thereon, is entitled to be supplied with liquor, even before the said list is printed.

Hopley, J.: A case came before me some time ago from the Magistrate's Court in Namaqualand, of Rex v. John Josephs, a coloured labourer, who was charged with contravening section 4 of the Act 28, 1898, in that he procured, as agent on behalf of one Basson, a Damara, some brandy, which he bought or received in contravention of the terms of the liquor licence. He pleaded not guilty, but was found guilty. It would appear that Josephs himself is entitled to buy brandy, and the point the Magistrate had to consider was whether at the time Basson was entitled also to have brandy. Basson, it would appear from the evidence, had not been on the voters' roll for 1905, and the voters' roll for 1907 had been completed by the Magistrate, and initialled by him, but had not yet been printed at the date when the brandy was supplied to Josephs, admittedly, for Basson. Basson is a smelter at some copper works, and had been put upon the voters' roll for 1907. As I say, this voters' roll had been considered by the Magistrate and initialled by him, while Civil Commissioner, so that it was all ready except the printing. The Magistrate held in those circumstances that as in an election—as far as I can follow his reasons—a printed copy of the voters' roll would have been necessary for the purpose of carrying out that section, and as no printed copy had yet been made, Basson, therefore, was not yet upon the voters' roll, and not yet entitled to buy brandy, and that, therefore, Josephs must be convicted. As far as I can see, on looking into the Act, the voters' roll was a voters' roll for 1907, and the Act said nothing about the printing to make it a completed roll. The conviction, I thought, was wrong, and I referred the papers to the Attorney-General, who, after looking into the matter, has sent me his opinion, and his view of the matter is that the roll was a completed roll, that the mere fact that it was not printed made no difference, that, therefore, Basson was entitled to buy brandy, at the time being on the voters' roll for 1907, and that in that case Josephs ought not to be convicted. The conviction must, therefore, be quashed.

ADMISSIONS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of David Johannes Philippus Scholtz as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Ventersdorp.

Mr. Toms moved for the admission of George Alfred Tunbridge as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Cradock.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

HARGREAVES AND NOURSE V. SEKHOSANA.

Mr. P. T. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £150, with interest at 10 per cent. from the 22nd July, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

WESTERN WINE, BRANDY, AND SPIRIT CO., LTD. V. MOORE.

Mr. Struben moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment for £11 and taxed costs.

Order granted.

PRINCE, VINTCENT AND CO. V. SIEFF.

Order granted.

FRANK V. ROGERS.

Dr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £190, with interest from the 13th June, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

HOCKLEY V. TAYLOR, TRADING AS TAYLOR AND CO.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

EDWARDS V. KITCH.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Wynberg, for £9 4s., due on a promissory note, and £2 15s. 7d., taxed costs, and 12s. 6d., messenger's fees, and for a certain inheritance derived by defendant under the will of his father to be attached.

Order granted as prayed.

Some time later the defendant appeared, and asked for leave to reopen the matter as he had been under a misapprehension as to the time. He said he desired to have a suspension of execution, as he only received £5 a month from the estate, and he was without employment.

Hopley, J., requested the parties to try to come to an arrangement, and ordered the matter to stand over.

At a later stage the matter was again mentioned, and the Court granted a suspension of the order already made, upon payment of 10s. a month by the executor of the estate, with leave to the plaintiff to move the Court, when so advised, for an increased order. Defendant was meanwhile interdicted from disposing of his interest in the inheritance until the debt and costs be satisfied.

HOLMES V. MARCUS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £30, less £5 paid on account, with interest, bond due by reason of notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

SMUTS V. BEYERS.

Mr. Ingram moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £250, with interest from the 1st January, 1907, bond due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

STANDARD BUILDINGS, LTD. (JOHANNESBURG) V. WHEELER.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 32nd for £905 8s. 3d., in terms of certain agreement of lease, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Payne applied under section 117 of the Insolvent Ordinance, as amended by section 14, Act 36, 1884, for the discharge of Lipman Abroms and Abel Kapelus, trading as Abroms and Kapelus.

Discharge granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE { 1907.
KOPELOWITZ. } Oct. 8th.

Mr. Toms moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Alfred Wills and Abbott, merchants, Cape Town, for the appointment of a curator bonis in the insolvent estate of Arthur Solomon Kopelowitz, general dealer, Montagu, with power to carry on the business and dispose of the perishables.

Order granted, appointing Mr. Shaw as curator bonis, with powers as prayed.

IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE AND SUPPLY CO., LTD. V. DISTRIBUTING SYNDICATE FOR COLD STORAGE.

This was an application for an extension of time within which to prosecute an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Maasodorp, sitting as a Divisional Court.

Mr. McGregor, K.C., was for applicants; Mr. Uppington was for respondents.

It appeared that respondents raised no objection to an extension, but desired that certain special cases should also be heard at the same time as the appeal. To this applicants raised no objection.

By consent, an extension was granted until the ensuing term, costs to be costs in the cause.

Hopley, J., said that it would be left to subsequent negotiations to arrange for the other matters to be heard at the same time as the appeal.

Ex parte ESTATE BASSARDIEN.

Dr. Greer moved, on the petition of the executor testamentary, for leave to mortgage certain estate property, in order to satisfy a bill of costs, and for an order releasing petitioner from his office as executor.

Leave granted to the executor to further mortgage the property as prayed, and ordered that he be hereafter relieved of his trust.

Ex parte BECHUANALAND PRESS, LTD.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute appointing J. P. Frylingh as official liquidator of the company, and applied for the appointment of Messrs. Syfret, Godlonton, and Low, attorneys, to assist the liquidator under section 151 of the Companies' Act.

Order granted.

Ex parte WESSELS.

Dr. Greer moved, on behalf of petitioner, a spinster, of Cape Town, for leave to sue, in forma pauperis, the estate of the late James Jacobus Gabriel, for damages for seduction. Counsel cited Carleise v. Estate De Vries (16, C.T.R., 787).

Subject to counsel's certificate of probabilis causa, rule granted, returnable on the 22nd October.

MAHOMED V. WITTON.

This was an application calling upon respondent to show cause why applicant should not be granted leave to sue him by edictal citation for £14 19s. 10d., and why certain immovable property should not be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

Dr. Greer was for applicant, a general merchant, of Maitland; Mr. Toms was for respondent, who resides in Johannesburg.

Affidavits having been read, counsel were heard in argument.

Dr. Greer cited Wolfson v. Crowe (14, C.T.R., 682).

Mr. Toms cited Rogerson v. Meyer and Berning (2 Menzies, 28).

Hopley, J.: In this matter it would appear that some moneys had got into the hands of the agents for the respondents under rather peculiar circumstances. Applicant had been sued in the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Woodstock, and, as far as I can see, on the affidavits, entirely without his knowledge, the summons having been pinned on the last known place of residence, judgment was obtained against him by default, and the first he knew of any of the proceedings was that some of his goods were attached in a place which they were quite able to find, and in which he was then carrying on business. One would have thought that if any little trouble had been taken in the first instance, the man could have been served at this address, so that there would not be judgment by default. Then, under duress of the judgment, and under protest, the amount of the judgment and costs, some £14 odd, was paid over to the then plaintiff in the Magistrate's Court. But the defendant at once caused steps to have the case re-opened, and upon the rehearing of the case with all the additional evidence adduced, which ought to have been adduced in the first instance before the Magistrate, if the case had been properly brought on, the Magistrate determined that the merits of the case were in favour of the defendant, and reversed his judgment. One would have thought then that the agents would have handed back to applicant at once the money so obtained by them, because the whole thing meant that by the judgment they had obtained moneys under duress, which ought never to have been obtained by them. But, instead of doing so, they have retained the moneys for some reason which I cannot understand. Now, there is the present application, because the respondent is out of the jurisdiction. It is said by the applicant that the respondent has property which is within the jurisdiction, and, unfortunately, he mentions property as being immovable property, and it is said that there is no such immovable property, and that, therefore, no such jurisdiction can be available against him. Well, that is a question of fact. It may be that he has no immovable property. Then will come the further question: has he any goods or movable property under this Court's jurisdiction which may be attached so as to found jurisdiction? It would appear that he has an agent here who says that he is entitled to collect rents for him and other sums of money, and, therefore, it would seem most highly probable that he has from time to time this property within the jurisdiction, and that his agent handles that property in this jurisdiction, and that, therefore, if the process of the Court were now sought to be employed, it can be obtained by bringing this man, who was formerly under its jurisdiction, again within the jurisdiction. Certain immovable property is mentioned in the petition. As far as getting jurisdiction over the respondent is concerned, I think it would be cheaper and more just to the parties to make a more general order, so as to include all property or goods of the respondent within the jurisdiction, because, as far as I can see, it would only add to the costs if one were simply to grant an order attaching the property described in the petition, which may or may not be in the jurisdiction. I think it cannot be to the prejudice of the respondent if a more general order were made to include any property in the jurisdiction. The Court will, therefore, grant leave to sue by edictal citation as prayed, provided that the jurisdiction of this Court can be established over the respondent, and for the purpose of establishing such jurisdiction the Court will grant leave that any immovable property of the respondent within this jurisdiction be attached to found such jurisdiction, failing any immovable property that any goods belonging to the respondent be attached to found jurisdiction. If such goods be attached, and the jurisdiction be founded, then the costs of this application shall be costs in the cause; if no goods can be found, and no jurisdiction can be established, then it will be clear that the applicant has come here entirely wrongly, and that if he wish to sue the respondent he must sue him in his own forum, and in that case the applicant would have to pay the costs of this application.

Dr. Greer: I take it that "goods" would include any moneys in the hands of respondent's agent?

Hopley, J.: It would include goods or money. The citation will be returnable on November 8, and there must be personal service on respondent, or on his attorney authorised thereto. I would advise the parties to try to save expense as far as possible, because it is quite clear that this small matter of £14 odd may run into some hundreds.

Ex parte ESTATE GOOSEN.

Mr. Coenradie moved, on the petition of the executors testamentary of the late Johannes Cornelis Goosen for confirmation of a sale by public auction of certain ground in the village of Ladismith to one of the petitioners.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE LATE DU PREEZ.

Mr. Pohl moved for directions as to security of legacy, to enable transfer of certain property to be passed.

Order granted, authorising transfer to be passed, subject to £400 being paid over to the Board of Executors, or the General Estate and Orphan Chamber, or the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Co., the interest during the lifetime of the first petitioner to be paid to her, and at her death the principal to be paid to Maria Hannah Fourie (born Du Preez).

Ex parte HENNINGS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to petitioner to raise a loan of £220 on certain life assurance policy, which he had ceded for the benefit of his wife and children. The wife and one of the children consented. Petitioner desired to apply the proceeds to the maintenance and better education of the children.

Order granted authorising the raising of a loan of £220 on the policy, such amount to be expended on the education of the minors, and to be paid to Messrs. Hennings, Stephen H. Hugo, and Willem Hovy jointly; they, or the survivors of them, are authorised to spend the same on the said object until the whole be exhausted, payments to be made by them jointly.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE VISSER.

Mr. Pohl moved, on the petition of the trustee, for an order authorising the amendment of a certain order of sequestration, by changing the insolvent's name therein from Jan Hendrik Visser to Jan Hendrik Jasper Visser.

Order granted as prayed.

UNITED TOBACCO COMPANIES (SOUTH),
LTD. V. CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL.

Mr. Upington moved for a certain award of arbitrators under the Land Clauses Arbitration Act to be made a Rule of Court, with costs. Counsel said that the amount awarded was £1,300.

Award made a Rule of Court, with costs, subject to filing of proof of appointment of the arbitrators.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE VAN DEN HEEVER.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, K.C., moved, on the petition of the trustee, for confirmation of the liquidation account and plan of distribution. Counsel explained that the insolvent notified certain objections to the Master, and opportunity had been given her to proceed with her objections, but she had not taken proceedings, although due notice had been given to her of the present motion, which was brought under section 112 of the Ordinance.

Account confirmed, costs out of the estate.

Ex parte KRYNAUW.

Mr. Swift moved for leave to the petitioner to sue by edictal citation one Theodore E. J. Pienaar for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £600. Respondent was believed to have gone to Portuguese West Africa.

Ordered to stand over for further information, with leave to renew the application on Tuesday next.

At a later stage, Mr. Swift again mentioned the matter, and gave further details as to the circumstances under which respondent had left the Victoria West district and gone to Lobito Bay.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted and property attached, citation returnable on the 12th January, personal service, if possible, failing which, publication in the "Gazette" and "Victoria West Messenger," and a marked copy of the "Gazette" to be addressed to the defendant at Poste Restante. Lobito Bay, costs to be costs in the cause.

CROZIER V. CROZIER.

Dr. Greer moved, on behalf of plaintiff in the action (Johanna Wilhelmina Crozier), for leave to effect substituted service on the defendant of an order for restitution of conjugal rights. It appeared that defendant had removed from the address in Montreal, Canada, at which he had been residing, and that his present whereabouts were unknown.

The return day of the order of restitution were extended, defendant to return to plaintiff on or before the 31st December, failing which, to show cause on the 12th January; personal service, failing which, one publication in the "Gazette" and a Montreal paper.

Ex parte MILNE.

Mr. Inchbold moved for leave to applicant to sue in forma pauperis James Meredith Maurice for £500 damages, for malicious prosecution and defamation of character. In argument, counsel cited Chambers v. Chambers (4 C.T.R., 277), ex parte Du Ploy (3 C.T.R., 11), Watermeyer's Executrix v. Watermeyer (3 C.T.R., 7), and Shakofco v. Noorden (1 C.T.R., 121).

Hopley, J.: In this case the petitioner seems, besides having been a teacher in a mission school, to have been a book-keeper in some confidential relation to a gentleman called Col. Maurice, who seems to carry on business as a timber merchant and a general business at Portland, in the Krynauw district. In the course of his duties Col. Maurice discovered, as he says, an absence of money which ought to have been accounted for by the petitioner, and also discovered that some of the books had been mutilated. He laid a charge of embezzlement against petitioner, which, after inquiry, was dismissed by the Magistrate, and the Attorney-General declined to prosecute. It is said that this was a malicious proceeding on the part of Col. Maurice, but if the allegations in the affidavits of Col. Maurice and somebody else, who supported him and who audited the books, are to be believed, whether Col. Maurice was actuated by the kindest of feelings or not, still no action for malicious prosecution would lie, because there would be reasonable cause for causing a legal inquiry to be had into the conduct of this man. Mr. Inchbold, in applying for leave to applicant to bring a suit as a pauper, says that, even if there were reasonable and probable cause for Col. Maurice in this action in laying this charge, still Col. Maurice went beyond what was allowed to him by law in openly stating that this man he was then prosecuting was a scoundrel, or words to that effect, and he says that, therefore, for defamation he has an action. Now, he asks that he may be allowed to bring an action as a pauper. I am not saying that he has not an action for defamation, but no special damages have resulted. He was suspended for a time from the discharge of his duties, but apparently he is back again and he is earning his own salary and he is still at his old position as a teacher of the mission school. His position with Col. Maurice, of course, he has lost, but apparently it is through some fault of his own. Now, in the absence of special damage of that sort, and in view of the fact that petitioner still retains his position as a teacher at this school, earning £5 a month and contributions of something like £1 a month—I do not suppose he would exaggerate the amount of the contributions, and that is the value he himself admits—and also in view of the fact that, if he has not lodgings provided for him, in a place like that he would be able to obtain cheap lodgings, I am asked to say that this man is a pauper within the meaning of Rule of Court 125, and that he should be allowed to bring an action for his alleged grievance as a pauper. I do not think that under such circumstances as these the man is probably a pauper. He may not have £10 worth of goods, he has the certificate of two householders who have given their affidavits, but still at the same time I am not by any manner of means satisfied that he could not raise £10 wherewith to bring an action. The Court does not wish to shut out a real pauper from the remedies to which he is entitled, but I think when a man comes and asks to leave to sue as a pauper he must prove to the satisfaction of the Court that he is a pauper. On the facts before me, I cannot say that the applicant has shown that he is a pauper. The application is refused.

Ex parte ESTATE THEUNISSEN.

Mr. De Villiers moved on behalf of the petitioner, Johan C. Theunissen, of Loxton, for an order confirming certain expenditure on building a house for the minor children of Martinus W. Theunissen, of whom he is the guardian.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further inquiry, and for a further report by the Master.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

WOLSTENHOLME V. WOL- { 1907.
STENHOLME. { Oct. 15th.

Mr. Rowson moved for a variation of the order granted by the Court in certain divorce proceedings brought by applicant against respondent. The Court had granted a decree, but subject to satisfactory proof to the Registrar that defendant had been served with proper notice of set down and trial for the 2nd August. It appeared that, by an inadvertence, notice had not been given for the trial on the 2nd August, though notice had been given for the 12th July, and application was now made for substitution of the 24th September, in the order of Court. Notice had been given to defendant of the present application.

De Villiers, C.J.: I don't think an order should be made in the form in which it is proposed. It is quite clear that the defendant failed to enter appearance, and allowed judgment to go by default, and it is quite clear also that now, after due notice of this motion, he does not come forward to resist. I may take it, therefore, even if due notice had been given to him to plead at the trial on the 2nd August, he would not have appeared. Under such circumstances there is no injustice done to him by granting a decree of divorce with costs, without the condition attached to the original order, but such costs not to include any costs incurred subsequent to the 2nd August, nor any costs connected with the notice of set down.

STEYTLER V. STEYTLER.

This was an application brought by defendant in the suit upon notice calling upon her husband to show cause why he should not pay to her a further sum of £300 towards the costs of defending the action, why he should not furnish the applicant with exact particulars as to the exact place or places at which each separate act of adultery is alleged to have been committed, and why the set-down of the case for the 22nd October should not be discharged, and the case set down for trial on the 12th November next.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the parties, who belong to Ceres, are married in community. Respondent had paid over £50. Applicant's attorneys estimated that the expenses of the defence would be something like £400, as over a score of witnesses from various parts of the Colony would be called. The particulars of the alleged misconduct which had been supplied said that in certain months mentioned, defendant committed adultery with parties whose names were given, at and near Ceres, and in Mitchell's Pass. It would be impossible, applicant said, for her to be ready with her defence on the 22nd October. Respondent submitted that the particulars given in the pleadings were sufficient for the purposes of the defence, and said that he was unable to make any further payment towards the defence.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Bisset), was for applicant; Mr. Benjamin, K.C., was for respondent.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that the details given as to the alleged adultery were vague and embarrassing, and that applicant was entitled to more exact particulars. Counsel mentioned Williams v. Shaw (4 E.D.C., 105) and Hills v. Colonial Government, and cited Sachs v. Spielmann (58 Law Times, 102), Spedding v. Fitzpatrick (59 Law Times, 492), and Bristol Medical and General Life Assurance, Limited, v. Britannia Fire Association and Whinney (59 Law Times, 868). Counsel, in conclusion, urged that the amount which had been paid over was altogether insufficient for the purposes of the case.

Mr. Benjamin contended that it was impossible to give further information of the acts of adultery than were given. The defendant denied that she had committed adultery. With regard to the necessity for the amendment of the law to enable fuller particulars to be given, counsel quoted the case of Davis v. McDonald (22 Supreme Court Reports, page 157). He contended that there was no reason why the case should not go on on the original day on which it was set down for. He did not see the necessity for bringing 23 witnesses from all over the Colony to disprove the charge of adultery. The plaintiff did not take any steps to divorce his wife until she applied for a judicial separation. With regard to the contribution to costs, £50 was ample. The witnesses necessary for the defence were the defendant herself and those she was accused of committing adultery with. They were married in community, but the wife only brought about £20 a year into the estate.

Mr. Schreiner, in reply, said that counsel had considered the question of the number of witnesses, and probably knew more about the necessities of the case than did Mr. Benjamin.

De Villiers, C.J., said that, presuming that the defendant was not guilty, what was the necessity for the exact place where the adultery was alleged to have been committed being given.

Mr. Schreiner replied that the charge was laid against defendant, but she had to know where the offences were alleged to have occurred, and she could refute them, and bring evidence to the contrary. The defendant would be greatly prejudiced if this case was not postponed, whilst the plaintiff would not be inconvenienced at all if it was.

De Villiers, C.J.: "It is quite clear that this is a case of considerable importance to both parties, and certainly of great importance to the defendant, who is now the applicant, and whose honour is at stake, and who denies the acts of adultery alleged in the declaration. As the parties are married in community of property, I think she is entitled to a larger sum than £50, which has been granted to her. At the same time, I do not think she is entitled to the sum claimed. The amount which the husband should be compelled to furnish to his wife should be the least possible amount necessary for her to proceed with her suit. I think, if in addition to the £50, if she receives £75, it will be sufficient for the purpose. I cannot imagine that such a large number of witnesses are necessary, especially if the respondent gives the present applicant further particulars, as I intend ordering he shall. The Court will order that the respondent pay the applicant £75, and that respondent furnish applicant with particulars as to the places where the acts of adultery are alleged to have been committed. As to the time when the acts of adultery were committed, it might be very difficult for witnesses to give exact dates, but there should be no difficulty for the witnesses being able to state the exact place or places where adultery was committed, and the Court will therefore order that the present respondent furnish the applicant with those particulars. The costs will be costs in the cause. As to the postponement, I do not think there will be an injustice if the case goes on on the day originally fixed. The matter has been a considerable time before the Court, and by this time applicant must know all the witnesses she will require, and I cannot imagine there will be any necessity for a further postponement beyond the day already fixed. That is a convenient day for all parties, and I think the respondent is ready, because sufficient notice was given to the applicant."

Mr. Schreiner asked the Court to give an order that the particulars be furnished within 24 hours.

Mr. Benjamin said that as far as the places were concerned, he intended to define them in words as nearly as possible. He did not intend to point out the exact spots in the neighbourhood. He did not know if it would be possible to furnish details within 24 hours.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then if you cannot you must have a postponement of the trial.]

Could your lordship not extend the time to 48 hours?

[De Villiers, C.J.: well, 48 hours ought to be enough.]

The Court ordered that the sum of £75 be paid within 24 hours, and that all the particulars be supplied within 48 hours.

ESTERHUIZEN V. ESTERHUIZEN.

Mr. Toms moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's failure to comply with an order of the Court ordering the restitution of conjugal rights.

Granted.

HARVEY V. HARVEY.

Mr. Inchbold moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's failing to comply with an order of the Court calling on defendant to show cause why an order for divorce should not be granted.

Counsel mentioned that when the previous application was before the Court, Mr. Justice Hopley raised the question as to whether the Court had jurisdiction to set aside a marriage settlement made in England or not.

The case was directed to stand over in order to be mentioned before Mr. Justice Hopley.

KENNEDY V. KENNEDY.

Mr. Struben moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's failure to comply with an order for restitution of conjugal rights.

Ex parte LEVINY.

Mr. Philipson Stowe moved for an extension of the return day of citation pending a possible arrangement.

Ex parte MAXWELL AND EARP.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order for leave to attach a certain inheritance.

Counsel stated that the respondent, who was now resident in German South-West Africa, owed the applicants a sum of £2,200, and other clients £670. He had through the death of his mother come in for a certain inheritance, left him by his father, and this application was for leave to attach that inheritance.

An order was granted calling on the respondent to show cause why the applicant should not attach the money, and interdicting the Master or executors from parting with any of the inheritance pending an action to recover same.

Ex parte ROBERTS.

Mr. Coenradie moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis. Counsel mentioned that in 1906 applicant was in the employment of B. Lawrence and Co., as a commercial traveller. In February of that year, whilst in the execution of his duties, he was injured by being thrown from a cart by one of the boys in the employ of B. Lawrence and Co. Under the Workman's Compensation Act applicant recovered £150 from his employers. From this amount B. Lawrence and Co., Ltd., deducted a sum of £2 1s. 11d., made up as follows: "To cash collected from T. M. Morrison and not paid in, £1 5s. 11d.; ditto Young and Co., 13s. 6d." Petitioner denied the allegations that these amounts were not paid in by him, and contended that the statement "and not paid in" constituted a libel upon him, and B. Lawrence and Co. contended that petitioner had collected the moneys, and instead of accounting for it had retained the amount, and was, therefore, guilty of a criminal act. Petitioner wished to claim damages for libel, and applied for leave to do so in forma pauperis.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think I can give your client some advice, and that is not to throw good money after bad, and press for a libel suit. The words "cash collected for Morrison and not accounted for," does not constitute a libel. Where is the libel? A man may forget to pay in money. I cannot see where the libel is. According to his own statement, he makes out no case whatever. Whether counsel is going to certify it or not, I cannot say, but on the petition as it stands there is no case. I cannot give leave to sue in forma pauperis.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN HEERDEN.

Mr. Toms moved for leave to sell certain property.
Granted.

Ex parte ESTATE COURTIS.

Mr. Close moved, on the petition of the executors testamentary, for leave to raise a loan of £375 on security of estate property in Cape Town in order to pay for necessary repairs, rates, and taxes, and other purposes. The widow was willing to allow the interest to be deducted from her income from the estate. The heirs, all majors, consented.
Order granted.

ALEXANDER V. FRIEDLANDER AND ANOTHER.

This was an application for an order directing the respondents to withdraw from operation a certain writ of execution issued by C. and A. Friedlander, in the matter of Peregrino v. Alexander, and to instruct the Deputy Sheriff of the Cape to release the applicant's goods and chattels from attachment by virtue of the said writ.

Applicant's case was that some little time ago the respondent Peregrino obtained costs against him on an order of the Court, C. and A. Friedlander being Peregrino's attorneys. Before he could pay the said costs to Friedlander, he was served by the messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Cape Town, with an order granted by Mr. Justice Hopley on Friday, the 20th of September, attaching the moneys in his (applicant's) hands, and declaring the same executable in satisfaction of a certain judgment obtained by one S. Hoffman against the respondent Peregrino in the R.M.'s Court, Cape Town. On the 25th September, applicant showed the order to C. Friedlander, who made himself acquainted with the whole of the facts of the matter. In terms of the order he (Alexander) settled with A. J. MacCallum (the solicitor to the said Hoffman). Notwithstanding the fact that the respondents knew that he had been restrained as aforesaid, they had wrongfully, unlawfully, and maliciously proceeded to issue a writ against him for recovery of the amounts aforesaid, upon which the Deputy Sheriff had seized his goods and chattels. Applicant had suffered, and was suffering serious and great damage in consequence of the attachment of his goods and chattels.

Respondents, C. and A. Friedlander, in answering affidavits, said that they consented to a postponement of an application they were bringing against applicant for costs of the previous matter between him and Peregrino on the applicant agreeing to settle the costs with the respondents. Subsequently, Friedlander proposed to have the bill of costs taxed, but consented to put this off on applicant paying £5 on account of his indebtedness for costs. They had not acted with malice. Deponents said that there was no fund belonging to Peregrino in the hands of applicant. In the matter of Hoffman v. Peregrino, the judgment and costs amounted to about £20.

The replying affidavit of Peregrino stated that he desired to withdraw the writ of execution against the applicant.

Mr. Upington for applicant. Mr. Benjamin, K.C. (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones), for respondents. F. Z. S. Peregrino in default.

Mr. Benjamin said that, under those circumstances, C. and A. Friedlander could not press for a continuance of the writ, but he submitted that they should not be called upon to pay costs of this application. If anyone should pay the costs, that person was Peregrino. Under the order of the Court, the applicant was not bound to pay over any portion of the amount he owed for costs in the matter of Peregrino against himself. He was not holding funds for Peregrino, but he owed a sum of money for costs in proceedings between him and Peregrino. Now Peregrino had gone behind Friedlanders' backs, and had filed an affidavit on the other side.

Mr. Upington said that the applicant had an amount of money which he owed for costs. Applicant said it was £25, and the respondents said it was more. C. and A. Friedlander, before they caused the writ of execution to be issued, were fully aware of the order of Mr. Justice Hopley. They ostensibly acted for their client, Peregrino, but, as a matter of fact, they appeared to have been acting solely in their own interests. Peregrino, there was no doubt, was a man of straw. The effect of making Peregrino responsible for the costs would be to mulct the applicant in costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is quite clear that, after the attachment by order of Mr. Justice Hopley had taken place, this writ of execution ought not to have been issued. But it is not equally clear to my mind that Mr. Friedlander fully understood that the order of Mr. Justice Hopley referred to the same fund which he wished to attach by virtue of the writ of execution. The order declared the sum of £25 or thereabouts in the hands of L. Alexander executable in satisfaction of the judgment obtained by plaintiff against defendant. Well, it would not be clear from that order that it applied only to a debt for costs alleged to be owing by Mr. Alexander to Mr. Peregrino. The writ of execution should, of course, be discharged, but the question is now who should pay costs of the present application? Well, Peregrino, of course, is liable, but I do not see upon what principle the attorneys who acted for him should be held liable unless there is proof of malice on their part. At present, I am not prepared to decide this question upon motion that there was malice. If the applicant can prove malice on the part of the attorneys he can bring a fresh action. If he cannot get his costs out of Peregrino, and if he can prove that the attorneys who acted for Peregrino, maliciously issued a writ of execution knowing the money had already been paid over, possibly he might succeed as against Friedlander. But I do not think that, upon motion, the Court would be justified now in deciding that there was any malice on the part of Friedlander in acting for the interests of his client, Peregrino. The Court will, therefore, simply order that the writ of execution be discharged, and that the applicant's costs be paid by the respondent Peregrino.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an interdict to restrain the respondent Johannes Jacobus Swart from dealing with an inheritance he is entitled to under the will of his brother, pending an action at law.

An order was granted calling on the respondent to show cause on November 5 why the executors of the estate of Daniel Andries Swart should not be restricted from paying to respondent or anybody else the inheritance, or transferring any land, pending a further order of the Court. In case transfer of land has been effected, to restrain the trustees from paying to respondent any of the proceeds, pending a further order of the Court.

MATRIMONIAL CASE.

BROWNELL V. BROWNELL.

This was an action brought by Magdalena Maria Brownell, of Worcester, against her husband, Alonza Aaron Brownell, described as a blacksmith, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. M. Bisset was for plaintiff; defendant, who was sued by edictal citation, did not appear. Defendant was stated to be resident in Calgary, Province of Alberta, Canada.

Magdalena M. Brownell (the plaintiff) said she was married to defendant at Cape Town on the 17th March, 1902. They lived together at Salt River until May, 1903, when defendant left her. She had not since heard from the defendant. He left without giving her warning, except that he said he was going up the coast. He gave no intimation that he was going to Canada. She had written to her husband, care of Robert McClay, at Vancouver, but had received no reply. There was one child of the marriage. She desired to apply for a sum of £3 a month as maintenance of the child.

Decree of restitution granted, with costs, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th January, 1908, failing which to show cause on the 1st February, why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs, and plaintiff declared entitled to custody of the minor, and why the defendant should not contribute £3 a month towards the maintenance of the minor, rule to be served in the same manner as directed in regard to previous process.

APPEALS.

INSOLVENT ESTATE SHER AND CO. V. COHEN.

INSOLVENT ESTATE SHER V. KELLY.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Calvinia in an action brought by the applicants against respondent to recover £8 13s. 3d. for goods sold and delivered.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the applicants; Mr. Alexander was for respondents.

Defendant in the Court below had admitted the correctness of the amount, but pleaded a set-off against the whole amount. The Magistrate gave judgment of absolution from the instance.

Mr. Jones having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J., said that before he heard Mr. Alexander he would like to hear the other appeal brought by the estate against one Kelly,

The case of Insolvent Estate of H. D. Sher and Co. v. Kelly was then called. In this case the trustees sued Daniel Kelly to recover a sum of £9 14s. 1d. for goods sold and delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendant. The defendant was represented by Mr. Yates, who pleaded a settlement, and admitted that the goods charged for were purchased, and the Magistrate granted absolution from the instance, with costs.

Mr. Jones, who appeared for plaintiffs, said that this case differed in this essential from the other case, that there could not be set up any concurrence on the part of Sher to the arrangement alleged to have been made in this case. Fifty pounds was owed by Kelly to the partnership, and Kerbel went to collect it, and he got a cheque for £75, £25 of which was apparently an advance to himself. Kelly stated that Kerbel gave him a promissory note for £25, thereby putting the case clearly that it was a promissory note by Kerbel and not by Sher and Co. Kerbel in his evidence stated that when he went to Kelly with the account and asked Kelly to give him £25 as he was in want of money, and signed a promissory note for it, Kerbel did not say that he had borrowed the money on behalf of the firm.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it quite clear that Kelly knew that Kerbel was acting on his own behalf and not on that of the firm?]

Mr. Jones said that that fact was not quite clear. Kelly said in his evidence that he was dealing with Kerbel as a partner of Sher and Co. Even if it was shown that the partnership got anything from the transaction, that would not make the transaction binding on the partnership. Counsel quoted the case of Guardian Insurance Co. v. Lovemore (5 Juta, page 206) in support of the contention.

[What is there to show that they were not dealing with the partnership?]

Mr. Jones: The fact that Kerbel borrowed the money for himself.

[How is that shown?]

The fact that he said he was hard up.

[Did not Kelly think he was acting for the firm?]

Mr. Watermeyer, who appeared for the defendant, contended that Kelly's transaction was with the firm, as he had lent the firm money before.

De Villiers, C.J.: I shall first deal with the case against Cohen. It is quite clear from the evidence that the firm of Sher and Co. consisted of Sher and Kerbel. It would appear that the advance was made by Cohen to Kerbel, and it may be taken for granted that Cohen knew when making that advance that it was to Kerbel in respect of business other than that of the partnership, but after the advance had been made, the arrangement was made between Kerbel and the defendant that the defendant should be allowed to purchase goods from the firm in reduction of this debt. If Sher was unaware of this arrangement, clearly such an arrangement could not bind the partnership, and the only question is if there is satisfactory evidence that Sher was acquainted of this by Kerbel. Well, Kerbel states his partner was aware of it, and consented that goods should be purchased in reduction of this debt; and therefore, unless that agreement formed the nature of undue preference, the defendant is entitled to succeed. If the firm had not surrendered, and the action had been brought by the firm, there would have been a clear defence to the action, Sher having consented to the arrangement. As there is no evidence of undue preference the agreement is binding on the trustee, and I am of opinion that the appeal in that case should be dismissed with costs. Then, coming to the case against Kelly. That stands on somewhat different footing. Assuming in that case that Kerbel did not act on behalf of the firm, Kelly did not know of it. Sher was absent, and they had left the whole of the management of the business in the hands of Kerbel. Kerbel gets this advance from defendant, defendant believing it was an advance to the firm, and the only point to be made in this case on behalf of the plaintiff is that the promissory note given by Kerbel was in his own name, but then that was by no means an unusual practice on his part, because in the case of the purchase of goods on behalf of the firm, he sometimes did that, but that would not prevent the creditors having their claim on the firm. Then, although the promissory note was only signed by Kerbel, Kelly, according to the evidence, honestly believed that he was dealing with Kerbel as a representative of the firm, and that Kerbel was borrowing this money on behalf of the firm, and he afterwards agreed that goods should be purchased in reduction of the amount of the claim. Well, I think the Magistrate had quite sufficient evidence before him in coming to the conclusion that it was a transaction between the firm and Kelly, and that Kelly had reason to believe that Kerbel represented the firm, and on that ground lent the money to the firm. For these reasons, this appeal will be dismissed with costs.

REX V. HURST.

Goose club—Payment for liquor in advance—Act 28 of 1883, Sec. 69.

H., a licensed victualler, contracted with certain persons that in consideration of a certain weekly deposit during 21 weeks they should, on payment of the last deposit, receive certain goods, which included liquor. Until the final deposit was paid, any depositor could at pleasure re-claim all the money which he had deposited.

Held on appeal, that H. had not contravened either Sec. 69 of Act 28 of 1883, or any of the amending Acts.

This was an appeal brought by Fred. Hurst, of the Theatre Bar, Opera House Buildings, from a judgment of the A.R.M. of Cape Town.

Appellant was recently proceeded against in the Magistrate's Court, and charged with the crime of contravening section 69 of Act 28, 1883, and the liquor laws, 1883-1904. He was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of 5s., in that he had carried on a certain goose club under the rules of which he engaged to supply to members who contributed 21s. in weekly instalments, a hamper containing port, brandy, and sherry, a goose, and a box of cigars.

Mr. Upington was for appellant; Mr. Howel Jones, K.C., was for the Crown.

Mr. Upington, in support of the appeal, said the point was whether under the circumstances there had been a payment in contemplation of this section of the Act. The object of the Act was to prevent persons from depositing money with a licensed victualler as a payment in advance, and then proceeding to have drinks at that bar until the money was exhausted. This was entirely a different case. There was no payment, because at any time a man who had paid his 1s., 2s. or 3s. could go to the proprietor and demand his money back.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is all this in anticipation of Christmas?]

Mr. Upington: Yes, that is the idea. The goose is for the Christmas dinner, and the cigars are to be smoked after the festivities.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I mean it doesn't go on all the year round?]

Oh, no. It closes on December 21, and the fortunate persons who have paid up get their Christmas hampers, and those who haven't receive their money back again.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Which is the more fortunate?]

Well, from the point of view of my client I should say those who have paid up, but whoever may be the fortunate person, the circumstances do disclose that the payment cannot be regarded in any way as a payment in advance for liquor to be supplied, as contemplated by the Act. Counsel added that he had not been able to find any authority in England.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have they goose clubs in England?]

Oh, yes; they are very widespread in England and Ireland.

[De Villiers, C.J.: They need not necessarily be confined to geese, but may include turkeys?]

Yes; even the humble sirloin of beef might be made the object of such a club. It would be hard to construe the Act as to render illegal a perfectly harmless institution which gives a great deal of pleasure to poor people who may not be over-provident, and at Christmas time haven't the money for a Christmas dinner.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it quite clear that any depositor may get back his money before the final payment?]

Yes; that is not disputed at all.

Mr. Jones, for the Crown, held that Mr. Upington's arguments were in the nature of an appeal ad misericordiam because he had got a hard case. I was proverbial that hard cases made bad law. It was possible to understand goose clubs when geese only were supplied, but they were open to abuse when the hotel proprietor could so arrange them that liquor was supplied. He submitted that money so contributed was a payment in advance for liquor, among other things, to be supplied.

De Villiers, C.J., put it to counsel that if his contention were upheld, those persons who had paid money into such clubs during the past few years would, according to the section, be able to recover their money back even though they had had the Christmas cheer.

Mr. Jones: That is so; that is what the section says.

Mr. Upington briefly replied.

De Villiers, C.J.: The 69th section of the Act enacts that no person shall receive payment in advance for any liquor to be supplied, and the question to be decided in the present case is whether the appellant did receive payment in advance for liquor to be supplied. The Court must bear in mind that this is a criminal offence, which entails serious consequences upon the person convicted, and should certainly construe a section of this kind rigidly, and not in favour of a conviction. The arrangement connected with these goose clubs seems to be this: That the members deposit 1s. a week for 21 weeks, in anticipation of Christmas, but every member as I understand it—Mr. Jones does not deny that this is the effect—is entitled at any time to withdraw the deposits which he has made, and it is only upon payment of the final instalment that the sale actually takes place, and that the liquor, together with the geese, is supplied. That being so, I am unable to hold that the appellant did receive payment in advance for liquor to be supplied, because there was no purchase, and the section really refers to liquor purchased in advance, because where you receive payment in advance for liquor to be supplied, that means in advance for liquor sold and to be supplied. But the liquor here is not sold. The liquor is only to be sold upon payment of the final instalment, and, until the final instalment is paid, they are deposits made, but not payments in advance for liquor to be supplied. What the Act intended to provide against seems to me a wholly different state of things. There is no doubt a great temptation for a drunkard, when he has money in hand, to go to some liquor place and deposit money for the purpose of drawing upon that money and getting liquor out of it from time to time. Here we have to deal with instalments deposited before hand, not because the man is flush of money at the time, but in order to enable him by thrift to accumulate money to have some "good cheer" for Christmas. It seems to me a perfectly harmless mode of investment, and I cannot bring myself to believe that the Legislature intended that this section should apply to a case of this kind. Under these circumstances I am of opinion that this conviction should not stand. The Magistrate seems to have considered the offence a very venial one, because he imposed only a fine of 5s., but, to my mind, there was really no offence, and it was not intended that it should be regarded as an offence. The result, if Mr. Jones be correct, would be now that all the past payments could be recovered, whether these people have all had their good cheer at Christmas, whether they have had their geese, and whether they have had their money's worth, and they would now be able to recover the sums that they have paid, because the section provides that "any payment so made in advance may be recovered, notwithstanding that any liquor may have been supplied subsequently to such payment." Now, if there is a contravention in the present case, as contended for by Mr. Jones, then it would be clear that all those persons who belonged to goose clubs during the past four years in different parts of the town, could go to these people who have innocently and in all good faith sold these goods, and recover back all that was paid. That was not the intention of the Legislature, and for these reasons, I am of opinion that the conviction should be quashed.

[Appellant's attorney: A. J. McCallum.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. { 1907.
S.A. SUPPLY AND COLD { Oct. 17th.
STORAGE CO., LTD. " 21st.

Transfer duty—Sale of land previous to issue of title—Assignment of interest—Act 5 of 1884, Sec. 2.

In July, 1895, the Colonial Government agreed to allow C. & Co. to reclaim 38,799 square yards of land from the foreshore of Table Bay, and to thereafter issue title to the land so reclaimed to C. & Co. In May, 1899, C. & Co. sold 70,010 square feet of the reclaimed land, with buildings thereon, to defendants, and also 43,727 feet of land still covered by water. C. & Co. bound themselves to reclaim the latter land as and when required by the defendants: they also arranged to pass transfer of the whole of the above land to defendants when in a position to do so. Plaintiffs now claimed £3,774 10s. 4d. as transfer duty payable upon the purchase price of the land sold to defendants, together with interest at 12 % from November, 1899, when, as it alleged, the duty became payable.

Held, that an out and out sale of the property was effected by C. & Co. to defendants; and not a mere assignment of an interest.

Held further, that where a person is in occupation of land in anticipation of a grant thereof from Government, and sells such land before the grant is issued, such transaction constitutes a sale of land within the terms of Sec. 2 of Act 5 of 1884, and that transfer duty is payable thereon.

This was an action to recover the sum of £3,774 10s. 4d. transfer duty, alleged to be due by the defendant company.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

The plaintiff is Wm. Aldred Collard, in his capacity as the Assistant Treasurer of the Colony and Receiver-General of Revenue, and as such representing the Colonial Government in this action. The defendant (David Pieter de Villiers Graaff) resides in Cape Town, and is sued as the South African liquidator of a certain joint stock company, lately carrying on business in this colony, under the name of the S.A. Supply and Cold Storage Company.

2. On the 4th May, 1899, the said company purchased from the firm of Combrinck and Co., and the said firm of Combrinck and Co. sold to the said company certain two pieces of land in Cape Town situated on or near the Dock-road, to wit, a piece of land, measuring 70,010 square feet in extent, together with buildings, and all fixed plant and machinery thereon for the sum of £145,010, and a piece of land adjoining the aforesaid piece, measuring in extent 43,727 square feet, for the sum of £43,727.

3. Thereupon there became due and payable to the Colonial Government by the said company as and for transfer duty upon the purchase price aforesaid of the said two pieces of land, and the immovable property thereon as aforesaid, the sum of £3,774 10s. 4d., being two pounds per centum upon the total purchase price.

4. No portion of the said transfer duty has at any time been paid, and by reason of its failure to pay the same upon the 4th November, 1899, the said company became liable to pay interest to the Colonial Government upon the aforesaid sum of £3,774 10s. 4d., at the rate of twelve pounds per centum per annum from the last mentioned date. No portion of the said interest has at any time been paid.

5. Upon the 8th June, 1903, the said company voluntarily entered into liquidation, and on or about the 8th June of the said year, the defendant was appointed to act as sole liquidator thereof, in so far as the South African trusts and properties of the said company are concerned, with full powers under section 133 of the Statutes 25 and 26, Vict. cap. 85, and has in his possession, or control, in this colony certain assets of the company.

6. On or about the 3rd April, 1907, a rule was granted by this Honourable Court, operating as an interdict, restraining the defendant from parting with any of the assets of the said company pending the result of an action to be instituted against him for the recovery of the transfer duty payable by the said company.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) payment of the said sum of £3,774 10s. 4d.; (b) interest upon the said sum from the 4th November, 1899, at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1 and 5 of the declaration, save that he says he has no assets of the said company in his possession or control in this colony, that the said company was registered in England and not in this colony, and that it ceased to carry on business in this colony on or about the 1st of April, 1902.

2. On the 10th July, 1895, the firm of Combrinck and Company entered into a certain agreement with the Government of this colony, which agreement was subsequently in 1895 sanctioned by resolutions of both Houses of Parliament and a copy of the said agreement is hereto annexed and marked "A," to which the defendant begs to refer this Honourable Court.

3. In accordance with the said agreement and subject to its terms and conditions the said firm obtained the right to reclaim from the sea a certain area of land, and it was agreed that after reclamation the land should become the property of the said firm, and a title thereto embodying such conditions as should after such reclamation be applicable should be granted to them, and that if the said firm should fail to complete the whole work of reclamation within ten years after the sanction of Parliament was obtained, such portions of the area as should then remain unreclaimed should revert to the Table Bay Harbour Board.

4. The said firm proceeded with the said work of reclamation, and before the 4th day of May, 1899, had reclaimed certain parts of the land in the said area measuring 70,010 square feet in extent, but had not completed the reclamation of any part of the remainder of the said area, which reclamation was not completed until the month of June, 1905.

5. On the 4th day of May, 1899, the said firm entered into an agreement with the South African Supply and Cold Storage Company, Limited, whereof a copy is hereto annexed and marked "B," and on the 5th August, 1899, the Government of this colony, lawfully acting by the Treasurer, appeared before the notary William Templer Buissonne in the presence of witnesses and subscribed the original of a notarial deed of that date, whereof a true copy is hereto annexed and marked "C."

6. In terms of the said notarial deed the Government of this colony inter alia agreed to accept the aforesaid company in the place and stead of the firm of Combrinck and Company under the agreement marked "A" in respect of a piece or portion of land measuring 113,737 square feet, which included the land measuring 70,010 square feet aforesaid and a further piece measuring 43,727 square feet, which was then partially reclaimed but still covered with water, and promised to do all such acts, matters, and things as might be necessary or as might be required of the Government under the agreement marked "A."

7. Thereupon the said company became and was accepted by the said Government as the party for all purposes to the said agreement marked "A," being substituted in the place of the said firm with regard to the said piece or portion of land measuring 113,737 square feet.

8. The said pieces of land then reclaimed and partially reclaimed as aforesaid measuring 70,010 square feet and 43,727 square feet respectively are the pieces of land referred to in paragraph 2 of the declaration and the said company acquired under the agreement marked "B" all the rights of the said firm in respect of the said pieces of land under the agreement marked "A" for the sums mentioned in that paragraph and became and was substituted as aforesaid for the said firm for the purposes of the said agreement marked "A" in respect of the said pieces of land.

9. Save as aforesaid the defendant denies the allegations in paragraph 2.

10. On the 30th October, 1902, the said company with the consent of the Government of this colony ceded all its rights under the said agreements marked "A" and "B" in respect of the pieces of land aforesaid to the South African and Australasian Cold Storage and Supply Co., Ltd., at which time the reclamation of the aforesaid area was not complete, nor was any person entitled to receive in terms of clause 1 of the agreement marked "A" a grant of the said land or any part thereof.

11. The South African and Australasian Cold Storage and Supply Co., Ltd., thereafter, with the consent of the Government, ceded all its said rights on the 18th February, 1904, to the Imperial Cold Storage and Supply Co., Ltd., and upon the whole work of reclamation being completed as aforesaid in June, 1905, the Government made a grant to the remaining partners of the firm of Combrinck and Co. of the entire area, notwithstanding lawful protest made at the time by Combrinck and Co. that the grant of the two pieces, measuring 113,737 square feet aforesaid, should not be made to them by reason of the premises.

12. Under the Derelict Lands Act of 1881 an order was thereafter made entitling the Imperial Cold Storage and Supply Co., Ltd., to obtain transfer of the said pieces of land, in accordance with the provisions of the said Act.

13. By Act No. 5 of 1884, section 2, it is provided that: "Except as in this Act is excepted, a duty (hereinafter called transfer duty) of £4 per centum upon the purchase price or value of any freehold property or property held from Government, upon quitrent or other leasehold tenure, sold or otherwise alienated or transferred after the taking effect of this Act, shall be payable and paid: (1) By the purchaser of any such property. (2) By any person becoming entitled to any such property by way of exchange, donation, legacy, testamentary or other inheritance, or in any manner otherwise than through the medium or by means of purchase and sale. (3) By any person into whose name any such property registered in the Deeds Registry of this colony, in the name of any other person, shall be registered or transferred."

14. By Act No. 10 of 1886, the duty aforesaid is reduced to two per centum.

15. The defendant specially pleads that the South African Supply and Cold Storage Co., Ltd., at no time became or is liable to pay the sums claimed in this suit or any sums by way of transfer duty under the said Acts, by reason that the said company neither was nor is the purchaser of any freehold property or property held from Government upon quitrent or other leasehold tenure, nor became or is entitled to any such property by way of exchange or in any other mode set forth in sub-section (2) of section 2 of Act No. 5 of 1884, nor sub-section (2) of Act 5 of 1884, nor was, or is a person into whose name any such property registered in the Deeds Registry of this colony in the name of any other person has been registered or transferred, and, further, by reason that, according to the true intent of the said taxing Statutes, no transfer duty is payable by the said company or the liquidators thereof in the circumstances above set forth.

16. The defendant further pleads specially, if the above pleas be insufficient, that by reason of the execution by the Government of the notarial deed marked "C" aforesaid, and the acceptance in good faith by the said company of its position as coming into the place and stead of the firm of Combrinck and Co., the plaintiff is estopped and debarred from claiming from him or the liquidators of the said company any payment of transfer duty which could not have been exacted from the said firm of Combrinck and Co.

17. He admits that no transfer duty or interest has been paid by him or the said company, and says that no demand for any such payment was made until the year 1907, notwithstanding that in September, 1903, in his capacity as liquidator in South Africa, he duly called for claims against the said company.

18. Save as aforesaid, he denies all the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in paragraphs 3, 4, and 6 of the declaration.

Wherefore he prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiff's replication was as follows:

1. The plaintiff admits the allegation in paragraph 1 of the defendant's plea that the company was registered in England and not in this colony, and admits paragraphs 2, 12, 13, 14, and 17, save that he says that the word "any," in line 7 of paragraph 13, is incorrect, and that the word "every" should be substituted therefor.

2. He admits the reclamation by the firm of Combrinck and Co., to the extent of 70,010 square feet, before the 4th May, 1899, and that the reclamation of the whole area was not completed until June, 1905.

3. He admits the agreement of the 4th May, 1899, referred to in paragraph 5, and that the Treasurer subscribed the deed of which annexure "C" to the plea is a copy, and he admits that the pieces of land referred to in the said annexure are the pieces of land referred to in paragraph 2 of the declaration.

4. As to paragraph 10, he admits that on the 30th October, 1902, the company entered into a certain agreement with the South African and Australasian Cold Storage and Supply Co., Ltd., for the sale and purchase of the said pieces of land, whereof he annexes hereunto a copy, marked "D," and that the consent of the Government was given thereto in the form and upon the conditions set out in a document signed by the Treasurer upon the 5th November, 1902, a copy whereof is hereunto annexed marked "E."

5. As to paragraph 11, he admits that on the 8th February, 1904, the South African and Australasian Cold Storage and Supply Co., Ltd., sold the said pieces of land to the Imperial Cold Storage and Supply Co., Ltd., and that the Government consented thereto, upon condition that the said consent should not be construed or taken to be a waiver or abandonment of any right which the said Government might have under or incidental to or arising out of any of the agreements entered into in 1895 and 1899, copies of which are annexed to the defendant's plea, and that of 1902 aforesaid.

6. Save as aforesaid, and saving admissions, the plaintiff denies all the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the plea contained, and joins issue thereon, and again, as before, prays for judgment, with costs.

Mr. H. Jones, K.C. (with him Mr. Nightingale), for plaintiffs; Mr.

Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. H. S. van Zyl), for defendants.

David Pieter de Villiers Graaff said he was a director in the defendant company, and also originally one of the partners of Combrinck and Co. He was a defendant in this case as one of the liquidators of the defendant company. He was specially appointed in England for the purpose of the South African winding-up. The company had been finally wound up. It ceased to carry on business in this country at the end of April, 1902, when it disposed of its undertaking to the Australasian Company. The South African Supply Company was entirely distinct from the Australasian Company. The Australasian carried on business for a short period, and then it was absorbed by the Imperial Company. He was one of three liquidators of the defendant company, the others being Mr. Niel and Sir James Sivewright, and a resolution was passed under the Companies Act in England vesting in him certain powers in South Africa. He called for claims against the defendant company to be sent in. He put in the "Gazette" dated August 7, 1903. No claim was made for transfer duty until last March, when he went to England. He was absent at the time. Everything was then adjusted here, and he left for England for the purpose of taking final resolutions for the winding-up. Mr. J. G. van der Horst was his secretary here, and he called for tenders for the remaining assets. When witness was absent steps were taken to attach all assets in the jurisdiction. In England proceedings had been taken upon this same claim. The date of that was after the initial proceedings here. The solicitors of the liquidators in England had deposited the sum of £7,250 to abide the result of this action. He was director throughout the defendant company's existence. The agreement by which the company contracted with Combrinck and Company in May, 1899, was made in England. He was there at the time, and was a party to the contract. In England, under the statute, stamps were imposed upon it ad valorem upon the basis that it was an agreement disposing of certain rights under a concession. The company paid, he believed, £1,150 in stamps, under protest, and then took advice. They had to pay this sum as upon an equitable interest in property other than land. They were taxed in England on that basis. There was no getting out of it; they had to pay it. Until they got this claim, they had never heard of the Government ever attempting to claim transfer duty.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: In the first instance Combrinck and Co. may have asked for title to the land in accordance with the agreement. Government gave title to the whole area, but not with the company's consent. They never wanted title to the whole area. They protested that they found that Government gave them more than they were entitled to. They asked for title to certain portions. He did not remember that they wrote asking for transfer to be given to the Imperial Company. The Government certainly never claimed transfer duty until March or April of this year, and the transaction was in 1902 between the South African Supply Company and Combrinck and Company. On the 18th August, 1905, he never knew, nor did he ever contemplate, that transfer duty would have to be paid. He never expected that Combrinck and Co. would have to pass transfer to the S.A. Supply Co., because the Government accepted the Supply Co. instead of Combrinck and Co. in respect of that particular area. They never tested the question in the Courts as to whether they should pay the £1,150 in England, but they took eminent counsel's opinion, that of Advocate Stroud, and it was to the effect that they would have to pay.

By the Court: The amount of £1,150 which they paid in England applied to this partly unreclaimed and reclaimed ground.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: In 1899 about 70,000 feet of this land was reclaimed, and of the other ground in question over 40,000 feet was still under water, but had been partially reclaimed. A large portion of what was disposed of in 1898 was still under water.

Johannes Gerhardus van der Horst said he was an attorney of this Court. In 1905 he was business manager of Combrinck and Co. and secretary to the liquidator of the defendant company here. He signed the notice put in in that capacity in 1905. When the grant was issued in July he was in England. He came out about the third week in July, and shortly after his arrival he saw the grant. He then wrote the letter of the 31st July for Combrinck and Co. to the Surveyor-General. There were two mistakes in the grant. He pointed out that Mr. J. A. Graaff was not a partner, and therefore that his name should not appear. That amendment was made. The Government, however, would not meet him in the matter of only issuing the grant for the portion actually belonging at that time to Combrinck and Co. He gave notice to the Imperial Cold Storage Company of the position the Government took up, and then the Imperial Cold Storage Company made application to the Court under the Derelict Lands Act. He did not think that they had yet got title, because there was no deduction on either the diagram or the grant. They had an order under the Derelict Lands Act entitling them to the land. He published the notice calling for tenders for the remaining assets of the defendant company. The plea in abatement was not pressed when it was found that there were assets in England. In point of fact, there were no assets within the jurisdiction of this Court. He had a copy of the return to the Board of Trade showing the company's assets in England. The £7,250 referred to was deposited in the names of the solicitors for the liquidators and the solicitors for the Agent-General.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He did not think that up to the 31st July, 1905, Combrinck and Co. had asked for title to the whole extent of ground. The grant gave the whole area that had been reclaimed in July, 1905. No grant could be issued until there had been complete reclamation. He protested as soon as he found that they had been granted land which did not belong to them. He admitted that the letters now read did not specially raise the point as to what exact portion of ground was required. Combrinck and Co. had ceded their rights to the land. There was no occasion to pass transfer, because the Government had accepted the Supply Company in place of Combrinck. When he wrote to the Surveyor-General asking for the title to be amended, he was not thinking of saving transfer duty. The thought of the transfer duty never crossed his mind, to the best of his recollection. Of course, he knew generally that when a transfer is passed transfer duty was payable.

Mr. Jones, in argument, contended there was no selling of any right to reclaim; there was simply a selling of the property, and of the right to transfer the property when it was in a position to be transferred. He submitted that the defendant company was the purchaser of freehold land, and as such was liable for the payment of transfer duty. Counsel referred to the case of the Collector of Customs v. Walker (6 Juta, 402).

Mr. Schreiner said that largely the matter rested on the construction of section 2 of Act 5 of 1884. It could never be the reasonable and true construction of the Taxing Statute that it was the duty of this company to come to the Commissioner with a cheque for transfer duty on land that was going to be granted ten years hence, land not then in existence. None of the land became granted until there had been reclamation of the whole, and until that time the company had no right to any of the land. Counsel referred to the cases of the West London Syndicate v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (77 Law Times, p. 797), Farmer and Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (79 Law Times, p. 32).

Mr. Jones having replied,

Postea (October 21).

Maasdorp, J.: On the 10th day of July, 1895, the Colonial Government entered into an agreement with Combrinck and Co., which was subsequently sanctioned by Parliament, whereby the Colonial Government agreed "to allow the firm to reclaim from the sea a piece of land, in extent 38,799 square yards more or less, situated between the North Wharf and the old Coaling Wharf, which land shall, after reclamation, become the property of the said Combrinck and Co., and a title thereto will in due course be granted to them." On the 4th day of May, 1899, the firm of Combrinck and Co. entered into an agreement with the defendants, whereof, amongst other things, they sold to the defendants: (1) All that piece and parcel of land situate in Dock-road, Cape Town, containing 70,010 square feet or thereabouts, lately reclaimed by the vendors, including the North Wharf, together with the buildings and chambers used for refrigerating and cold storage, and all fixed plant and machinery thereon (£145,010): (2) all that piece and parcel of land now covered by water adjoining the property lastly hereinbefore described, stretching towards the Coaling Wharf, and containing 43,727 square feet or thereabouts (£43,727). By clause 12 of the agreement it is provided that the vendors shall, as and when required by the company, but at the expense of the vendors, reclaim the property secondly described, in the same workmanlike manner as the portion already reclaimed, and in such manner that the properties firstly and secondly described shall form one block. It is stated in clause 4, sub-section I., that the properties here referred to fall under the agreement between the Government and Combrinck and Company, and it is agreed that on completion of the purchase the vendors shall issue such assignments, powers of attorney, or other deeds as may be necessary for vesting the benefit of the agreement with the Government (so far as it relates to the property sold to defendants) in the company. As the firm of Combrinck and Co. was not under the circumstances in a position to give transfer in the ordinary course to the defendants, the parties secured themselves by entering into an agreement on the 5th day of August, 1899, whereby Combrinck and Company appointed Messrs. Van Zyl and Buksinne to be irrevocably their agents to pass transfer to the defendants when in a position to do so, under their agreement with the Government. And on behalf of the Government, the Treasurer-General, who was a party to this agreement, undertook to do everything necessary under the agreement with the Government, and to accept the defendants in the place and stead of Combrinck and Co. The plaintiff now claims the sum of £3,774 10s. 4d., as transfer duty payable upon the purchase price of the property sold to the defendants on the 4th day of May, 1899, together with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. from the 4th November, 1899, when the duty became payable. Briefly stated, one of the grounds of defence is that the defendants became by virtue of the above-mentioned agreements not the purchasers of land from Combrinck and Company, but the assignees, with the consent of the Government, of certain interest in land, the title to which would ultimately be acquired by the defendants direct from the Government. That the defendants, as far as the land in question was concerned, took the place of Combrinck and Co. in the agreement with the Government. That the defendants would have become entitled therefore to a grant direct from the Government, and not to a transfer of property from Combrinck and Company. They further plead that whatever their rights were, they parted with them with the consent of the Government to other companies before the time arrived when title was to be granted, and they consequently never became liable to the payment of transfer duty. Now, regard being had to the terms of the agreement between Combrinck and Co. and the defendants, it is quite clear that an out and out sale of immovable property was contemplated, and not the mere assignment of an interest, and furthermore, Combrinck and Company undertook that in due time they would see that proper title was delivered to the defendants. This is made quite clear in the agreement of the 5th of August, where agents are appointed with irrevocable power to pass transfer when they were in a position to do so. That seems in my opinion to mean that Combrinck and Co. would pass transfer to the defendants when they, upon the completion of their agreement with the Government had themselves obtained transfer. But it is contended that the Government had, by the part it took in the agreement of August 5, 1899, obviated the necessity for transfer from Combrinck and Co. to the defendant by accepting the defendant as the future grantees under the terms of the original contract. In the first place, I do not think the Government had the power to release the defendant in this manner from obligations in respect of transfer duty already incurred by them as purchasers of immovable property, and, in the second place, a proper construction of the contract of August 5 will not, in my opinion, lead to the conclusion that they intended to do so. And even if it was intended, as might legally be done, to grant direct to the defendants the portion of land sold to them by Combrinck and Co., that would not absolve them from the payment of transfer duty. The attention of the Court has been directed to Government Notice, No. 428 of 1859. Now, it is quite clear that such notice could not make law nor alter the law, but it seems to me to be a correct statement of the law issued for the information of Civil Commissioners and other officers charged with collecting transfer duty. According to this notice, which has been acted upon since its promulgation, where land in occupation is sold prior to the issue of the grant, transfer duty shall be paid in like manner as upon sales which take place after the grant has taken place. If this view is correct, then the contention of the defendants must fail, which is that duty does not become payable until, in terms of section 2 of Act 5 of 1884, there is in existence, by virtue of a grant, some freehold property, or property held from Government upon quit rent or other leasehold tenure, which becomes the subject of a sale. In this case, at the time of the sale to the defendants, the sellers were actually in lawful occupation of 70,010 ft. of reclaimed land, with buildings erected thereon, a grant of which was in contemplation, and this land, together with the portion they were then engaged in reclaiming, formed the subject of the sale in question. A grant of this land was expected in due time, and it seems to me, whether such grant was ultimately made to the sellers, or, as a matter of convenience, direct to the purchasers, the defendants, whose title was acquired by purchase from Combrinck and Co., are liable to pay transfer duty. As a matter of fact, Combrinck and Company claimed and obtained transfer of all the reclaimed land, including the portion sold, and consequently, in the ordinary course, transfer to the defendants would have been necessary. It is not necessary to trace the subsequent history of this property, because it is not material to the issue. Now, in my opinion, in conformity with the view expressed in the above-mentioned Government notice, where a person is in occupation of land in anticipation of a grant from Government, and sells such land before the grant is issued, this constitutes a sale of land within the terms of section 2 of Act 5 of 1884, and the land so sold may be described as freehold property, or quit-rent property, in accordance with the promised or intended grant, although I do not say that it would be necessary to specify under what category it would fall. But it was argued there was no certainty that under the conditions of the original agreement any grant would ever take place. Now it does not follow that where upon failure of a condition a sale falls through, no transfer duty is payable, that would depend upon circumstances. But Act 5 of 1884 specially provides in sections 6 and 7 for cases of deferred possession and conditional sales, where transfer duty is payable notwithstanding, with provision for repayment under certain conditions. As a matter of fact, in this case all the conditions were fulfilled to enable Combrinck and Co. to pass transfer to the defendants, and it was in their power to do so if the defendants had claimed it, as they were entitled to do. The plaintiff, in his capacity as Assistant-Treasurer, is, therefore, entitled to transfer duty as payable on the 4th of November, 1899, with interest at 12 per cent. from that date. Judgment is given for the plaintiff for the sum of £3,774 10s. 4d., with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. from the 4th November, 1899. Defendants to pay costs of suit.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

HEYDENRYCH V. INSOLVENT
ESTATE OF BUCHANAN { 1907.
AND OTHERS. { Oct. 17th.
" 18th.
" 26th.

This was an action in which Benjamin Godlieb Heydenrych, a financier, of Observatory-road, sought an order compelling James Muirhead Potter Muirhead (in his capacity as sole trustee of the insolvent estate of William Preston Buchanan), Henry Sampson Martin, and Isidore Hanau, of Cape Town, to render a proper account, supported by vouchers, showing the manner in which certain moneys advanced by him to the Preston Buchanan Gold-mining and Developing Syndicate were expended, and a declaration of his rights in the venture.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a financier residing at Observatory-road. The first defendant resides in Cape Town, and is sued in his capacity as sole trustee of the insolvent estate of William Preston Buchanan; the second defendant now resides without the Colony, and his general power of attorney is held by Messrs. Syfret, Godlonton and Low, attorneys, of Cape Town; and the third defendant resides at Wynberg.

2. In the year 1901 the said Buchanan and the second defendant were the joint owners of certain mining areas, claims, stands, and other interests at Millwood, in the division of Knysna, where they were employed in gold-mining work, and in or about December of that year, finding themselves in want of capital, they applied to the plaintiff for financial assistance for the prosecution and development of their said operations and of acquiring other stands, claims, and machinery.

3. The plaintiff agreed to render such financial assistance as aforesaid, upon certain terms and conditions, which are set forth in a document signed by the plaintiff and the said Buchanan, and dated the 19th of December, 1901, to which the plaintiff craves leave to refer at the trial.

4. By the said agreement, it was provided, inter alia, that the plaintiff should advance from time to time, for the said purposes, sums of money not exceeding in the aggregate £1,000, and that, in consideration of his so doing, he should, as security for such advances, have a lien on all the assets of the joint venture, upon which the said advances were to form a first charge. It was also provided that none of the parties to the said agreement should have a right to pledge or should pledge the credit of the concern or his share thereof without the consent of the others first had and obtained. It was further provided that all profits which might accrue either from gold produced or the rental or sale of any of the said interests should be divided between the parties in the proportion of half to the said Buchanan and quarter each to the plaintiff and the second defendant, but the plaintiff was not to become liable for any losses of whatsoever nature.

5. The said agreement was duly ratified by the second defendant on or about the 25th of March, 1902, when the terms were slightly varied in a manner not material to set forth here, and on or about the 19th of February, 1903 it was further agreed that, in consideration of further services rendered by the plaintiff, his holding in the said venture should be increased to 4-12, the additional 1-12 coming out of the share then held by the said Buchanan. The plaintiff is still the holder of the said 4-12 interest, subject to the terms of the said agreement.

6. After the execution of the said agreement and in pursuance thereof, the plaintiff from time to time advanced money to the said Buchanan and the second defendant for the purposes of the said venture, and he has in all advanced the sum of £2,500 therefor, all subject to the conditions of the said agreement, with which money the said operations were prosecuted, and additional property in the way of stands and other interests were acquired, the said Buchanan and the second defendant acting throughout as managers of the concern.

7. On or about the 10th of September, 1902, the said Buchanan passed a mortgage bond for £1,500 in favour of the third defendant, specially hypothecating certain landed property belonging to the said Buchanan, and containing the customary general clause, of which bond the third defendant is still the holder.

8. The said Buchanan assigned his private estate on or about the 5th of November, 1903, in favour of his creditors, the third defendant becoming one of the assignees thereof, and on or about the 19th of March, 1907, the estate of the said Buchanan was sequestrated as insolvent, upon the petition of the third defendant.

9. For some considerable time past no active work has been done upon or in connection with the said claims or other interests of the said venture, and the parties interested therein are agreed that the affairs of the said venture should be wound up and its assets disposed of at the earliest convenient time, but the first and second defendants have neglected and failed hitherto to render the plaintiff any proper account, supported by vouchers, of the expenditure of the moneys advanced by him as aforesaid.

10. There is in the hands of the attorneys, Syfret, Godlonton and Low, of Cape Town, the balance of a sum of £600 paid by a company called the Preston Buchanan Gold Mining and Developing Syndicate as compensation for rent overdue and the cancellation of a certain lease entered into between the parties to the said venture and the said company, the said money being held by the said attorneys in trust for whomsoever it may concern. The plaintiff says the said money is the property of the said venture.

11. The third defendant claims that the assets of the said venture fall within the operation of the said bond, as being assets of the private estate of the said Buchanan.

The plaintiff claims: (a) That the first and second defendants may be ordered to render the plaintiff a proper account supported by vouchers showing the manner in which the moneys advanced by the plaintiff as aforesaid were expended. (b) A declaration of his rights in connection with the said venture. (c) A declaration that the first and second defendants are not entitled to any share in the assets of the said venture until the said sum of £2,500 with interest is repaid to the plaintiff. (d) A declaration that the said mining claims, stands, prospecting areas, machinery, plant, and other property acquired by the said Buchanan and the second defendant as aforesaid, as well as the said balance in the hands of the said attorneys are the property of the said venture. (e) That the third defendant be declared not entitled to any right over the property belonging to the said venture save and except upon the share of the said Buchanan therein, after the amount of £2,500, with interest, advanced by the plaintiff as aforesaid, shall have been repaid. (f) Alternative relief. (g) Costs of suit.

James Muirhead Potter Muirhead, in his capacity as sole trustee in the insolvent estate of William Preston Buchanan, Henry Sampson Martin, and Isidore Hanau, of Cape Town, in his plea stated:

1. Defendant admits paragraph 1 of plaintiff's declaration save that he has no knowledge as to the whereabouts of the said Martin, and that he has been informed by the said attorneys that they have ceased to represent him.

2. Defendant says that he has no personal knowledge of the allegations contained in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of plaintiff's declaration.

3. As to paragraph 7, it would appear from the proof of debt filed in the insolvent estate of the said Buchanan that the allegations in the said paragraph contained are correct.

4. As to paragraph 8, defendant says that a deed of assignment was entered into by the said Buchanan on the 5th day of November, 1903, to which deed, for greater certainty, defendant craves leave to refer when produced at the trial.

Defendant says the correct date of sequestration is 26th March, 1907. He says further, that the usual three meetings of creditors in the said insolvent estate have been held, and the third defendant is the only creditor that has proved.

5. As to paragraph 9, he has no personal knowledge of the allegations contained therein. Defendant says he has never seen the said Buchanan, who has, he believes, for some years past resided in Johannesburg; that in pursuance of his duty as trustee he has made inquiries of the said Buchanan, and has received from him a letter dated 22nd July, 1907, to which he craves leave to refer when produced at the trial, and although he has made diligent personal search among the papers and books of the insolvent, he has been unable to trace any proper record of the transactions referred to, and it is quite impossible for defendant to furnish the account demanded by plaintiff, and defendant says that no claim was ever made upon him so to do prior to the issue of summons.

6. As to paragraphs 10 and 11, defendant is aware that certain money is in the hands of the said attorneys, and of the contentions of the parties.

Wherefore, defendant submits to the judgment of the Court, and prays his costs of suit against plaintiff.

Isidore Hanau, in his plea, admitted paragraph 1 of plaintiff's declaration. He contended that the mining areas, machinery, and plant were the property of Buchanan. The agreements referred to in the declaration were not known to the public. He admitted paragraph 7, and further added that the bond was passed in terms of a certain agreement between Buchanan and himself, when he advanced the money to secure the repayment of a portion of which this bond was passed, a certain schedule of his assets being exhibited to defendant by Buchanan. As to paragraph 6, defendant held that a deed of assignment was entered into by Buchanan.

[Mr. Upington (with him Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers) for plaintiff. Mr. Benjamin, K.C. (with him Mr. D. M. Buchanan) for defendants.]

The plaintiff stated he became acquainted with Buchanan and Martin in 1901. Martin was a prospector, and Buchanan had a bookseller's shop. He was asked to join in a venture for the discovery of gold at Knysna, and Martin took him to the Knysna to show him the concern. People knew that Martin and Buchanan were jointly concerned in the development of the place, and in purchasing machinery and plant. Witness went to see the area and after doing so, agreed to join in the venture, and an agreement was drawn up in December, 1901, and on the 26th March the agreement was altered and verified. Prior to the agreement, witness advanced sums of money in respect of the agreement. Witness produced the cheques paid by him. The total amount advanced by him for the venture was £2,500.

I was applied to for it. They said there was no good spoiling the ship for the sake of a pennyworth of tar.

[Hopley, J.: But that was more than a penny. It was £1,500.]

Witness (continuing) said he was to receive three-twelfths of the profits, and that was afterwards increased to four-twelfths. Witness saw the machinery for the purchase of which he advanced the money. Subsequently 44 stands were purchased, and negotiations entered into for a lease of the properties. Witness thought the original lease was in the records of the Court as it was filed in another action. He produced a copy, which was handed to him at the time the lease was drawn, and in his opinion it was correct.

Hopley, J., said the original lease should be produced.

Mr. Upington said the case was a very peculiar one. The firm of attorneys who represented the Proton Buchanan Syndicate, of which plaintiff was a partner, in the previous action, now represented the two defendants in the present action.

Mr. Benjamin said he did not admit Mr. Upington's statement. He had only a copy of the agreement. He had no objection to Mr. Upington examining his witness on the copy, but he would reserve the right to object to the admission of the original when it was found.

Witness (continuing) said no rent was paid, and he would not handicap the syndicate by applying for any. He wrote several letters to the secretary (Mr. Hazell), and received replies from him. He produced his letterpress copy-book.

Mr. Benjamin objected to the book being put in; the originals should be produced.

Hopley, J., said he would adjourn the Court, and it would be necessary for the plaintiff and defendants to have the proper witnesses present. He had to protest against people not making all proper arrangements out of court, and coming into court and wasting the time settling these matters.

Mr. Benjamin said he had to object to the book being put in.

[Hopley, J.: I cannot sit here and wait while you are squabbling about the letters. If the letters are not evidence, they will not affect the mind of the Court. Cannot you let the letters go in, and afterwards brush them aside as a cobweb?]

Cannot I object to them?

[Hopley, J.: Yes, but they will produce the originals.]

But I will object to them also.

[Hopley, J.: Do you think they would affect the mind of the Court if they went in?]

Then I will let them go in, but formally object to them.

Witness (continuing) stated that in July he received a letter from Mr. Hanau offering to dispose of the property on commission, and a 2½ per cent. commission was agreed upon. On August 31 a caretaker was appointed to look after the property. That caretaker was still in possession. Witness claimed that the sum of £2,500 should be paid back to him before Martin or Buchanan shared the proceeds.

In cross-examination, the witness said he had nothing to do with the ordering of the machinery. Martin did that, but witness paid for it. Witness took no active part in managing the venture. Witness was at Knysna, but that was before he signed the agreement.

Did you go and see any of the stores about the business when in Knysna?—No.

Did you pay any of the accounts?—No; I just gave the cheques to Buchanan.

Continuing, witness said he was claiming £2,500, with 2½ per cent. per month interest.

You said that you had advanced £5,000?—I said it roughly, because I advanced money to Buchanan to help him in his interest.

[Hopley, J.: How long does it take for money to double itself at 30 per cent. per annum interest?]

Witness (continuing) said that as they wanted to pay him nothing out of the estate, he wrote to Mr. Hanau stating he had supplied about £5,000.

In re-examination, witness said that Mr. Hanau was quite aware of his share in the company. The first time he mentioned anything was when witness was approached to join in an action against the syndicate.

In reply to the Court, the witness said he considered he was a partner in the concern. Witness did not know very much about gold mining at that time.

[Hopley, J.: You have learned something since?]

Witness: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: Do you in any of your correspondence claim to be a partner?—The letters speak for themselves. Under the agreement of 1901.

I will put it to you that you have admitted that you had a lien, but where do you claim to be a partner?—They could not sell without my consent.

[Hopley, J.: Is it not a proof of partnership when he appears in the lease to sub-let?]

Mr. Benjamin: In your letter to Hazell you say you have a lien, but nothing about a partnership.

[Hopley, J.: But that letter is not put in, and until it is you cannot cross-examine.]

In further examination by Mr. Benjamin, the witness admitted writing to Mr. Trollip, stating that he got his holding in the concern as a financier, but that was in reply to a demand made on him for certain documents.

[Hopley, J.: What is there to prevent a financier working himself into a partnership?]

Mr. Benjamin: But he should have stated that.

Evidence was given by Mr. A. A. Dickmont to the effect that his firm acted for the vendors with regard to the property.

A clerk in the Deeds Office produced certain original documents.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Mr. Isidore Hanau, the third defendant, examined, stated that in August, 1901, he gave a loan of £1,000 for operations at Knysna. In 1901 a further loan of £3,000 was wanted, and as Buchanan only offered as security a second bond on his landed property, witness obtained from him a schedule of his assets, stock, etc. In August, 1902, Buchanan made an application to cancel the large bond, and in September, 1902, the new bond was passed, witness obtaining a claim in preference over the assets of Buchanan's estate. Witness had no knowledge whatever that Heydenrych or Martin had any interest in the place. He inquired into Martin's position. The schedule was handed to witness, and he was perfectly satisfied with it, and he took a quarter interest in the mining area. Witness frequently saw Buchanan. When the estate was assigned claims came in inter alia from business houses at Knyena, but nothing was heard of Heydenrych's claim. Martin proved in the ordinary way as a creditor for salary. Witness only heard of Heydenrych having anything to do with the areas in 1903.

In cross-examination witness said he was partly a director of the second syndicate. Witness as a bondholder was kept posted as to the assets at Knyena. It was to his interest that the syndicate should succeed. Witness lent Buchanan money privately, but it was paid back. He did not see the agreement with Martin. In February, 1903, he knew that Heydenrych was interested in the flotation of the company. Witness would have foreclosed his bond had he known. The property specially hypothecated in the bond was sold.

For what amount?—I cannot say without my cash-book. The bond will prove it.

[Hopley, J.: The amounts realised are not on the bond.]

Mr. Upington: At the time of the insolvency, was there any land hypothecated?—No.

In re-examination, witness said the stands were ceded and transferred to him.

[Hopley, J.: With regard to this ceding of stands, how is it done?]

Witness: They are issued by an Inspector of Mines there. Continuing, he said he only held one stand now: he had abandoned the others.

[Hopley, J.: You do not think they are worth paying 30s. a year each for?]

Witness: No, my lord. Continuing, he said that Buchanan's estate paid various claims, but not Heydenrych, Martin, and Buchanan. That was when the liquidation was proceeding.

Hopley, J., expressed the hope that this case would not go to appeal, for the sake of the parties concerned, because the documents, if printed, would make a bulky volume.

John Harden, manager of the branch of the Standard Bank at Knyena, stated Buchanan opened an account there, which was closed on July 24, 1903, having started in January, 1902. Buchanan told witness that Martin was to look after his business in his absence, and gave him a power of attorney to that effect. Witness did not know Heydenrych or anybody else but Buchanan.

Edward Bibby, of Knyena, said he knew the insolvent Buchanan from the time he first went to Millwood prospecting with Martin. Witness agreed to lend him £500 if he developed the mine with it. Witness was to get one-twentieth share of the Bendigo mine when it was floated. Witness provided the money. He knew nothing about plaintiff having any share in the venture. He only knew Buchanan as the owner and Martin as the manager.

In cross-examination, the witness stated that the negotiations took place with Martin. Witness was to get one-twentieth part of Buchanan's share. He bought some stands from Martin.

[Hopley, J.: Had the mines been cut up into stands?]

Witness: These are building lots.

Mr. Upington: What did you pay for them?—£40.

Have you anything to prove that sale?—I have the transfers. Continuing, witness said he did not know of anybody else having a share. He heard that there was somebody in Cape Town financing it.

What did you understand by Buchanan's share? Who else did you think had a share?—Martin told me he had a quarter share.

Witness did not remember having seen Heydenrych at Knyena.

But they called in to your house to see you?—I do not remember it.

[Hopley, J.: His features did not make any impression on you?]

Continuing, witness said he heard a couple of people were putting money into the venture.

In re-examination, the witness said that when his money vanished he put in a claim for it.

In reply to the Court, witness said he asked Martin what his share in the mine was, and he told him his was a quarter. He understood that he was to get 1-20th share of the whole mine, and not 1-20th of Buchanan's share.

David Craig, town manager for Messrs. Petersen and Co., stated that Buchanan made all the purchases for the mines, and they knew nobody else in connection therewith.

Arthur Ed. Perkins, chief clerk to Messrs. Cunningham and Gearing, stated Buchanan only dealt with their firm on behalf of the mine.

John F. L. Marston, manager of the Long-street branch of the Standard Bank, stated Buchanan had an account there prior to his insolvency. On one occasion he had an overdraft at the bank, and on witness making inquiries, he said he had interests in a gold mine at Knyena.

Gilbert Reid Shaw, who is carrying on the business of Mr. J. M. P. Muirhead during that gentleman's absence, testified to the liquidation of the Preston-Buchanan Syndicate. No books were available at all. It was impossible to make up an account, as was asked for. The assets consisted of £600, in the hands of Syfret, Godlonton and Low, and some machinery at Knyena.

In reply to the Court, the witness stated the area was useless.

Continuing, witness said there was nothing to show how the money had been applied.

In cross-examination, witness stated that Hanau was the sole creditor who had proved.

Mr. Benjamin: But there are others who have not proved.

[Hopley, J.: How does the witness know that?]

Witness: Several of them said they would not prove until they had ascertained if there were any assets.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

Mr. Upington submitted in argument that Heydenrych advanced this money on the understanding that he was to become a partner. The fact that Buchanan went to several firms and said that he had an interest in these mines was not sufficient to keep Heydenrych from availing himself of a partnership. He submitted that the £200 and the machinery were part of the joint venture. Now, they asked for an account. Well, he recognised that it was impossible to get that.

[Hopley, J.: Well, you had better drop that!]

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the Court had to decide the relationship between Martin, Buchanan, and Heydenrych. It was either a partnership or not. If it was not a partnership, and was the sole concern of Buchanan, then they must rank as creditors. He submitted that Hanau came in under his bond if there was no partnership. As to a claim of a partnership, one could not see it either in the pleadings or in the correspondence that passed between them. Nowhere was it set out the relationship that existed between them. Continuing, he contended that the money advanced by Hanau was advanced for the businesses of Buchanan, which was borne out by the latter's statement, in which he said the money raised on the Long-street business was devoted to the development of the Knysna property. He contended that before Heydenrych could recover that the claims of Hanau should be satisfied. Counsel, in support of his arguments, quoted the case of Davidson v. Auer (22nd vol., Supreme Court Reports, p. 10).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (October 26).

Hopley, J.: This action is brought by Heydenrych against the trustee of the insolvent estate of one William Preston Buchanan, against one Martin (the "second defendant"), and against Isidore Hanau (the "third defendant"). The plaintiff is a financier and money-lender, the insolvent Buchanan was a trader carrying on business in Cape Town; Martin, the second defendant, was a prospector, and the third defendant is a retired merchant, who now carries on business as a financier and money-lender in Cape Town. Before 1901 and early in that year, Buchanan had acquired prospecting rights over certain areas, and mining claims, and rights over other areas in the district of Knysna, and early in that year he had borrowed (besides smaller amounts which do not enter into this case) a sum of £3,000 from the third defendant, Hanau, upon security of first mortgage bonds over certain landed property in Cape Town, such bonds presumably containing the usual general clause binding all the mortgagor's property and effects. There was, however, no specification or delivery of any of the movables or other assets, save only of the landed property specially hypothecated. It is said, and probably correctly, that a portion of the moneys so obtained from Hanau was spent by Buchanan in acquiring and prospecting the areas in the Knysna district; but there is no actual proof that he so employed such funds, or looked upon them as obtained for that specific purpose. I am of opinion that Hanau lent the money mainly, if not entirely, on the security of the Cape Town business of the mortgagor, but whether he did so or not, and whether he knew or thought, or did not know or think, that the money advanced by him was being employed in Buchanan's Knysna enterprise, it does not seem to me that the result of this case will be affected by such considerations. It is clear that after the mortgages were passed, as above stated, Buchanan had a perfect right to deal with or dispose, in any way he chose, of such of his assets as were not specially bound, and the further history of the case will show that he did deal with and dispose of some of them. Towards the end of the year 1901, Buchanan approached the plaintiff for financial assistance in the Knysna venture, with the result that the latter, after a personal visit to the alleged gold-bearing areas, and an inspection under the guidance of the second defendant, agreed to join the venture on certain terms and conditions, which are set forth in a written agreement, dated December 19, 1901. That document, supplemented by one of March 28, 1902, after reciting that Buchanan and Martin are jointly possessed of the Knysna interests in question, that they have determined to obtain financial aid to develop the areas and mines, and to enable them to acquire machinery, tools, etc., for the purpose, and to acquire further rights and interests, and that they had approached Heydenrych, who had agreed to render such pecuniary assistance and to advance money not exceeding £1,000, which advances were to form a first charge on all the assets, interests, buildings, mills, machinery, tools, areas, claims, mines, stands, etc., already acquired or to be acquired, proceeds to state that it had been agreed that Heydenrych was to advance £1,000 for the said purposes, upon the security of a lien over all the said assets, and on the basis that the advances were to form a first charge on such assets, that further sums required were to be advanced by the various parties on a pro rata basis, and that such advances, by whomsoever made, should have interest at the rate of 2½ per cent. per mensem, that none of the parties should have the right to pledge the credit of the concern, or even his share therein, without the consent of the others in writing, and, lastly, that all profits which might accrue from the production of gold, sale of ore or metal, lease or sale of any of the areas, mines, rights, or stands, etc., or other interests, should be divided between the three parties in proportions of one-half to Buchanan and one-quarter to each of the others—Heydenrych and Martin—but that Heydenrych was not to be liable for any losses of any description. Thereafter Heydenrych began his advances, and he seems to have carried out his share of the obligations imposed by the above agreement. A banking account was started for this "Kynsna concern" by Buchanan in his own name in the Kynsna branch of the Standard Bank; Heydenrych gave his cheques payable to Buchanan "for Kynsna concern," and Buchanan gave receipts for the various instalments "as per agreement re Kynsna concern." Martin held Buchanan's power of attorney to operate on the said banking account, and remained at Millwood, or in the neighbourhood, prospecting, purchasing machinery and other assets, and generally directing the affairs of the venture. Meanwhile, during the first half of the year 1902, Hanau seems to have considered that he should enter into a fresh arrangement with Buchanan, and on June 18 of that year these two parties came to an agreement, whereunder Hanau agreed to cancel two bonds of £1,100 and £3,000, both passed in 1901 upon condition that Buchanan should pass a first mortgage bond for £1,500 over certain land specified, make a cash payment of £1,180, with interest thereon, at 5 per cent., added up to the end of January, 1904; make a certain cession of a lease (which, however, subsequently came to naught), and increase his business stock and keep it up to £2,000, insuring it for that amount and ceding the policies to Hanau. On the same date (June 18, 1902) Hanau took a power to pass the mortgage bond for £1,500, and such bond was subsequently passed and registered on September 10, 1902. It, of course, contained the general clause, and it is by virtue of such that Hanau now makes claim to the assets of the Kynsna concern, of which the history has been partially given above. Hanau produced an undated memorandum in Buchanan's writing, wherein he gives a rough list of his assets; he is under the impression that this was given to him in 1901, and states that he was induced to advance some of his moneys, because of the Kynsna assets shown. I am rather of opinion that it is more likely that this memorandum was made about June, 1902, when the negotiations for the fresh arrangements were pending—but I think the point of small importance since the Kynsna assets were in no way bound, either in 1901 or in 1902, save as they might be embraced by the general clause. Towards the end of 1902, Buchanan informed Heydenrych that he was forming the "Preston Buchanan" Syndicate for the purpose of further developing the said concern, and he proposed that in lieu of the lien over the assets of the concern, Heydenrych should agree to take a lien over the vendors' shares, if the concern should be floated into a company, and to this Heydenrych agreed. In all that had happened thus far, it appears to me that Heydenrych's position was consistent with the role of either a money lender or a partner, and had there been nothing further I should have inclined to the view that he should be looked upon rather in the former capacity; but his position was somewhat more clearly defined in subsequent transactions and documents. Buchanan was apparently on the point of succeeding in getting together the syndicate, or he had already got one which was to be rapidly succeeded by another, when (on February 9 1903), he wrote a note to Heydenrych to confirm a conversation, wherein he had agreed that Heydenrych's "share in the properties and assets jointly held by us in the Kynsna district more fully described in the agreement of December 19, 1901, shall be increased by one-twelfth, etc. . . ." This letter appears to recognise that Heydenrych had a share not only in the profits, but in the actual properties and assets at Kynsna. This view is strengthened by the agreement which shortly thereafter followed with the "Preston Buchanan Gold Mining and Developing Syndicate" (which was also known as the "Cartwright Syndicate," from the fact that Mr. Cartwright was its chairman). It may here be noted that the defendant Hanau was a member of this syndicate, and that when it was registered under the Companies' Act in 1904 he was still a member and one of the directors. On February 19, 1903, Mr. Cartwright, acting for the syndicate, concluded an agreement with Buchanan, Heydenrych, and Martin, who are described as the owners of the properties and rights in question, and the vendors thereof to the syndicate. The properties and rights comprise all the assets and rights, including tools and machinery, etc., which formed the Knyana venture, in which Buchanan, Heydenrych, and Martin were jointly interested, and the agreement in brief was that the whole of the undertaking was leased to the syndicate free of charge for six months, and thereafter at £50 a month; that the syndicate should develop it, spending at least £1,000 on such work unless they could float it into a company without incurring such a total expenditure, and that on such flotation they were to give the three vendors one-third of the gross amount for which any company or companies might be floated in full settlement and satisfaction of all the vendors' rights to the said property, claims, rights, plant, machinery, battery, tools, and all other movable assets on the said property. It seems to me hopeless to contend, after such a recognition of his rights, that Heydenrych was not a partner in the full sense in the Knyana venture. The "Cartwright Syndicate" did not, however, have a profitable career. After spending money on development of the mines and areas, they ceased apparently to work, were sued in 1905 for the rent, under their agreement, by the vendors, and compromised the action by a payment of £600 and costs. It should have been stated, too, that Buchanan had meantime been obliged to assign his estate. That took place in November, 1903, and Hanau and one Hazell were the assignees. So that, when the action was brought against the syndicate, Hanau, as an assignee of Buchanan's estate, figured as one of the plaintiffs, in conjunction with Martin and Heydenrych, while in his individual capacity he figured as a defendant. There is no particular significance in this, as the position was one into which he was carried by virtue of representing Buchanan's interests; but it is possibly of some importance on a branch of the case much relied upon in argument. Of the amount of £600 recovered from the syndicate, there is still a substantial balance in the hands of the attorneys, and of the assets of the Knyana venture, there are still some of some value. To these assets Hanau lays claim, by virtue of the general clause in the bond passed in 1902 in his favour by Buchanan, on the ground that all the assets of the Knyana venture were the sole property of Buchanan, and that even if Buchanan had partners in such venture, they were anonymous partners, and he the only ostensible one; and it is argued that if that were so, all the assets of such partnership could be treated as belonging to Buchanan, and that because Buchanan is insolvent — for Hanau had obtained a sequestration of his estate in March, 1907, therefore the venture is also insolvent, and all its assets claimable by

Hanau, who is the only creditor who has proved on Buchanan's insolvent estate. Now, it seems clear to me that the assets of the venture were not, after December 19, 1901, the sole property of Buchanan. At that date he or he and Martin had a perfect right to part with them, and the document of that date and the subsequent documents show clearly that they did dispose of the whole of their assets to a firm consisting of themselves and Heydenrych. I do not think that Heydenrych and Martin, or either of them, can be properly described as anonymous partners in this concern. It is true that the most prominent and ostensible partner was Buchanan, but when any matter arose which required the concurrence of all the members of the firm, they all appeared and acted. Each member of the firm was busy in his own way all the time. Heydenrych was supplying the funds, Buchanan was transmitting them to Martin and scheming to dispose of the matter to advantage, and Martin was on the spot working at the fields, whence they all hoped to derive fortune. There was no necessity for any of them to do more; but when Buchanan had managed to find people to take the concern off their hands and when it was necessary to hand over the undertaking to them, then all three partners appeared and joined in the necessary acts. Hanau at all events knew of this state of affairs, and recognised it. He says that the first he knew of Heydenrych's connection with the venture was when he became aware that he was one of the vendors thereof. Well, be it so. At that time there was nothing to make the partnership at all objectionable or defeasible, and the general clause in his bond had not come into operation over any of the assets involved in the transaction. It is clear that he raised no objection at that time, nor could he do so, and even subsequently when the estate was assigned he acquiesced in the position. It is also clear that he has subsequently and comparatively recently forced an insolvency of Buchanan's estate purposely to make the general clause in his bond effectual, and so to get a claim to the assets of the Knyana venture; but before he took that step he had approached Heydenrych and Martin as vendors of the Knyana venture asking them to allow him to try and dispose of its assets for a remuneration, and asking what rate of commission they would allow him; to which they replied that they would allow him to dispose of the assets, that he should have 2½ per cent. commission, but that no sale should be concluded until the vendors had approved of the terms. To my mind there is nothing in the evidence to show that the Knyana venture was not entered into as a Buchanan, Heydenrych, and Martin as an ordinary partnership, such as is commonly met with for such a transaction. That partnership has never been made insolvent, nor did Hansau ever advance any moneys to the partnership qua partnership, and I cannot see how any claims against Buchanan's insolvent estate can be satisfied out of its assets, save in so far as there may be amounts coming to Buchanan upon a liquidation of the affairs of such partnership. Now, the partnership, as such, owes nothing to anyone outside its own members, and the rights of its members are inter se, and must be regulated by the agreement existing between them. It would appear that the partnership owes the plaintiff a considerable sum, and that the agreement between the parties is that anything realised from sale or lease of its assets should be appropriated in the first instance to payment of the debt due to the plaintiff. If there should be anything over upon a liquidation of the affairs of the partnership after the amount due to Heydenrych and Martin has been paid out, then such amount would, of course, belong to Buchanan's insolvent estate. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to a declaration that the first and second defendants are not entitled to any share in the assets of the said venture until such sums as the plaintiff has advanced shall have been repaid to him with interest, according to the agreements existing between the said parties, and to a further declaration that the third defendant has no right to the assets of the said venture, save and except to the share of the said Buchanan after such advances and interest have been repaid to the plaintiff as above set forth. The plaintiff is likewise entitled to a declaration in terms of clause (d) of his claim. And the Court orders accordingly. The contentions of the third defendant—Hansau—and his claim in reconvention, must fail, and the costs of the action must be paid by him.

Ex parte MARSH.

Mr. Inghold moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of the Rev. T. E. Marsh, as the holder of a mortgage bond passed by one Samuel Jacobs, for an interdict restraining the sale by auction, at the instance of Rachel Jacobs, of certain lavatory basin connections and gas fitting in property specially hypothecated under the bond, and for costs against the said Rachel Jacobs.

Rule granted calling upon respondent to show cause to-morrow (Friday) why an interdict should not be granted, rule to operate as an interdict meanwhile.

MATRIMONIAL CASES.

VAN WYK V. VAN WYK.

This was an action brought by Petrus Jacobus van Wyk, of Vondelingsfontein, district of Calvinia, against his wife, Johanna Hendrika Petronella van Wyk, also of Vondelingsfontein, for divorce on the ground of her alleged adultery with one Jacobus Petrus Bergh.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Mr. Van Zyl read affidavits in support of the case, from which it appeared that the defendant left her husband at the end of 1904 and went to live with Bergh, and that she had since given birth to two children, of whom the plaintiff denied paternity. Plaintiff prayed for dissolution of the bonds of marriage, custody of the four minor children of the marriage, and a declaration that defendant had forfeited her half share of the benefits of the marriage in community.

Order granted in terms of declaration.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

LEWIN AND ANOTHER V. { 1907.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Louwrens) moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute, in terms of consent paper, pending an action to be instituted by applicants.

Rule absolute in terms of consent paper.

Ex parte EAST LONDON BOARD OF EXECUTORS AND TRUST CO., LTD.

Dr. Rainsford moved for an order confirming a certain resolution so as to amend the memorandum of association, in order to enable the company to carry on its business more efficiently, and carry on certain classes of business in regard to receiving deposits of and lending money, which, under the circumstances, may be advantageously combined to the business of the company. Counsel cited section 28 of the Companies Act of 1892, and section 3 (sub-section b), of the company's memorandum of association. Order granted as prayed.

LANGE V. GROBLER.

Mr. H. G. Lewis moved, on behalf of petitioner, for an interdict restraining respondent, Barend P. F. Grobler, of Keimoes, division of Gordonia, from disposing of certain landed property, and the Registrar of Deeds at Vryburg from allowing transfer of the said property to be passed by Grobler to any person, pending an action to be brought by petitioner to recover a sum of £84 5s. 3d. owing to him by respondent.

De Villiers, C.J.: I see that Mr. Justice Hopley has refused to grant an order in this matter in Chambers. The best course for the applicant is to go on with his action, and if he gets judgment he can take an execution. There is no ground for the Court's interference.

No order.

SIEPKER V. GROBLER.

Mr. H. G. Lewis said that this was a similar application to the previous one.

De Villiers, C.J.: It does not follow that because a debtor intends to sell his property he proposes to do so in order to defeat the claim of his creditor. There may be special circumstances in which it is clear that a sale takes place with a view of defeating the creditor, but those circumstances should be stated specially, and it is not enough for the creditor to say that he believes that that is the object. He must state the reasons for his belief, and no reasons for the belief are stated in the present matter. The applicant's best course is to go on with his action.

No order.

Mr. Marais moved, on behalf of petitioner, for leave to sue in forma pauperis, John McKenzie Johnson, of Mossel Bay for damages for breach of contract of marriage, lying-in expenses, and maintenance, and support of an illegitimate child, of which respondent is the father. Counsel said he was prepared to certify.

Upon counsel's certificate of probabilis causa, rule granted, returnable on October 31, service by registered letter addressed to defendant at Vogel Vlei, near Mossel Bay.

Ex parte MATHEWSON AND WIFE.

Husband and wife—Antenuptial contract—Registration.

In order that a mutual agreement arrived at by parties before marriage may be registered after marriage as an antenuptial contract, there must be proof of the agreement, and the application for registration must not be delayed unreasonably.

Mr. Marais moved for leave to register a certain ante-nuptial contract of marriage excluding community of property.

Counsel, in argument, cited In re Lezard and Wife (16, C.T.R., 1,018).

De Villiers, C.J.: I quite adhere to what I said in the case of Lezard and Wife—that if the parties clearly showed that it was their agreement before marriage that there should be no community of property in that case, the Court could assist the parties. But I think a timely application should in every case be made. There the application was made within four months after the marriage; in the present case the application is made more than a year after the marriage. True, there is some explanation by Mr. Hugo that he himself did not consider at the time that such an application could be made. I think that his first thoughts were better than his second. His second thoughts were raised by the decision in Lezard and Wife's case, but if he had read the same report as I have read now, he would have seen that the two cases were different. At all events, there is nothing in the affidavits of the petitioners to show that there was a definite agreement before marriage that community of property was intended to be excluded. The parties say that they vaguely understood what the consequences were, and they thought it advisable that their contemplated marriage should be without community of property, but there is a great deal of difference between thinking it was advisable and actually making an agreement. It must be proved that there was an agreement before between the parties to the marriage, a binding agreement upon both parties, and that it was only in consequence of circumstances for which they were not responsible that that agreement was not placed in the form of an ante-nuptial contract before their marriage. I do not think these decisions can possibly be extended to a case like the present. No order will be made upon the present application.

Ex parte DUMBLETON.

Mr. H. G. Lewis moved for leave to petitioner to sue his wife by edictal citation. Petitioner has been residing in the district of Bredasdorp during the past few years, having come to this country from New Zealand for the benefit of his health. His wife, however, remained in New Zealand, and refused to join him.

Ordered to stand over for proof of domicile.

Ex parte CHRISTENSEN.

Mr. Inghold moved for the amendment of petitioner's name in the Debt Registry and certain mortgage bond, and for registration of the bond. The Registrar of Deeds reported favourably.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ROSSOUW.

Mr. Louwrens moved for leave to mortgage certain estate property to enable petitioner to pay a bill of costs incurred in an action wherein petitioner was defendant. The matter had previously been before the Court, and had been standing over for proof as to the costs. Counsel now produced the bills of costs, which amounted to £1,501 14s. 5d.

De Villiers, C.J.: It seems that the money has been expended. That is all one can say. The costs are enormous, and out of proportion to the importance of the suit. Notwithstanding the taxation, I am satisfied that the costs are enormous, and out of proportion to what they should be.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte CELLIERS.

Mr. P. T. Lewis moved for leave to petitioner to take transfer of certain property in an estate of which he is one of the assignees.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte GORMAN.

Mr. W. J. van Zyl moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband, Robert Roderick Gorman, in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights. Petitioner resides at Lady Grey, division of Aliwal North.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, and rule granted calling upon respondent to show cause why petitioner should not sue him in forma pauperis, citation and rule returnable on the 12th January, 1906, personal service, if possible, of rule and citation, failing which one publication in the "Northern Post."

Ex parte MASON.

Mr. Sutton moved for leave to petitioner to sue in forma pauperis one Cornelius J. S. de Villiers, farmer, Stellenbosch, for £20 damages for loss of a horse, which died while in respondent's possession.

Upon counsel's certificate of probabilis causa, rule granted, returnable on the 25th October.

Ex parte BIRCH.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on behalf of petitioner, who resides in Cape Town, for leave to sue her husband, Edwin Otto Birch, in forma pauperis, for restitution of conjugal rights.

Rule granted, returnable on the 24th October.

Ex parte VAN RIET.

Mr. Ingram moved for leave to petitioner to sue Joseph A. Nicholson, of Johannesburg, by edictal citation, on certain kustings brief, and to attach certain property at Vryburg ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, and property mentioned attached, citation to be served personally, and to be returnable on the last day of term.

Mr. Close moved, on behalf of petitioner, for leave to sue one George F. Schmidt by edictal citation, for damages for breach of promise of marriage. Respondent was stated to be now residing in German South-West Africa.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, returnable on the 7th November, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte ESTATE BAKER.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, K.C., moved for leave to petitioner to transfer certain property at Port Elizabeth in terms of an agreement entered into between the trustees and the parties interested in the estate. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that the reason why the application was made to the Court was to protect any children that may possibly be born hereafter to the heirs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

HOFFMAN V. CAPE TOWN
TOWN COUNCIL. { 1907.
Oct. 18th.
" 21st.
" 22nd.

This was an action for damages brought by Abraham Hoffman against the Town Council of Cape Town.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. Plaintiff is a jeweller and speculator in soft goods, residing and carrying on business in Cape Town. Defendants are the Town Council of the City of Cape Town.

2. At all times material hereto, plaintiff was in lawful occupation of the rooms at certain premises situate at 53, Harrington-street, Cape Town, the one on the ground floor of the said premises as a store-room, and the other on the first floor as a bedroom.

3. On or about the 15th day of June, 1906, a fire broke out on the said premises. At the time of the said fire there was a quantity of goods and merchandise of the value of £139 5s., the property of the plaintiff, lying in the said store-room.

4. The said fire was completely extinguished on the afternoon of the said 15th June, 1906.

5. On the morning of the 16th day of June, 1906, plaintiff made arrangements for the removal of the said goods to other premises. While making the said arrangements plaintiff provided a special constable to guard his goods, which were then entirely undamaged.

6. On the said 16th day of June, 1906, and between the hours of 1 and 2 p.m., certain workmen in the employ of the defendant Council and acting for and on behalf of the defendant Council as agents thereof, entered the said premises, and though warned that plaintiff had valuable goods upon the said premises as aforesaid they (the said workmen) wrongfully and unlawfully, or in the alternative improperly and negligently knocked down a portion of a certain wall upon the said premises, that is to say, a wall between the kitchen of the said premises and plaintiff's store-room, and forming portion of the said storeroom. The said wall was on the said 16th day of June prior to its destruction as aforesaid in a thoroughly sound and undamaged condition.

7. The said wall fell upon plaintiff's goods in the said store-room, completely burying same, and causing great damage thereto. The said goods are now of the value of £5.

8. By reason of the wrongful and unlawful, or, in the alternative, the improper and negligent conduct of defendant's agents as aforesaid, plaintiff says he has suffered loss and damage in the sum of £134 5s.

9. Defendants neglect and refuse to pay the said sum of £134 5s., or any part thereof, though requested so to do.

Wherefore, plaintiff claims: (a) Judgment for the sum of £134 5s., as and for damages; (b) interest a tempore morae; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration are admitted.

2. As to paragraphs 3 and 4, the defendant Council admits that on or about the said 15th June a fire broke out in the aforesaid premises, and that it was extinguished on the afternoon of the said 15th June. Save as above, paragraphs 3 and 4 are denied.

3. Defendant has no knowledge of the allegations in paragraph 5, and does not admit them.

4. As to paragraph 6, the defendant admits that on the said 16th June its workmen entered upon the said premises, but denies the remaining allegations therein.

5. The defendant says specially that on the said 15th June the Superintendent of the Fire Brigade, duly acting under the powers conferred upon him under the Provisions of Act No. 26 of 1895, ordered the demolition of certain parts of the said premises, and that in pursuance of such orders certain workmen in defendant's employ, on the 16th June following, entered on the said premises, and duly carried out the said order for demolition, and if the said wall referred to in paragraph 6 was demolished by them (which defendant does not admit), the said demolition was a work of necessity within the meaning of sections 159 and 161 of the said Act, and the defendant by the last-named section is indemnified and exempted from all claim by the plaintiff herein.

6. The defendant says that the said wall collapsed and fell upon plaintiff's goods in the said store-room, but save as aforesaid denies the allegations in paragraph 7.

7. Paragraphs 8 and 9 are denied, save that the defendant admits its refusal to pay.

Wherefore the defendant Council prays that the plaintiff's claim be dismissed with costs.

The replication was as follows: As to paragraph 5 of defendant's plea, plaintiff specially denies that the demolition of the said wall was a work of necessity within the meaning of sections 159 and 161 of the said Act No. 26 of 1883, or that the defendant is by the last-named section or otherwise indemnified or exempted from all or any claim by the plaintiff herein. Plaintiff craves leave to repeat the allegations in paragraph 6 of the declaration contained. Save as above, and save as to admissions, plaintiff denies all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the plea contained, joins issue therein, and again prays for judgment in terms of the declaration.

Mr. Lewis was for the plaintiff; Mr. McGregor, K.C., with him Mr. Gutsche, was for the defendant Corporation.

The plaintiff was called, and gave evidence bearing out the allegations made in the declaration. He said he begged the officials of the Town Council to allow him to remove his goods, but he was told the Council's orders must be carried out. He engaged police to protect the goods. He detailed the damage done to the goods. Some goods were stolen.

Police Constable Fowler said that on June 16 he was sent to take charge of the building. He heard plaintiff ask one of the Town Council officials to give him time to remove his goods, but the official gave no answer.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor, witness said he saw little marks of fire. Morton was the foreman, and he was associated with everything that was done. He was not there when the wall was specially tapped. Hoffman asked witness to protect him against any collapse of the wall, as he was hard of hearing.

Sub-Inspector Kane, Urban Police, said he was at the building during the fire, and saw it extinguished. He saw the wall at the back of Hoffman's bedroom, and there was nothing unsafe about it, as far as he could see. There was a lot of water in the passage. Hoffman made application for special protection, and had, of course, to pay specially for it. Witness received a telephone message on Saturday, and as a result of that, went up to the premises. He saw Morton, and two or three other men, who appeared to be arranging to pull down the wall by Hoffman's bedroom. He said to Morton: "Don't you think you are very unwise to pull this man's walls down before giving him an opportunity of removing his goods?" Morton seemed very high-handed about the matter, and then witness advised Morton to see the City Engineer before doing anything further. Morton desisted after that. He did not hear that the wall had fallen down until some time after.

Cross-examined: He simply went over the building as he generally went over all buildings after fires. He did not suggest to Hoffman that he should get a special constable, in fact, witness demurred at granting a special constable, but afterwards this was allowed. He could not have mistaken Morton as the man who spoke to him, because he had a peculiar cast in his eye.

Re-examined by Mr. Lewis: He did not pose as a building expert, but he did not see anything visible which would point to anything being wrong with the wall.

Andrew Schultz stated that he saw a man striking at the continuation of Hoffman's bedroom with a crowbar.

Henry Rowe Rowe, architect, of Cape Town, said he made an inspection of premises in Harrington-street. He saw a lot of goods under a window, and under the debris of the wall. Hoffman's bedroom was sound with the exception of certain cracks in the wall. From the appearance of the walls, he thought that they might have been taken down. They could quite as well have been shored up as the rest of the building.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: Will you say that the wall was pulled down?

Witness: I cannot say whether it was pulled down or collapsed.

Do you think the water came from the room above?—I don't think so.

Have you had any intimate knowledge of the effect of fire on walls?—I have had a good deal to do with fire assessment.

What is the effect of fire upon walls when a powerful jet of water is playing upon it?—Well, if the wall were not very substantially built, and a hose water had washed the clay out of the joints then there might be a danger that the wall would collapse, but if the wall were reasonably built the stability of the wall would only be impaired to such an extent that the owner might insist that a new wall should be supplied in place of the damaged one, but that would not necessarily mean any immediate danger.

John Henry Tunncliffe, builder and contractor, Cape Town, said he remembered going to the premises in Harrington-street. He confirmed generally what Mr. Rowe said. He examined what was left of the walls. In his opinion it was not necessary to pull down the wall in question, because it was Dutch built and substantial. He could not say whether there were holes in the ceiling or not.

James Gray, a builder, carrying on business in Cape Town, said he visited the premises in Harrington-street. He saw two men knocking down the walls of the place, and a portion of the building fall in.

Morris Joseph, a traveller, whose evidence was taken on commission, stated that he lived at one time in the building. He noticed no cracks on the wall of Hoffman's bedroom. He saw several quantities of goods lying about and noticed a man knocking down a wall.

Mrs. Kline, wife of Sima Kline, carpenter and builder, said she occupied the building and let part to Hoffman. After the fire she went through the back-yard, and she examined Hoffman's bedroom, and was glad to see that it was comparatively undamaged.

Mr. Lewis closed his case.

Felix Mitchell, superintendent of the Cape Town Fire Brigade, stated that he went with the brigade to the fire. In all three minutes elapsed between the alarm and the time the brigade was on the scene. Before he left the premises he made an inspection. He found the wall "B" on the plan in a very shaky condition. The wall "C" fell during the progress of the fire. Mr. Mitchell described the effects of the fire in detail. The wall "B," in his opinion, was dangerous to life and property. They used 40,000 gallons of water in putting out the fire. There were several small holes in the ceiling. He gave instructions to have the wall "B" pulled down, on account of its dangerous condition. That was the only order he gave for the demolition of the walls. He noticed that people were removing things while the Fire Brigade was at work.

In reply to Mr. Lewis, witness said the whole of the building was water-logged, and the heat was very severe. He gave instructions to have the wall "B" removed, because he was afraid it might be dangerous to people in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Lewis: When does your control of a building cease?

Witness: When I report to the Council.

Richard J. Geoffrey Herd, station officer in charge of the Chapel-street branch station, stated that the wall "B" on the plan after the fire was in a very tottering condition; the wall "C" fell during the progress of the fire. He did not give any instructions as to the pulling down of the walls.

James Morton, general foreman, employed by the Corporation of Cape Town, said he visited the building. He had received instructions to put up a boarding round the building, for the purpose of preventing any accidents. He noticed that certain of the walls were in a very dangerous condition, especially the wall "B" on the plan. The wall was removed bit by bit by the hammer. The old Dutch brick was simply clay, and would absolutely run when water was poured on it. He noticed a great deal of goods in Hoffman's room, but they were of little value. In fact, the room was simply a dumping-ground for all sorts of rubbish that could not be sold on the Parade.

Cross-examined by Mr. Lewis: He received instructions to pull down the wall "B," and to remove any slates that were dangerous. Hoffman didn't beg witness to give him an opportunity to remove his goods; in fact, he had no conversation with plaintiff, and only saw him when he came running out of the building.

Further evidence was led for the defence, corroborating that given by previous witnesses. Building experts were called, who gave it as their opinion that the wall slid down.

After hearing counsel in argument, on the facts,

The Court gave judgment for the defendant Council.

Postea (October 22nd).

Maasdorp, J., reviewed the evidence, and said that none of the theories advanced on both sides were of great assistance to the Court. The conclusion he came to was that the wall was in such a state that it might have fallen, or, on the other hand, it might have stood for a day or two longer, and might have been broken down before it was actually on the point of falling. It was necessary therefore to go into the direct evidence to find whether it was established on either side that the wall fell, or that it was taken down by the defendant's servants. Now, the Court had the positive evidence of Morton, Johnson and Liddle that the wall was not taken down. The positive direct evidence on the other side was that of Scholtz and Joseph. Now, the evidence of Joseph, he (the learned judge) must criticise as unsatisfactory. It seemed to him that the Court would have to regard the servants of the Municipality, not only as negligent and reckless, but as wholly wicked and criminal, if Joseph's evidence were to be accepted. As to Scholtz's evidence, it seemed to him that Scholtz did not give much attention to the man he saw on the roof. Scholtz's evidence did not give the Court much assistance. The conclusion I come to is this: that there is no doubt that the wall was in a dangerous, tottering condition, owing to its exposure to the fire and heat, and if the photographs are looked at, it will be seen that the inner main walls of this parti-

OLIVIER V. GOOSEN. { 1907.
Oct. 18th.

Mr. Swift moved for judgment for £7 7s. 8d., balance owing of a judgment debt of £369 1s. 3d., with costs from the 11th January last.
Order granted.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence for £1,971 3s. 2d., balance of a mortgage bond with interest from the 1st January, 1907, bond due by reason of notice having been given. Counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

Transfer duty — Purchase by promoters as trustees for company.

chasers had bought, as trustees, for the intended company, and that the change of name did not affect the identity of the company, authorized transfer to be effected directly by the seller to the company.

The question raised in the matter was whether double transfer duty should be paid or whether the applicant company was entitled to take transfer direct from the Guardian Company.

The Registrar of Deeds, in his report, said that, in view of the fact that the property forming the subject of the petition was purchased on the 23rd February, that the letter by which the purchase was concluded described the purchasers as being Messrs. O. P. P. Hoole, Wm. Macdonald, John Scrimgeour, Daniel MacLaren Brown, John Whyte, and John Pyott, that some of these gentlemen made themselves personally responsible for the payment of £7,000 of the £22,000 forming the purchase price by signing promissory notes for that amount, all of which fell due before the formation of the company, and that the latter event did not take place until the 28th November, 1903, some nine months after the property had been acquired, he did not feel justified in accepting the responsibility of permitting the proposed transfer to be effected. He did not actually, as petitioners alleged, insist upon the payment of double duty, and the passing of two transfers, but he stated that he would, in consequence of the unfortunate terms in which the contract had been concluded, probably not feel justified in permitting the transfer to be effected without the sanction of the Court. He had little doubt that the purchasers did actually acquire the property with the express object of forming the company which eventually came into existence, but, although the circumstances were favourable to the petitioners' contention, he thought they were not conclusive, and that it would be best to allow the petition to proceed. For the delay and any inconvenience which had resulted, petitioners had only themselves to blame, for had it been made clear in the correspondence that the purchase was for a company in the process of formation, and had they proceeded to registration within a reasonable time, no question would, in the absence of a consideration, have been raised by him.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) moved. The respondents did not appear.

Mr. Schreiner said that fundamentally the Court had to inquire whether there had been two sales of this property or only one. On the facts, it seemed—and the Registrar's report corroborated that—to have been clearly the expressed intention in purchasing the property to form the company, which was subsequently formed and registered. The company was registered after some delay, but the delay was sufficiently explained in the affidavits. It was not an afterthought to form the company. He submitted that the affidavits and the original documents clearly showed that there was one purchase, and one transaction only, viz., on behalf of the company. Counsel cited Ex parte Botha (13, C.T.R., 1,142). Certain privileges were given to certain large holders of shares, but the Registrar seemed to be satisfied that this had nothing to do with the acquisition of the property by the company. The Registrar was right in bringing the matter before the Court, but he submitted that in this case there was no question as to whether the revenue would be duly protected if the property were transferred direct to the company. He cited Ex parte Blaauwklip Garden Co. (20 S.C., 363), Union-Castle Steamship Co.'s Case (19 S.C., 180), and Liquidator, Cape of Good Hope Bank v. Registrar of Deeds (9 Juta, 144).

De Villiers, C.J.: Applications of this kind should, I think, be carefully scrutinised, because there can be no doubt that they are liable to be abused in future. Persons who are promoters of companies like this might sell their property to these companies, and realise a profit upon the sale, there would be no ostensible profit, because if they, after the formation of the company, receive a kind of bonus for having allowed the company to have the property at the same price which they paid for it. In the present case, however, it appears to me that the whole transaction was bona fide. The intention clearly was to buy for the company, which was subsequently formed. The company subsequently formed had a different name from what was originally intended, but it was ostensibly the same company, and it seems that when, subsequently, the shareholders agreed to give the original purchasers and another gentleman (Larson) certain privileges, it was quite independently of their being the original purchasers, because Larson himself was not one of the original purchasers. The original purchasers were intended to be in the position of trustees, and the Act clearly recognises that where transfer is actually made in favour of persons who are only trustees, there may be a re-transfer without payment of transfer duty. Therefore, under these special circumstances, I am of opinion that the application should be granted. It appears to me that the case falls under the principles laid down in the case of Botha, which is referred to, but I must repeat that every case will have to be fully scrutinised before the Court would be justified in treating the sale as a single sale, instead of two sales. I consider that the Registrar was perfectly justified in raising the question, and, therefore, as to costs, I do not think there should be any costs given to the applicants.

Mr. Schreiner: We do not ask for costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: An order will, therefore, be made as prayed.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Findlay and Tait. Respondents in default.]

ATTENBOROUGH V. ATTENBOROUGH.

This was an action brought by Amelia Attenborough, of Stellenbosch, against her husband, Louis Henry Attenborough, of Sydney, N.S.W., for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Gutsche, was for plaintiff; defendant, who was sued by edictal citation, did not appear.

Plaintiff said that she was married to defendant at Brixton, England, on the 19th December, 1897. They lived together in England for about four years. In 1901 defendant came out to this Colony, and remained about four years in the employ of Messrs. Ohlsson, losing his situation because of his intemperance. Witness also came out in 1901. In November, 1905, defendant left for Australia, giving her £15 to maintain herself. He had not since contributed towards her support or invited her to go and join him. After the present proceedings had been commenced, he wrote saying that there was nothing to prevent her from joining him. Witness could not have done so because she had no money, and had not known his address.

Decree of restitution granted with costs, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before the 12th January, 1908, failing which, rule to issue calling upon defendant to show cause on the 1st February why decree of divorce should not be granted with costs, same order as to service as in the previous process.

BOFFEY V. BOFFEY.

This was an action brought by Cossie Johnson L. L. Boffey, late of Wynberg, against her husband, Henry Sutton Boffey, an hotelkeeper, for divorce, on the ground of his alleged adultery with one Kitty Murphy.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Struben), was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Mr. Schreiner said that defendant had filed a plea, but he now appeared to have withdrawn from the proceedings.

Plaintiff said that she was married to defendant on the 21st August, 1902, defendant having come to England to her for the purpose of being married. The marriage took place at St. Mark's, Clerkenwell, Islington. After their marriage, witness came out to this country. Defendant kept the Railway Hotel and the Royal Hotel at Wynberg. For three years they lived together on pleasant terms. Witness went to England. At that time Miss Kitty Murphy had not been engaged as a barmaid. On her return, she found that Miss Murphy had been engaged as barmaid at the Railway Hotel. For a time her relations with her husband were of a pleasant character, but she eventually had reason to complain that her husband was too friendly with Miss Murphy. Witness and her husband resided at the Railway Hotel. Miss Murphy was dismissed from defendant's service in May, 1907. Defendant asked her to drive out Miss Murphy in her trap. At first she did not suspect that anything was wrong between defendant and Miss Murphy, but afterwards, knowing what she did, it became very distasteful to her to have to drive out Miss Murphy. Witness had returned from England in September, 1906, and about three months afterwards she first became suspicious of the relations between the defendant and Miss Murphy. Witness continued to reside at the hotel with her husband until the 17th August, 1907. Defendant used to persuade her to go out alone for a drive in the afternoon. On her return she had noticed indications that there had been improper relations between her husband and Miss Murphy. So recently as Saturday last, the defendant came to see her and asked her to forgive him. She declined, and told him to go away. Witness had not been led by others, as the defendant had suggested in his letter. Her life had become intolerable, and about the second week in May she told defendant that he must choose between her (witness) and Miss Murphy. Miss Murphy was dismissed, and she subsequently went to reside in a boarding-house in Wynberg.

A private detective, Miss Shalders (sister of the plaintiff), John James Woodlands, of Wynberg, and Alfred Dexter, of Wynberg, also gave evidence. Miss Shalders, who is a professional singer, stated that on the night of the 16th August, in order to observe the conduct of the defendant and Miss Murphy, she blackened her face and attired herself as a Malay woman.

Mr. Schreiner said that if the Court thought the evidence sufficient, he would close his case. Otherwise, he would have to apply for a postponement, in order to procure the evidence of a girl named Phyllis Jacobs, who was believed to have been paid by defendant to go away.

De Villiers, C.J., said that there was a certain amount of vague evidence, and Mrs. Boffey's evidence was not so specific as it might be.

Plaintiff was recalled, and gave further evidence in answer to questions by the Chief Justice in reference to illicit intercourse between the defendant and Miss Murphy.

Hannah Peterson said that she had written on behalf of Phyllis Jacobs to defendant for money. She had seen money received by Jacobs from defendant. Witness had written a letter on behalf of Mrs. Jacobs asking for money to enable Phyllis Jacobs to go up-country, as she might get into trouble, seeing that she had given evidence first for one side and then for the other.

Arthur G. Syfret, of Messrs. Syfret, Godlonton and Low, plaintiff's attorneys, spoke to efforts which had been made to trace the whereabouts of the girl Jacobs at George and Great Brak River. Plaintiff was very anxious to have her evidence for the trial, and had employed an inquiry agent (Detective Osberg) to make an investigation, but up to the present it had been impossible to find the girl. A Kafir named Michael, who saw the girl go away by train, had, however, been found, and was prepared to give evidence if necessary.

De Villiers, C.J.: In the earlier proceedings the defendant filed affidavits, and denied the statements made by the plaintiff in this case. He has also filed a plea, in which he positively denies the charge of adultery. But to-day, when the case comes to trial, the defendant does not appear, and there is no witness on his behalf to deny the allegations which are made by plaintiff. If there had been any counter-balancing evidence on behalf of the defendant, I should have thought that the evidence given on the part of the plaintiff is not very strong, but certainly a sufficiently strong case has been made out in the absence of any counter-balancing evidence to justify the Court in coming to the conclusion that there has been adultery in the present case. At the time when this lady, Miss Murphy, was watched that night, she had left the defendant's service, and it is wholly inexplicable what business could have brought her to the hotel at that time of night, when she was seen to enter the front door, the door of the tap, which communicates by a door with the billiard-room. I have no doubt that the defendant did enter the billiard-room that evening, because he was seen by Miss Shalders, who had a position from which she could clearly watch him. We have the evidence of Miss Shalders, who said that she heard the laugh of Miss Murphy in the billiard-room while the defendant was there. Where a young lady meets a man in such circumstances, as I am satisfied she did meet the defendant, it could only have been for improper purposes. Well, then, in addition to that, I cannot lose sight of the evidence given by plaintiff herself as to the signs which she had noticed on two separate occasions. There would have been nothing to explain the existence of these signs, unless there had been improper conduct between these parties. We have also the fact, deposed to by plaintiff and her sister, Miss Shalders, that when defendant had this interview with the plaintiff, he asked her to forgive him. Well, there is nothing he could have asked her to forgive him for, unless it were the adultery. That was the charge made, and I cannot conceive of anything else being in his mind when he asked her to forgive him, unless it were this adultery. It is unfortunate that the witness Phyllis is not here, and I think that that evidence as to the money payments, which were made to her at all events, required some explanation from the defendant. He must have known that that question at all events would be raised as to this girl being spirited away, and he must have known how essential it was that he should explain for what purpose that money was given to Phyllis, and he does not come here even to explain so much. So that, under all these circumstances, I think that the Court is justified in coming to the conclusion that there was this improper conduct between defendant and Miss Murphy. In addition, Miss Murphy I suppose has had notice of these proceedings, and she does not come forward to deny the allegation. The Court will, therefore, grant a decree of divorce, with costs, including costs of the previous application. Then, as to the joint estate, the contention of plaintiff's counsel is that the parties were domiciled here, and that the law of community of property would apply. There is no reason to question that view. The Court will grant an order for the division of the joint estate, and for that purpose appoint a receiver, with power to administer and divide the proceeds between the parties, but I think that the appointing of a receiver should be postponed for a week to enable the defendant to make an offer to the plaintiff of a sum of money in lieu of dividing the estate. It would be in the interests of the defendant himself to make a fair and reasonable offer so as to save a stranger from intruding into his affairs, and I think it is in the interests of Mrs. Boffey to accept a reasonable offer. She will have to bear in mind the depression that now exists, and the fact that a forced sale of property now would not realise what it would if times were better. I shall postpone the appointment of a receiver to enable the defendant to make an offer to the plaintiff of a sum of money in lieu of half the estate.

SUPREME COURT

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Ex parte LOUW AND OTHERS. { 1907.
Oct. 19th.
" 22nd.

Fidei-commissum—Leave to sell property.

The applicants, being fiduciary legatees of certain farms, bequeathed to them subject to a fidei-commissum in favour of their children, applied to the Court for authority to sell the same. The Court, being satisfied that the sale, if concluded, would be extremely advantageous, not only to the born issue, who were minors, but also to the unborn issue of the applicants, authorized the sale and directed that, in case of a sale, the proceeds should be paid into the Guardians' Fund, to be administered for the benefit of the fiduciary and of the fidei-commissary legatees respectively of the farms.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, K.C. (for petitioners), moved for leave to enter into a contract for the prospecting of certain farms in the districts of Carnarvon and Fraserburg, with a view to purchase being given by the applicants to the prospector. Counsel said that the applicants were sons-in-law of certain two testators, who were legatees of the farms. The farms had to go after the death of the legatees to their male children, according to the will, and in default of male children the properties were to be sold amongst the heirs, who were also the six children of the testators, for the benefit of the spouse and daughter, and if there were no such to be sold amongst the heirs for their brothers and sisters, who were co-legatees. The petitioners proposed to enter into a contract with one Wm. Ford, managing director of the North-western Prospecting Syndicate, Ltd., for rights of prospecting for petroleum and other oils, and an option of purchase. The will imposed a prohibition against the sale or mortgage of the farms bequeathed. The offers made by the syndicate in case of purchase were as follows: Petition J. N. Louw, £12,000 (Divisional Council valuation, £2,500); petition A. J. S. Maritz, £12,000 (valuation, £1,600); petition M. J. C. Lotriet, £15,000 (valuation, £1,000); petition J. A. Louw (two farms), £7,000 (valuation, £1,000), and £12,000 (valuation, £2,000). Counsel read an affidavit by Mr. Ford, who stated that it was not proposed to prospect for gold or diamonds, but solely for oils. Counsel submitted that it was clear that the prohibition of alienation was for the benefit of the heirs, and also for the benefit of the children—the male children first, and in default of male children, then for the spouse and daughters, and in default of such for their brothers and sisters, who were co-legatees. It was to the interests of the minors that this scheme should go through, and the sanction of the Court in its capacity of Upper Guardian was, therefore, sought. Counsel quoted Sande, on Restraints (Webber's Trans., p. 274, sec. 37, p. 265, secs. 25, 26, and 27), and Voet, 37, 9, 8.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (October 22).

De Villiers, C.J.: The offer is clearly for the benefit of the fideicommissary legatees, and if they were all in case and of age they certainly would have consented to its acceptance by the fiduciary legatees who are the applicants. Some of the fideicommissary legatees are minors and, so far as they are concerned, the Court would have no hesitation in sanctioning the acceptance of the offer. The difficulty is that more children may be born to the applicants, who would be entitled to share in the fideicommissary bequest, and the question is whether the Court should sanction any alienation of the property until the time has arrived when all those who are entitled to share in the property shall be in being. This is not a case in which the testator has prohibited the alienation out of the family or in which an entail has been created beyond the first degree of descent. An offer has been made such as is not likely to be made again, and it is for the interest of the unborn as well as the born issue of the applicants that it should be accepted. The Master approves of it, and under all the circumstances, this Court will not withhold its assent: but the proceeds must be paid to the Master for the benefit of those concerned under the will.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

ESTATE STEPHAN V. ESTATE { 1907.
STEPHAN. { Oct. 19th.

Appeal from Supreme Court to Privy Council—Quorum of judges.

A divisional Court, presided over by a single judge, has no jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a judgment of the Supreme Court given by more than one judge.

This was an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a judgment of the Supreme Court.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl was for applicants; Mr. Benjamin, K.C. (with him Mr. Louwrens), appeared for respondents.

Mr. Benjamin raised a question as to the competency of a Divisional Court of the Supreme Court to deal with this matter, and quoted section 50 of the Charter of Justice and section 5, Act 35, 1896. He submitted that one judge did not constitute a quorum of the Supreme Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear that there must be more than one judge to hear this matter. If two judges should be sitting on Monday, the application may be mentioned then.

STEYTLER V. STEYTLER.

Mr. Bisset (with him Dr. Greer) moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of a commission de bene esse, to take the evidence of Mrs. Charles Alexander Horne, of the Palmerston Hotel, Cape Town. Mrs. Horne was indisposed.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C. (for respondents), opposed.

Order granted, appointing Mr. Roux as commissioner, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte ESTATE LATE LEHMAN.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., moved, on the petition of Charles Friedlander, attorney, Cape Town, as representing certain persons claiming to be heirs ab intestato of the late E. A. Lehman, in his lifetime of Middelburg, Cape Colony, for an order calling upon all persons concerned to show cause why a sum of £1,055, in the hands of the Master, to the credit of the estate, should not be paid out to petitioner for distribution among the heirs, according to the law of inheritance ab intestato. Efforts had been made to trace the wife of deceased, but without avail.

De Villiers, C.J., suggested that the death notice filed in the Master's Office might disclose some further information.

Mr. Benjamin produced the death notice, which showed that Lehman died in the gaol hospital at Hanover, but no information was given as to his social status, or as to whether he had any children.

De Villiers, C.J., said it was extremely probable that Mrs. Lehman predeceased her husband.

Rule granted, returnable on the 12th January, 1908, rule to be published twice in an English newspaper and twice in a Dutch newspaper circulating in Middelburg.

Ex parte SMARTT SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. Close moved for an order authorising the reduction of the company's capital from £200,000 to £165,294 by cancelling 34,706 of the 40,000 £1 shares issued, and held by shareholders. Consents by the principal creditors were produced. Counsel cited the case of E. K. Green and Co., Ltd. (17 C.T.R., 668).

Rule granted in similar terms to E. K. Green and Co.'s matter, similar publication to be made as then ordered, rule returnable on the 23rd October.

Ex parte BOTHMA.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband, Daniel Andries Bothma, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Petitioner had not heard anything as to her husband's whereabouts since 1899, when he was fighting in the Anglo-Boer War in the Orange Free State. He was last seen in a wounded condition. Counsel cited in re Booysen (Foord, 189).

De Villiers, C.J.: The man probably died from his wounds. I don't see how I can very well grant an order for leave to sue by edict for restitution when the petitioner raises a strong presumption that the respondent is dead.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further inquiries and information.

SPARKS AND YOUNG V. BUFFALO SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE CO., LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

This was an application upon notice, calling upon the liquidators of the respondent company to show cause why they should not be ordered to admit and rank against the assets a claim by applicants for £552 19s. 7d., proof of debt having been duly sworn and lodged.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Swift) was for applicants; Dr. Greer was for respondents.

Having heard affidavits and argument, De Villiers, C.J., said the view he took was that it would be very difficult, if at all possible, to decide the applicants' claim on motion. The Court would order that the applicants' claim be tried by action, costs to be costs in the cause, respondents to reserve sufficient funds to meet the amount of any dividend that may be awarded on applicants' claim and costs, and applicants to give security for costs to the satisfaction of the Registrar.

AND SUPPLY CO., LTD. }

Mr. McGregor, K.C., appeared for applicants; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Uppington), appeared for respondents.

Mr. McGregor said that this matter had been before a referee, and he had reported, and two special cases stated by him at the request of one of the parties came up. There was also an appeal on some reference from a judgment of Mr.

Justice Maasdorp. The parties were anxious that the appeal, the referee's report, and the two special cases should be heard on the same day.

De Villiers, C.J., said that leave would be granted for the hearing of the other matters on the same day as the appeal. The Court would consider the question of fixing a date for the hearing.

MOLLER V. HAMMAN AND OTHERS.

This matter came on appeal from a judgment of the Water Court, Worcester, arising out of an application brought by the present respondents for an order upon appellant to allow respondents a right of abutment of water from the farm Patrys Kloof.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton), was for appellants; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, I.L.C., was for respondents.

Mr. Schreiner said the appellants' case was that the Nonna Irrigation Board was constituted under the Act for the purposes of irrigation. Mr. Moller was owner by sub-divisional transfer of a portion of the farm Nonna. The whole of the farm Nonna was included in the area of the Board, but Mr. Moller was also owner of the adjoining farm Patrys Kloof. At the top, near the Lange Bergen Range, the Irrigation Board desired to establish a weir from which they dammed an abutment to enable them to bring water by pipes to their properties lower down. The Board, without having any contract or agreement, without having any servitude or prescriptive right, and without alleging any right whatsoever in them over against the farm Patrys Kloof to go and make their abutment at the point shown on the plan, and from there to lead water, decided that the applicants were entitled to this abutment. The Water Court, without attempting to say that Mr. Moller should have a share of the water, as a riparian proprietor, had dealt with an application under the Act, and said that Mr. Moller was obliged to allow an abutment at a point marked "diversion weir."

[De Villiers, C.J.: And allow the respondents to take all the water?]

Mr. Schreiner: That they do not decide; they would not decide whether the respondents were to take all the water, but, of course, the effect would be that they would take all the water.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The declaration says "the water," and judgment is given in terms of the prayer.]

Mr. Buchanan submitted that the effect of the judgment would be that appellant would still be able to obtain his proportionate share of the water. The whole of the water had not been awarded by the Water Court to the respondents. He quoted section 67 of the Irrigation Act, No. 32 of 1906.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that the Act did not give any lower proprietor the right to go upon the lands of the upper proprietor to obtain an abutment of water. In this connection, he paid a tribute to the valuable work on the irrigation laws recently compiled by Sir H. Juta.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that the Court were anxious, if possible, to make a success of this, the first case under the Act. Could counsel assist the Court in arriving at what was a reasonable share of the water?

Mr. Schreiner said that the difficulty was to make a fair statement as to the fractional quantity. In further argument, Mr. Schreiner referred to the case of Greeff v. Keller (16 C.T.R., 510), and Greeff v. Le Roux and Others (15 C.T.R., 958). He submitted, as a first ground for upholding the appeal, that there was no right whatever in the respondents to take these proceedings; secondly, that the respondents had produced no evidence at all to show that they had any right to take the water within the meaning of section 36; thirdly, that on the proceedings themselves, the Water Court had erred entirely in refusing to consider the question of distribution, in refusing to allow the appellant to declare that he was entitled to a reasonable share of the water, and in not determining what a reasonable share was; and, fourthly, that the Court erred in admitting certain correspondence and refusing to admit other correspondence.

Mr. Buchanan said he would submit that it was clear, having regard to what passed during the course of the trial, that the judgment of the Water Court did not give the respondents all the water. The judgment of the Court was that the respondents had riparian rights, and were entitled to a certain amount of the water, and therefore the Court gave the servitudes of aqueduct and abutment. If the Appeal Court decided to go into the question of the distribution, he would ask that the matter should be postponed in order that it could be ascertained what would be an equitable distribution.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is quite clear that the judgment of the Water Court cannot stand in its present form. The declaration, if I may so call it, in effect claims a servitude of abutment and a servitude of aqueduct in respect of all the water of the Nonna River. The word "all" is not used; "the water of the Nonna River" are the words used, but it is quite clear that was the claim of the applicants, and the judgment of the Court gave these servitudes in terms of the application. The evidence does not support that claim in the least. There is some evidence that the lower proprietors have for a long period, at the point "B," taken the water out of the Nonna River, but the point "B" is a considerable distance below the point "A," and between the point "A" and the point "B" the respondents have a considerable extent of irrigable land, which they would be wholly prevented from irrigating if the point at which the water is taken out is diverted from point "B" to point "A." The judgment of the Water Court gives all the water at the point "A," and this deprives the respondents of very important and valuable rights, and it is quite impossible for this Court, therefore, upon the evidence before it, to support that judgment. That seems a fatal objection to the judgment, but further questions have been raised, which, however, the Court considers for the present it had better not decide. It decides at present that the Water Court was wrong in giving all the water, and that the costs of appeal should be paid by the respondents; but the matter will be postponed to enable the parties to arrive at some settlement of this dispute, and we consider that the best settlement would be to allow the judgment to stand as to the diversion of the water at the point "a," and to fix the quantity of water which the respondents should be allowed to use, or, rather, to fix the quantity of water which the applicants should be allowed to take out at the point "a." It is impossible upon the evidence before the Court now to decide what the proportion should be, but I have no doubt that after this expression of opinion, there will be no difficulty on the part of the parties in coming to some settlement, and if that is arranged, then the Court, in its final judgment, would be in a position then to support the judgment to the extent of allowing the works to proceed, but diminishing the quantity of water which the applicants will be allowed to take out at the intake. The case will, therefore, be postponed for the purpose of enabling the parties to come to some arrangement. If no arrangement is arrived at, then it will be necessary for the Court to decide the further question as to whether this application could be made before the Water Court at all, considering there was a dispute about the right to the water, and also the further question as to the construction of sec. 67 (sub-sec. e). There are no regulations yet in force, and the question may arise whether, if such regulations should be made, there was a right on the part of the lower proprietor to claim these rights under sub-sec. e. But that question does not arise now in the absence of regulations. Certainly, an important question would arise as to the construction of sec. 86 (sub-sec. 4), If the sub-sec. 2 were not in existence, I should have been inclined to hold that that dispute referred to in sub-sec. 4 is a dispute in a competent court, but, unfortunately, sub-sec. 2 refers to a dispute in a competent court, and upon that ground there is much force in Mr. Schreiner's contention that sub-sec. 4 refers to questions in dispute, which have not yet come before the Court. But then again, that construction would be somewhat inconsistent with that other sub-section I have quoted, by which the Water Court alone has jurisdiction. However, for the present that point need not be decided, because it is quite possible the parties may come to some settlement upon the basis of allowing the judgment of the Water Court to stand, subject to a reduction in the quantity of water, which the applicants shall be entitled to lead out at the intake which has been awarded to them. Whatever the result of the case may be, the Court is of opinion that the respondents will have to pay the costs in this court, and in the court below.

Buchanan, J.: In concurring with these remarks of the Chief Justice, I think it should be clearly understood that the Court now is not expressing an opinion on the construction of the Act. That is an important question which must remain open.

Hopley, J., concurred.

The Chief Justice said that by point (a), referred to in his judgment, he meant the point of intake.

Supreme Court — Quorum of judges—Leave to appeal to Privy Council—Amount involved.

Two judges sitting together form a quorum of the Supreme Court.

Where it had been agreed between the parties that a matter involving £250 should be submitted for the judgment of the Supreme Court as a test case which would decide the disposition of £25,000.

Held, that as the sum in respect of which the Court had given judgment was less than £500, it had no power to grant leave to appeal from that judgment to the Privy Council.

This was an application made by the executors of the estate of the late Henry Rudolph Stephan for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a judgment of the Supreme Court given on the 9th August, 1907, and for an order suspending execution of the judgment, pending appeal.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl was for the applicant; Mr. Schreiner, K.C., with him Mr. Benjamin, K.C., and Mr. Louwrens, was for the respondent.

Mr. Van Zyl said that the applicants offered as security the half-share of landed property in the partnership estate of Carel Stephan and another. This property was valued in the inventory at £74,000, and the one half of this was registered in the name of Carel Stephan, while the amount involved in the appeal was £25,000.

Mr. Schreiner said that a point of practice arose as to whether the Court which decided the action was sitting as a Court of Appeal, or as a Divisional Court. If the Court sat as a Divisional Court, then the appeal must go to the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court. He wished to bring this point of practice to the notice of the Court, though he was not instructed to press it strongly. Counsel referred to section 2 of Act 35 of 1904, and said that though two judges sat in this case, other divisions were sitting at the time, and the question was whether the applicants could come in the way they now did? On the merits of the case, Mr. Schreiner said the attitude he took up was that before leave to appeal was given, the whole of the undisputed amounts due to the heirs, amounting to about £50,000, should be paid out, and that security should be given for the disputed balance.

Mr. Van Zyl said provision would be made for the payment of the undisputed amounts.

[Buchanan, J.: You undertake to pay those amounts over?]

Mr. Van Zyl said the estate would have to be realised before payment could be made, and all the immovable property was in the hands of the Board of Executors. The executors would now have to begin the liquidation of the estate, and as this was done, the heirs would be paid.

Mr. Schreiner said there was a judgment against a usufructary, who was bound to give security. There was a judgment against him in favour of the heirs, and though he did not say the actual cash must be paid, he did say that to the extent of every item in H. R. Stephan's estate security should be given. He urged that the interests of the minors must be protected by the depositing of every available security.

Moreover, the final and definitive sentence of the Court was only for £250 which did not carry the right to appeal.

Mr. Van Zyl said it was understood that the judgment affected the whole amount; it affected three-quarters of Hy. Stephan's estate.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (October 23rd).

Buchanan, J.: An application has been made to the Court for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against a judgment delivered by my brother Hopley and myself, sitting as the Supreme Court. To this application two objections were taken. The first is that the Court as so constituted was not the Supreme Court, but should be considered a Divisional Court, and that, consequently, the appeal should be to the Supreme Court. On this point I would remark that from the Charter of Justice through all the subsequent Acts which have been passed relating to the administration of justice, though the number of Judges of the Supreme Court, originally three, has been from time to time increased, at all times, and in all the Acts, two of the Judges of the Supreme Court are recognised as forming a quorum of that Court. Having referred to section 5 of the Consolidating Act, No. 35, of 1896, and the formation of Divisional Courts under Act 35, 1904, Mr. Justice Buchanan went on to say: We are of opinion that it could not be said that a two Judge Court must be considered as only a Divisional Court. The practice of this Court has been in previous cases that where two Judges have been sitting they sat as the Supreme Court, and the practice has also been that where any appeal is had from two Judges so sitting as the Supreme Court the appeal is not to the Supreme Court, but to the Privy Council. Consequently, the first objection is overruled. The second objection is that the amount in dispute is only £250. The 50th section of the Charter of Justice gives a litigant right to appeal to the Privy Council, where the matter at issue amounts to or is the value of not less than £500. Though this case referred only to £250, it was said that the judgment involved a very large sum, amounting to about £27,000, being portion of an inheritance of £80,000. It was agreed between the parties that the decision of the Court in this one case should determine the distribution of assets in all other cases. But the Court is bound by the records in this case. We must look at the case stated to us to ascertain what amount is in issue. The parties having agreed that the one decision should govern other decisions, cannot justify the Court in going beyond the record, and in taking unto itself the power of granting leave to appeal where it does not exist as of right. Such power lies only in the Privy Council. I have looked at different cases, and find that the Privy Council jealously retains the right to grant leave where there is no appeal as of right, and there have been frequent instances where the Privy Council has refused to hear appeals where leave has been granted by an inferior Court in cases where there has been no right to grant such leave. It is, of course, open to the parties, if they feel aggrieved, to apply to the Privy Council. But this application for leave to appeal must be refused with costs.

Hopley, J.: I am of the same opinion for the same reasons.

SMALE BROS. AND CO. V. { 1907.
DUNBAR. { Aug. 26th.
{ Oct. 21st.

This case originally came before the Court on the 26th of August, in the present year. It was then remitted back to the Resident Magistrate of Elliotdale for further information on certain specified points. On October 21st Maasdorp, J., gave judgment as follows:

Maasdorp, J.: On the 3rd day of August, 1906, Smale and Dunbar, who carried on a business in partnership under the style of Messrs. Smale and Dunbar, dissolved partnership in terms of a written agreement. At that time Dunbar individually was indebted to the firm on account of goods sold and delivered. The plaintiffs now sue the defendant as alleged in the summons, for an amount for goods sold and delivered. This is not a quite accurate statement of the ground of indebtedness, as it now appears upon the evidence. Some items are for moneys which, it is said, should have been accounted for by Dunbar upon the partnership accounts. The form of the summons is not now material as it appears that at the trial the parties were fully aware of the nature of the issues raised. The defendant pleaded by way of exception that novation of the contract upon which the defendant's indebtedness rested had taken place, and the plaintiffs' claim was wrongly founded. The Magistrate found, in my opinion correctly, that there was no proof of this, and having regard to the larger item in dispute, it is impossible to see how such novation could have taken place. There is no reason to question the finding of the Magistrate upon the account generally, and ultimately the dispute centred round the question whether an amount of £154 5s. 10d. for cash received by Dunbar had been accounted for to the partnership. The Magistrate's finding upon the point was not quite clear, and the evidence upon which his finding was based was uncertain in its character. The matter was referred back in order to have these points cleared up. Upon the further information furnished, it is now quite clear that Dunbar failed to pay in to the business of Smale Bros. an amount of cash received by him amounting to £154, which, upon the dissolution of the firm, it was his duty to pay. The finding of the Magistrate is therefore supported by the evidence, and the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Divorce—Proof of adultery.

This was an action in which Mrs. Margaret Henrietta Steytler (born Home) sued her husband, Charles Rhenius Cruywagen Steytler, for judicial separation. The parties reside in the district of Ceres. It was alleged that for the past six years the parties had lived together unhappily owing to defendant's violent and ungovernable temper. Plaintiff said that she has suffered greatly owing to defendant's habitual cruelty to, and ill-treatment of, her. He had repeatedly cursed and sworn at her, using language of intolerable violence, and had twice assaulted her, once in or about the year 1904, and again with much violence on the 3rd March, 1907. By reason of defendant's continued and habitual violence, cruelty, and ill-treatment, further cohabitation with him had become intolerable to plaintiff. Wherefore the plaintiff prayed for: (a) A decree of separation a mensa et thoro; (b) a division of the joint estate; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

Defendant admitted the allegations in paragraph 1 of the declaration. He admitted that the parties had lived together unhappily during the last six years, but he denied that such unhappiness was due to his violent and ungovernable temper, or to any fault upon his part. He denied the allegations in paragraphs 3 and 4, and more particularly that he had been guilty of any cruelty or ill-treatment, that he had at any time cursed or sworn at her, using language as alleged, or that he assaulted her in the year 1904 and on the 3rd March, 1907, or at any time. Wherefore, he claimed that the claim may be dismissed, with costs.

There was a cross action for divorce, plaintiff alleging that on divers occasions during the years 1906, 1906, and 1907 defendant had committed adultery with one Charles Alexander Horne, and on divers other occasions during the said years with one Harry Horne. Wherefore plaintiff prayed for: (a) Decree of divorce a vinculo matrimonii; (b) division of the joint estate, together with an order declaring defendant to have forfeited all and every benefit conferred by the community of property aforesaid; (c) such further relief as may seem fit, together with (d) costs of suit.

For a plea to the declaration, defendant said she admitted paragraphs 1, 2, and 3. As to paragraph 4, she denied that she committed adultery with Charles Alexander Horne or Harry Horne during the years 1906, 1906, and 1907, or at any time. Wherefore she prayed that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

For a replication, the plaintiff said that save in so far as the plea he admitted the allegations in the declaration. He again prayed for judgment thereon, with costs.

Mr. M. Bisset and Dr. Greer appeared for plaintiff in the action for judicial separation, and for the defendant in the cross action for divorce. Mr. L. N. Benjamin, K.C., and Mr. Close appeared for the defendants in the judicial separation case, and for plaintiff in the divorce action.

It was agreed to take the divorce case first.

Mr. Benjamin asked leave to make an amendment in the divorce action in the fourth paragraph, to insert the years 1903 and 1904.

Mr. Bisset objected on the ground that particulars of these charges had been received after the 24 hours settled by his lordship.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that particulars had been offered before the expiry of the 24 hours, but they had not been considered full enough. They had then offered fuller particulars two hours after the expiry of the period.

The amendment was allowed. All witnesses in the case were asked to leave the court.

Evidence having been led at considerable length, counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Mr. Benjamin, in the course of argument, submitted that the plaintiff had made out a perfectly strong case. There was ample proof of adultery from the very compromising situations in which the defendant and the co-defendants were discovered on various occasions. Apart from that, the evidence given by Mr. Steytler himself was sufficient to rouse very strong suspicions. There was also the statement made by Mrs. Steytler with regard to the tableaux vivants, when he had to complain of his wife's dress before young Horne. With regard to the evidence given of adultery, counsel submitted that the manner in which the various witnesses entered into detail was proof of the truth being told. Several of the witnesses had only given evidence of the parties being found in compromising positions. Now, if this evidence had been given through malice, the witnesses would not have stopped at compromising positions, but would have accused them of adultery. It was well known with what respect, amounting almost to fear, that the lower classes in small villages regarded the magistrate. They would either say nothing or too much, but their restraint in giving evidence gave rise to the strongest suspicion of misconduct, and was a powerful reason for believing their evidence. Had the witnesses come into court to lie, they would not have been so restrained in describing what they saw. Rather, they would have gone "the whole hog," and declared that they had actually witnessed actions between respondent and the Hornes which could not leave a shadow on the mind of the Court that misconduct had actually taken place. Counsel, in conclusion, urged that the petitioner had placed the utmost confidence in the virtue of his wife, but that confidence, he submitted, had been misplaced. He contended that the petitioner had made out his case, and was entitled to the relief he desired.

Mr. Bisset commented upon the mass of accusations that had been made against the respondents, who had been dropped one after another. No doubt, the whole reason why such a mass of accusations was made was that it was felt that it was necessary to have such a quantity of that class of evidence, because of the fear of the case being made out. It had been said that in 1904 and 1905 Harry Horne had misconducted himself with Mrs. Steytler. At that time Harry Horne did not know Mrs. Steytler. He was in Barotseland, and as soon as he got down, he was laid up with fever. There was no doubt that both Mr. and Mrs. Steytler were fond of a Bohemian life. The fact that Mr. Horne more than once went into the bedroom and remained there alone with Mrs. Steytler, counsel would freely admit that under ordinary circumstances the Court would attach importance to it, but it was admitted here by Mr. Steytler that he himself not only allowed Mr. Horne to go into the bedroom, but he had permitted other men to do so. Mr. Steytler had admitted that Mrs. Steytler had sponged young Horne down as a nurse would do, and Mr. Steytler actually on one occasion assisted his wife to undress young Horne when he had a sudden attack of fever. With regard to the dress, it was no unusual thing for ladies in this country to appear in the morning in a light gown, and it must be remembered that it was always within Mr. Steytler's power to put an end to this. Not a person except Mr. Steytler was aware of this alleged scandal of the tableaux vivants. With regard to the first kissing incident, Mr. Steytler's evidence stood out in absolute contradiction to every other person who was present at the time. If all these acts had been seen going on for a period of four years repeatedly in the most public places and in the most open way, and detected time after time by witnesses, surely the whole of Ceres would have been literally buzzing with the scandal. The witness Johanna van Wyk had the strongest possible motive to make up a story against Mrs. Steytler, and the strongest possible motive to please Mr. Steytler. After reviewing the evidence of several of the witnesses, who, for the most part, he said, had a grudge against Mrs. Steytler, counsel submitted that there never had been a more extraordinary string of improbabilities put before a court. If Johanna van Wyk's evidence was not to be believed with regard to the boudoir, then no credence could be placed in her statement as to the incident in the drawing-room. Mr. Horne was a Magistrate of long experience, and by virtue of his position he would lay himself peculiarly open to attack, and he must of necessity make a very large number of enemies in a place like Ceres, and these witnesses asked the Court to believe that the Magistrate had acted as none other than a madman would do. Mr. Horne must have known if there was a mere suggestion of impropriety that there would be a rigid official inquiry, which might result in his dismissal from the Service.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is your suggestion with regard to the witnesses for the plaintiff? Is it your suggestion that Mr. Dyason or Mr. Steytler induced them to give that evidence?]

Mr. Bisset: Of course I cannot say what inducement has been held out to these witnesses or what pressure was brought to bear upon them.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would like to ask Mr. Dyason a few questions.

Have you paid any of these witnesses anything?—I paid to Lena van Wyk a month's wages due to her daughter. She came to me and told me they were very much in want of money, and that Mr. Steytler owed her the pound: I acted for Mr. Steytler and paid the pound. Shortly after I paid the pound, he said: "That is quite right. I will return it to you." I paid ten shillings to Sarah Noble. She came to me in a very dilapidated condition, and said she could not go to Cape Town with the clothes she had, and asked me to lend her ten shillings. I said, "Yes." I have not paid anything except when the witnesses were here and required a little money to buy tobacco. I have paid them a shilling each.

I suppose you are a friend of both parties in this case?—I used to be. I do not look upon either of them with enmity now.

Mr. Bisset: You do not suggest you have been a friend of Mrs. Steytler for a considerable time?—Mrs. Steytler cut me.

Since when?—Since I took up Mr. Steytler's case.

You simply gave this pound at Lena's own request?—Yes.

Without reference to Mr. Steytler?—Yes.

Did you make any inquiry into it?—I believed her.

You took her statement that a pound was due to her?—Yes.

Is it usual for a solicitor to pay out moneys to persons without ascertaining whether they are due or not?—I trusted her.

Is it usual?—It would not be unusual.

You gave a loan of five shillings to Johanna van Wyk?—I knew I would get it back from her.

When did you make the loan to her?—Long after she made her statement.

For what purpose did you make that loan?—I knew she would be a witness in the case.

You haven't collected all the evidence in this case yourself?—Yes.

You have employed other persons to work up the case?—Yes.

Do you know anything of the representations Winterbach made to persons whom he had endeavoured to get to give evidence?—No.

Winterbach is a man not employed at present?—He has got very good employment.

What employment has he got?—The fencing in of (Mr. Olsson's farm.

How was it he gave up his job in order to collect evidence in the case?—I asked him to do so.

Who paid his bill at the Ceres Hotel?—I did.

Did the bill include all his drinks?—No, it did not include all his drinks.

It included some of his drinks?—Yes.

He had no money at the time he went to stay there?—I do not know.

Did you ask him?—No.

While he was staying at the hotel he had plenty of money to spend?—I do not know.

You never had any drinks with him at the hotel?—Yes.

More than once?—Yes.

And he paid for them?—Yes.

Where is Winterbach now?—I suppose he is at Ohlsson's farm.

You said that some of his drinks at the Ceres Hotel were paid for by him. What did you mean by that?—He signed a card.

So that practically Winterbach had free drinks at your expense at the hotel?—He did not have free drinks. He had to sign a card.

What was the amount of the bill?—I cannot say.

Did you provide him with a cart and horses to go out to the farm to collect evidence?—Yes, I paid for the cart and horses.

You do not know what representations he made on behalf of your client?—No.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you authorise him to make any representations?]

No.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Or did you tell the witnesses what they were to say?]

No, I only said I want the truth and facts.

[De Villiers, C.J.: And you say you held out no inducement to any witness to say what is not correct?]

None whatever.

Mr. Bisset, resuming his argument, submitted that the witnesses for the plaintiff did not come from what might be called the respectable coloured class, and that some of the allegations made were so horrible and revolting as to be incredible. They should only be accepted on the production of indisputable proof. It was against one's sense of all that was right to believe for a moment that father and son could have so behaved, each being cognisant of the other's actions. Counsel drew particular attention to a circumstance which he held was conclusive proof of the innocence of the respondent. It was this: That knowing (if petitioner's case was true) that she and the Hornes had been guilty dozens of times and in the open light of day—knowing all this, yet they had Mrs. Steytler actually taking the initiative in bringing an action for judicial separation. She deliberately challenged an inquiry into the whole of her married life, knowing that a searching scrutiny must be made, and that if she had not clean hands, she would not be successful. She came to Court strong in the consciousness of her own innocence. Her crime might have been folly, but her folly was not crime.

De Villiers, C.J.: This case originated from an action brought by Mrs. Steytler against her husband for judicial separation, on the ground of his cruelty. Now, I shall first of all deal with this question of cruelty. There are only two occasions alleged by Mrs. Steytler on which cruelty was perpetrated on her, or supposed to have been perpetrated by her husband on her. The first occasion was when each of the parties, whilst in bed, had some dispute about the charge which she had made against Mr. Steytler, and I fully accept Mr. Steytler's version of what took place on that occasion. I believe that he was very much annoyed by an unfortunate charge which was made against him, and that in the heat of the moment, without any intention of striking the woman, without any deliberate intention, he gave her a blow with the back of his hand on the side of the face; but I am satisfied from his conduct that he immediately afterwards regretted it, and that he took every means to satisfy her that it was not a deliberate act on his part, and that there was no cruelty on his part. The second action was after a dispute had arisen about some judgment that had been given in the Licensing Court, and there again Mr. Steytler did lose his temper, and he candidly admits that he did lose his temper; but he received considerable provocation from his wife, and she admits that the alleged assault was committed in her attempt to snatch from his hands a letter which he had written to Mr. Charles Horne. There is some evidence as to marks of violence being subsequently seen upon the throat of Mrs. Steytler. But I do not think that there was any attempt on the part of Steytler to squeeze her throat; but if there were marks—of which I am not satisfied—it must have been while attempting to push her away, while she was attempting to seize a letter he had written. The only part of her body which he did hurt, and on which he made a firm grip while she was attempting to seize the letter, was her arm. She clearly had no right to seize that letter. He was quite within his right in writing to Mr. Horne not to come there that afternoon, and it is unintelligible to me why she should have lost her temper because her husband, who had a perfect right so to do, was writing to Mr. Horne not to come there. It was not conduct that one can approve of on the part of the husband to give that grip, but I am not prepared to call that cruelty, considering the provocation. The only other occasion on which there was anything approaching to cruelty is the occasion on which Mrs. Steytler came to Cape Town to undergo an operation, and she says he never came to see her. I am quite satisfied that he did come. There is no doubt that he did come, and there is consequently no proof of neglect. I am perfectly satisfied that throughout his married life, with the exception of these two occasions, it appears to me that Mr. Steytler has in every way been an indulgent husband. He has given his wife everything she needed and every comfort that she required, and I consider it is her own uncontrollable temper which has led to these disputes between her and her husband, and if it was not for that temper, I do not think these two assaults would have been committed. The charge, therefore, Mrs. Steytler has made of cruelty on the part of Mr. Steytler falls to the ground. Even if there had been two acts of the nature described, they would not be sufficient to justify the Court in granting a decree of judicial separation. The cruelty must be of such a nature as to make it intolerable for the wife to live with the husband, and I think that these two consolidated acts are not sufficient to justify any Court that the husband's treatment of the wife has been so intolerable that she cannot continue to live with her husband as his wife.

The more difficult question is to decide on the question of adultery. There are distinct charges of adultery made against the wife by the husband, and Mr. Bisset has argued that this action in itself is proof conclusive of her innocence, because she would not have exposed herself to having her whole previous life ripped up if she were guilty of adultery. Of course, she must have been aware that the action was brought on what proofs the husband would have been able to obtain against her. Supposing in this case the proofs had been perfectly clear, still she might not have believed that the evidence could be conclusive so as to justify any Court in giving judgment against her for adultery. The point to be borne in my mind is that before any charge was laid against Mrs. Steytler of adultery she had instituted proceedings for judicial separation. Now, it appears to me that in a case of this kind proof of adultery should be conclusive. The effects upon a spouse against whom adultery is proved are of a very serious nature, and I have always considered in these cases that the Court should require the same clear proof as in criminal cases, as the honour of a woman is at stake, and not only the honour of a woman, but the honour of the men with whom adultery is charged. The Court which has to consider the case has to be perfectly clear that there can be no doubt whatever that the offence has been committed, and where there is serious doubt the Court should give the benefit of that doubt, and treat the case as not proved. It is unfortunate in this case for Mr. Steytler that the class of witness he has had to call has been somewhat disreputable.

I do not think there is any truth in the suggestions that his advisers have done anything to persuade the witnesses to give evidence. That is not correct. It is necessary for a person to conduct his case to collect his evidence, and he may have to employ agents to do so, and the fact that a person has taken great pains to collect the requisite evidence to conduct his case does not prove that there has been anything improper done in the collecting of that evidence. The suggestion of money having been paid to witnesses to give evidence, therefore, falls to the ground. I do not believe that any money was given to any of the witnesses for the purpose of inducing them to give evidence. There is one woman who had 10s. given to her because she had not the clothes to come from Ceres to Cape Town. I can quite understand that a woman coming from the country wishes to have something decent to appear in, and there certainly is nothing wrong in that. As to the other small sums of money advanced by Mr. Dyason, I do not think that there is anything improper in that. That does not dispose of the witnesses themselves. The witnesses, by their previous careers and the mode in which they gave their evidence, show that they are influenced by motives other than those which induce people to give evidence for the sake of telling the truth, and if such motives exist, the Court should be very slow to accept such evidence. The chief witness in the case is Johanna van Wyk. As to Johanna van Wyk, we know her history. She was charged before the Magistrate—before this very Magistrate who is now one of the parties charged. We know how she was convicted by him, and how it was upon the complaint of her mistress (the present defendant) that a prosecution and conviction took place, and she seems to me throughout to have shown considerable animus against her mistress, not only in giving the evidence which she did, but also in trying to induce others to come forward and give evidence. Johanna van Wyk's evidence is of very great importance upon the incident which is alleged to have taken place in the boudoir. She speaks of what took place between Charles Horne and Mrs. Steytler on a previous occasion, but what took place there is quite consistent with there having been no adultery—undue familiarity, but no adultery. What she says she saw in the boudoir is quite inconsistent with innocence. According to her own evidence, she says she was told to do certain work in the kitchen, and then come to the boudoir for orders. If Mrs. Steytler knew that, as undoubtedly she did, and she wished to commit adultery, one would think that the door would be locked before she committed adultery with young Horne, but, according to the witness, the door was unlocked, and she peeped through the keyhole and saw the adultery committed. If it be true that the couch was not visible at the door, that would go far to disprove what was said, and the whole story seems to me so improbable that I think it would be even if one thought there was truth in it, to find what would be a conviction on evidence of that kind. Well, the next witness, who really gives evidence quite inconsistent with innocence on the part of Mrs. Steytler and Mr. Charles Horne, is Sarah Noble. Sarah Noble is positive that the occurrence to which she swore took place in July, 1903. I put it to her before she left the box that much depended on it whether she was positive that this occurrence, to which I need not refer, but which pointed to adultery having been committed, took place in July, 1903. She was positive, because she connected it with the service which she entered, and which made it July, 1903, and that it took place in the house Venetia belonging to Mr. Steytler. At the time I put it to Mr. Steytler when he first occupied the house, and he thought it was within the last five years. That would make it the end of 1902, but he candidly stated this morning that occupation of this house was only taken early in 1904, so that it is impossible to reconcile the evidence of Sarah Noble with the true facts. It is not one of those cases in which the witness might be mixed with dates, because she connects the dates with the circumstances of her employment, which brings the dates back to her mind, and if she fails in proving that she was there in 1903, she fails in proving that adultery was committed. Then there is the other witness Vergatini, who speaks of what took place at the reservoir. Well, that evidence would be inconsistent with innocence. I must confess that that witness did not impress me as speaking the truth, besides there were so many other places and so many other opportunities that these people could have availed themselves of to commit adultery, that I am of opinion that they did not avail themselves of this, and from all the circumstances, I am not quite satisfied that the man is speaking the truth. Then another incident, deposed to by Christina Solomon, would indicate guilt, in the attitude which Horne and Mrs. Steytler adopted, and would be inconsistent, I will not say with modesty, but with innocence. Unfortunately, Christina has not been perfectly consistent in her statement, because she did tell other witnesses that she had seen nothing at all improper, and the fact that she is quite a girl now proves that she must have been very young in August, 1905. I consider it would be extremely dangerous on her evidence to convict young Mr. Horne and Mrs. Steytler of having been guilty of improper conduct. As to the other incidents that are said to have taken place, well, they may be acts of indency—of improper conduct—but they are quite consistent with adultery not having been committed. For instance, there is the evidence of Rosie. If it be true that she saw Mr. Horne and Mrs. Steytler lying under a quilt in the room in which Mr. Harry Horne was in bed, I cannot conceive that adultery was committed, because if the father knew that the son was lying in bed there, it is impossible to believe that actually in the presence of his son he would commit adultery. I do not say that I do not believe the girl. I am not prepared to say that I do not believe the girl, because there were many indecent things done, many improper things done. They may have been lying under the quilt without actually committing adultery. If there had been adultery it is impossible to believe that the son would have told the girl to come in. Then there are other occasions on which there was undue familiarity. Mr. Steytler himself was a witness of it on one occasion. The explanation of the kissing incident is all very well, but it seems strange that a man should be kissing another man's wife in this way, when her husband is not present, however, Mr. Steytler does not seem to have had any particular objection to him kissing his wife on special occasions, such as birthdays, etc., but one cannot understand a man kissing another man's wife in the absence of the husband. It is undue familiarity. But all these things are not sufficient to satisfy me that there has been actual adultery committed by Mrs. Steytler with either Mr. Charles Horne or his son. I do not consider that the evidence which has been given before me would satisfy any jury, and the judge has to perform the functions of a jury, and after he knows all the facts of the case to decide on the probabilities of the case. The result of my judgment will be that there must be absolute from the instance on both sides. Mrs. Steytler must fail in her application for judicial separation, and Mr. Steytler must fail in his claim for divorce for adultery, and the only question now is whether the parties wish to have a judicial separation, that is, an order for the separation of the property, or whether they wish to come back again and be reconciled. I do not believe that Mr. Steytler himself has done anything to bring any witnesses forward to swear what is not true, but, at the same time, I am satisfied that he rather eagerly grasped at the evidence against his wife, after she had brought this action for judicial separation against him. Up to that time his faith in her was supreme, but after the action was brought, I think he seized on every circumstance touched with suspicion. If he can dispose himself of the idea that his wife had been guilty of adultery, and if his wife can dispose herself of the absurd opinion that her husband had been guilty of cruelty to her, then there is no reason why they should not live together. If they are irreconcilable, the best course is to have a decree of judicial separation at once, and a division of the estate. If so the costs of this action must come out of Mrs. Steytler's share of the joint estate. I consider that she is responsible for this action, she is responsible first of all for bringing the action against her husband, which was not justified, and she is also to some extent responsible for the suspicions which her husband has entertained against her by reason of many indiscretions—I will call them by no other name. She has been guilty of indiscretions which might have led her husband to believe were more serious than indiscretion—acts of infidelity. If there is a judicial separation, I believe that the whole costs of this action must come out of her estate. If the parties wish for an order I will make it.

Mr. Bisset: Mrs. Steytler says it would be impossible for her to live with him again, and will accept a judicial separation.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Steytler is agreeable to that course.

[De Villiers, C.J.: On the whole, if the parties are irreconcilable, that is the better course.]

A decree of judicial separation was then recorded by consent, and Mr. A. Dyason and Mr. Charles Home, attorneys, were appointed receivers of the joint estate to arrange an equitable division.

[Attorneys for plaintiff in the action for judicial separation: Walker and Jacobssohn; for defendant: Faure, Van Eyk and Moore.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN]

ADMISSION.

{ 1907.
{ Oct. 22nd.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl moved for the admission of Cornelius de Klerk Botha as an attorney and notary.

Applications granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Queen's Town.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ALFORD, WILLS AND ABBOTT V.
KOPELOWITZ.

Mr. Toms moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

V. KRAMER.

Mr. Howes moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

AFRICAN BANKING CORPORATION, LTD.
V. NORTON, TRADING AS NORTON AND CO.

Mr. Swift moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

MAITLAND V. LOUNDAE.

Mr. Joubert moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £350, with interest at 8 per cent. from the 6th September, 1902, less £1 paid on account, principal due by reason of non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl applied for the rehabilitation of Pieter Johannes Coetzee.

Granted.

SANDERSON V. RAVEN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones (for defendant) mentioned this matter, in which his client had been arrested to found jurisdiction in an action for provisional sentence on a Magistrate's Court judgment. Counsel said that he was prepared to consent to judgment.

Mr. Inchbold (for plaintiff) asked whether it would not be possible to detain defendant for a little while, as he might go away and evade judgment.

Buchanan, J.: You can't keep the defendant in gaol. Judgment will be given as prayed, with costs. You may now execute at your earliest possible opportunity.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

INSOLVENT ESTATE RIEL V. { 1907.
SCHOEVERS. } Oct. 22nd.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, in terms of a consent paper, for reduction of respondent's proof of debt from £121 9s. 6d. to £27 16s. 3d.

Order in terms of consent paper.

INSOLVENT ESTATE RIEL V. STEYTLER.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, in terms of consent paper, for reduction of respondent's proof of debt from £391 9s. 2d. to £261 6s. 9d.

Order in terms of consent paper.

Ec parte SAAYMAN.

Mr. Marais moved for an amendment of a deed of award in certain arbitration proceedings in the matter of A. P. Blignault v. Hendrik A. Wapenaar and others, to be made Rule of Court. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that he had a document which contained about 60 names, and if this were put in as an affidavit all the names would have to be stamped. He desired that it should be accepted as a consent paper.

Buchanan, J.: If it is stamped as a special power of attorney, you may take your order.

Ec parte DALY.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband, Patrick Daly, formerly of Woodstock, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce and forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage in community. Defendant's whereabouts had been unknown for some years to the petitioner, but it was stated that he had a brother at Southampton.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, citation returnable on the 12th January, personal service, if possible, failing which one publication in the "Government Gazette," and one publication in a Southampton newspaper.

HANNAY V. HANNAY.

Mr. Upington moved for the appointment of a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of certain two witnesses at Vryburg in a divorce suit.

Order granted appointing the Resident Magistrate of Vryburg, or officer acting as such, to be commissioner, to take the evidence of Thomas Slatter and Annie Slatter, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ec parte SYMONS.

Mr. Alexander moved on the petition of Solomon Symons, as father and natural guardian of Rose Symons, for leave to sue one Isaac Cohen in forma pauperis for £250 damages, for breach of promise of marriage. Counsel said that he was prepared to certify probabilis causa.

Referred to counsel for report, and upon certificate rule nisi to issue, returnable on the 29th October.

Ec parte DIVISIONAL COUNCIL OF MOSSEL BAY.

Mr. Toms moved for a certain rule to be made absolute, authorising an amendment of an order, granted under the Derelict Lands Act.

Rule absolute.

Ec parte WEESELS.

Mr. Philipson Stow moved for a certain rule to be made absolute authorising petitioner to sue in forma pauperis the executor dative of the estate of the late James Jacobus Gabriel for damages for alleged seduction and maintenance of an illegitimate child.

Rule absolute, Dr. Greer appointed counsel, and Messrs. C. and A. Friedlander attorneys to the petitioner.

PEARSON V. FIG.

This was an application calling upon respondent to show cause why she should not be directed to remove an obstruction to a certain natural watercourse running through his property at Wynberg, the said obstruction causing applicant's property to be flooded.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for applicant; Mr. Upington was for respondent.

Before the affidavits were read, Buchanan, J., raised the question as to whether this matter could be decided on motion.

Mr. Upington submitted that it would be impossible to dispose of the matter on affidavit.

Mr. Jones admitted that there was a good deal of force in his learned friend's contention, though he said it would be desirable, if possible, to determine the matter on motion, as the value of the property was small.

Applicant was ordered to proceed by action, notice of motion to stand as summons, costs to be costs in the cause.

ESTATE LATE VAN DER MERWE V. RAAN.

This was an application to set aside a certain temporary interdict restraining the present applicant from passing transfer of property in the Britstown district in the estate of which he was executor, to one W. H. van Niekerk, alleged in the petition to have been recently sold to Van Niekerk.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for applicant; Dr. Rainsford was for respondent.

Voluminous affidavits having been read,

Mr. Jones submitted that if his lordship, who granted the interdict, had been informed of the whole of the facts, he would have refused the application. Van Niekerk had merely been exercising his rights under an option granted by Van der Merwe two years previously. It was not a sale proposed to be made in fraud of creditors. If Du Raan had any remedy at all, it was under the 84th section of the Ordinance. Counsel cited Cilliers' Trustees v. Cilliers (13 S.C., 68).

Dr. Rainsford said that the lease was entered into in 1906 after the respondent's bond had been granted, and subject to any rights which he had under the general clause. The case came under the 83rd section of the Ordinance. The lease was entered into on the eve of insolvency, giving an option at a figure which was far below the proper value, to the prejudice of creditors. The fairest course in the matter would, he submitted, be to allow the interdict to continue until the end of November, pending an action by the present respondent, or a motion by applicant to set aside the interdict.

Buchanan, J.: An application was made to me on behalf of the present respondent for an interdict, on an affidavit alleging that he held a mortgage bond over certain properties belonging to the estate of the late Mr. Van der Merwe, that the respondent (the present applicant, Mrs. Van der Merwe), who is executrix of the estate of her late husband, had recently sold the principal asset in the estate, and that the sale was made for a price below its real value, to the prejudice and detriment of the present respondent and the other creditors. At the time this affidavit was made it was within the knowledge of the respondent that Mrs. Van der Merwe had not recently sold this property, but that two years before her husband, in his lifetime, had leased this property to Van Niekerk, and that in this lease he had given Van Niekerk an option for purchase at a price stated. Van Niekerk had exercised this option, and it was not a sale recently made by Mrs. Van der Merwe, but a sale made in exercise of an option granted by Mr. Van der Merwe two years before. I had some hesitation in granting this order originally, but certainly, had this fact been before me at the time, I think I should not have granted the original order in this case. The order was granted in the nature of an interim interdict in August last, to last until the end of the following term, evidently indicating that the present respondent was bound to take some action before then to establish his rights. He has taken no such action, and the estate is still as it was at Mr. Van der Merwe's death, and I think this, I won't say intentional misstatement, but this non-statement of facts to me now having been cleared up, this interdict must be set aside. All that was necessary on behalf of the present applicant to have the interdict set aside was to bring the facts not stated on the original affidavit to the notice of the Court, and the Court would thereupon have been prepared to set it aside. Instead of that, a mass of affidavits have been filed, which are utterly irrelevant. In ordering that the interdict be set aside, with costs, costs will only be allowed for the affidavits of Mrs. Van der Merwe, of the 28th August, and of Van Niekerk, on the 22nd August. The Court cannot have all its time taken up with a mass of records which have nothing to do with the case before the Court.

KATZ V. NELSON.

This was an application upon notice to respondent to have a certain award of arbitrators made a Rule of Court, with costs.

From the affidavits, it appeared that an arbitration had sat at the Paarl in regard to disputes between applicant and respondent, and that £27 18s. 1d. had been awarded to applicant. Respondent's position was that the applicant had accepted a cheque for £20 in settlement of his claim, upon respondent undertaking to pay taxed costs. Applicant denied that he had received the cheque.

Mr. Alexander was for applicant (A. Katz); Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondent (D. Nelson).

Mr. Alexander submitted that the applicant was entitled to have the award made a Rule of Court, with costs, and that the onus lay upon the respondent to prove the alleged settlement.

Without calling upon Mr. Jones,

Buchanan, J.: This is an application to make a certain award a Rule of Court. The award does not provide for its being made a Rule of Court, and I have not been referred to anything in the Act (No. 29 of 1898) which authorises the Court to make a deed a Rule of Court, but as Mr. Alexander states that this practice has been followed in previous cases, I will not decide this application upon that point. It appears that the applicant and respondent had some dispute, and their friends, with a very laudable desire to prevent costs and settle the dispute, were appointed to go into the matters in dispute between the parties, and draw up a statement of accounts between them. They did do so, the umpire, or "chairman," as he is called, of the three, being Mr. Mathews. The amount these parties said was due by respondent to applicant was about £27. After this amount of £27 had been so awarded, the affidavits state, applicant visited the place of business of one Binder, in company with Mathews, and applicant said if the respondent paid £20 and taxed costs to date, he would withdraw all proceedings, and be perfectly satisfied. Thereupon Binder, on behalf of the respondent, agreed to this, and handed a cheque, at applicant's request, to Mathews for the sum of £20. True taxed costs have not yet been paid, but that is a question which may yet be brought for hearing. Upon the affidavits as they stand, permission was given to settle the matter for £20, and a cheque for £20 was handed over. It has not been returned, and is still in the possession of the applicant or his agent. Under these circumstances, I feel that it is impossible for me to order this award to be made a Rule of Court. I think this is not a case in which I can interfere or give any order. The application will, therefore, be refused, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

DE VRIES V. DU PLESSIS. { 1907.
Oct. 23rd.

Costs—Magistrates' Court scale—
Rule 325.

By Rule 325, if the plaintiff in a Supreme Court action resides in a Magisterial district different from that of the defendant, the Supreme Court must award costs on the higher scale, even though the sum recovered could have been sued for in the Magistrate's Court, provided that no part of the cause of action arose in the district in which the defendant resides.

Where a part of the cause of action did arise in the district of the defendant and the plaintiff recovered only £6, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, allowed only Magistrate's Court costs.

This was an action brought by Abraham Hermanus de Vries, of Willowmore, against Daniel Jacobus du Plessis, of Aberdeen, to recover certain sums of money alleged to be owing by defendant to the plaintiff on a promissory note, and balance of account, with interest and costs.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is Abraham Hermanus de Vries, a farmer, of Zoetendals Vlei, in the district of Willowmore, in this colony.

2. The defendant is Daniel Jacobus du Plessis, of Middelplaats, district of Aberdeen, in this colony.

3. The plaintiff is the legal holder of a certain promissory note, dated at Aberdeen on the 27th November, 1902, for the sum of £110, made and signed by the defendant to and in favour of Messrs. De Vries Bros., and by them endorsed in favour of the plaintiff, which promissory note is hereto annexed. The said plaintiff is the legal successor of the aforesaid firm of De Vries Bros., and is the holder of a cession whereby the said De Vries Bros. have ceded to him on the 12th April, 1907, all their right, title, claim, and interest in all debts due to them, as will appear more fully from the said cession hereto annexed.

4. The sum of £64 15s. has been paid on account of the said promissory note, leaving a balance of £45 5s., due to the said plaintiff, which amount has been demanded and claimed from the defendant in a provisional case heard before this Honourable Court on the 11th June, 1907, at the hearing whereof the defendant raised a counter-claim for an amount alleged to be due to him upon an open account between himself and the firm of De Vries Bros., whereupon this Honourable Court refused provisional sentence as prayed, with costs, but leave was given to plaintiff to go into the principal case, and to claim the costs of the provisional case in the principal case.

5. On an open account between the parties to this suit, extending from on or about October 1, 1903, to June, 1906, or thereabouts—(which such account has been duly rendered to the defendant)—as will more fully appear from copy of the account hereto annexed, there is a balance of £35 14s. 6d. due by the defendant to the plaintiff.

Plaintiff therefore claimed judgment for (a) £45 5s. on the promissory note; (b) £35 14s. 6d. on the account; (c) interest thereon a tempore morae; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit (including costs incurred in the provisional case); and (f) the sum of £23 9s. 10d., being the defendant's taxed costs of the provisional case, paid to his attorney under security "de restituendo."

The account annexed to the declaration showed a number of items on the debit and credit side, the credits to defendant consisting for the most part of amounts due for grazing.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of the declaration.

2. He admits paragraph 4 of the declaration, save that he says that a sum of £68 has been paid on account, leaving a balance of £42, which said balance of £42, together with the interest due under the said promissory note, was satisfied and extinguished by certain debts incurred by the said firm of De Vries Bros. to the defendant long prior to the date of the said cession of debts to the plaintiff; as will more fully appear from account annexed.

3. He denies paragraph 5, and says that by certain transactions taking place between defendant and the said firm of De Vries Bros. long prior to the date of the said cession of debts to the plaintiff, there was a balance in defendant's favour of £80 10s., as shown in the account annexed to the plea. Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim be dismissed, with costs.

The account annexed to the plea was made up of a number of items alleged to be owing by De Vries Bros. The majority of the items was for grazing of cattle.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Pohl) was for the plaintiff; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (with him Mr. Swift) was for the defendant.

Matthys Andries de Vries said he was a speculator, and in 1903 was carrying on business with his brother at Prince Albert. His account was guaranteed by plaintiff in the present case. Defendant was indebted to the firm in the sum of £110, and of this amount £64 15s. was paid off in August, 1903. The witness gave evidence relating to the defendant's claim for grazing. He said that in August, 1903, he had purchased and was taking 53 head of cattle to the Transvaal to be sold. On arriving at defendant's farm, he was told by Mr. Du Plessis that there would shortly be a stock sale at Aberdeen. He suggested that the cattle should remain on his place and that they should make up a lot for the sale. Shortly afterwards witness went to Aberdeen, saw an auctioneer, and arranged that his cattle should be sold at the stock sale, which was to take place in October. Mr. Du Plessis said that he would not charge witness for the grazing. Witness returned to Prince Albert. From there he intended to return to Aberdeen. He drove to Aberdeen, and arrived at his brother's farm, where he was seized with illness. His brother wired to the auctioneer, but while his brother was away with the telegram, witness got up and drove to Aberdeen, arriving there half an hour before the sale. Witness had previously given reserve prices for the stock. Fourteen head of cattle only were sold at Aberdeen. Three cows had died at Du Plessis's place. The remainder of the stock were taken back to the farm at Du Plessis's suggestion. Nothing was said as to what witness was to be charged for grazing. The cattle were grazed on the mountain. At Du Plessis's suggestion, witness employed a man named Pearson to look after the cattle. The grazing was very bad. He could have got good grazing in the neighbourhood by paying for it. In August, 1904, he gave Du Plessis permission to kill one of the cattle. For this, the plaintiff claimed. In June, 1905, the cattle were removed. The matter of payment for grazing was not then discussed, nor at any time was any demand made for payment for grazing. Shortly after the removal of the cattle Du Plessis sent an account for £58 for grazing. Witness wrote stating there had been no agreement to pay for grazing beyond a promise made by witness to pay a fair price. He asked Du Plessis to reduce the charge for grazing from 1s. 6d. to 1s. per month per head. Du Plessis now charged grazing for a month of 53 cattle. This witness disputed. He also charged 2s. a head for grazing and custody of 39 head of cattle for another period, but three of these had died before the sale. Witness contended the charge should be only in respect of 36 head, and that the defendant's account should be reduced throughout the whole period by the deduction of three head. Witness paid Pearson for looking after the cattle, and he considered a fair price for the grazing was 1s. a head per month. In addition to the 39 head, there was a charge of 2s. a head for 14 calves born while the cattle were on the farm. All of these were under 12 months when witness took them away. They were charged only for a certain period. No charge was made for them in the first accounts sent to witness. A cow and three calves were left on the farm because they were too poor to be removed. He told Du Plessis to sell these and pay the expenses out of the purchase money. He sent afterwards for these, but one of the cows remained as it had a broken leg, and a charge in respect of this cow was made for grazing up to the present. A charge of 2s. was made for grazing a calf of that cow. Witness did not know that the cow had a calf. There were other charges which he disputed. Witness particularised these items, and gave evidence in regard to them. Other charges in the defendant's account he admitted.

In cross-examination by Mr. De Villiers, the witness denied having made an arrangement with the defendant's son to pay for grazing at a specified rate of 1s. 6d., and to allow payment for herding to be made by means of allowing a portion of the butter from the cows, for which butter plaintiff now claimed in his account. He was willing to pay for grazing for the 14 calves at the rate of 1s. per month.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

The defendant said that Matthys de Vries agreed to pay 1s. 6d. a month per head for the grazing. It was arranged to pay Pearson, by giving him part of the buttermilk, but the plaintiff claimed for all the buttermilk, and therefore witness claimed a further 6d. a head for the herding of the cattle. De Vries made him a present of the bull which he killed. The witness gave further evidence relating to other details in the account.

After further evidence for the defence, Mr. De Villiers closed his case, and counsel were heard in argument.

Mr. Upington said he would admit that there was a total of £66 13s. due by the plaintiff to the defendant. On the other hand, he urged, plaintiff had proved that defendant's indebtedness to him was £76 19s. Then there was interest for three years on the promissory note, amounting, roughly, to £10, so that there was a balance due to the plaintiff of £20 6s.

Mr. De Villiers contended that from this balance should be deducted £10, being the value of the bull slaughtered by the defendant. He submitted that there was proof that this was a gift to the defendant. Counsel further argued that a greater allowance for grazing should be made than was admitted by the plaintiff, inasmuch as the evidence showed that there was a greater number of cattle grazing than was allowed for in the computation just made by counsel for the plaintiff. He urged also that the plaintiff's claim, as now reduced by his counsel, should be further reduced in certain particulars. On the point of interest, counsel contended that, at the outset, it was not more than £5.

Maasdorp, J.: I may say I approached the figures in this case from a somewhat different point of view from that taken by the plaintiff, and the result I arrived at was that there would be due to the plaintiff in this case a sum of £6 10s. 9d. In that calculation, I did not bring up interest, having regard to the nature of the set-offs that are made in this case and the difficulty of arriving at the particular amount that might be due for interest after these set-offs are taken from time to time to have wiped out portions of the claim, I think the Court is not now in a position to make any allowance in respect of the interest. It seems to me that the plaintiff should never have made any claim for provisional sentence in this case. He was fully aware at the time that there were disputed accounts between himself and the defendant, which would seriously affect the result, and it appears that Matthys de Vries, whose responsibilities were taken over by the plaintiff, had admitted virtually that he was indebted to the defendant in respect of certain grazing; but he was rather unwilling to pay the larger sum claimed by the defendant. He desired that it should be reduced to a less sum, but he undoubtedly admitted that some moneys were due, and I think the plaintiff attempted to take advantage of the defendant by trying to get his claim on the promissory note settled, and delaying the defendant in the recovery of the moneys due to him. The question between the parties is, what should be allowed for grazing, and I come to the conclusion that 1s. 6d. would be a fair allowance to make in respect of all the cattle. I think that is a full and liberal allowance, and under the circumstances of the case, I think the defendant is entitled to it. In making that allowance, and taking into consideration the other items of debits and credits which are admitted by the parties, I come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is now entitled to receive a sum of £6. And now, rather a nice question arises with respect to the costs.

Under the Rules of Court, if a claim is made for a sum which might have been the subject of a suit in the Magistrate's Court, it is within the discretion of this Court to allow only Magistrate's Court costs. Under Rule 325, there seems to be some exception made to the reduction of the costs in certain cases. One of the cases is where the plaintiff resides in a different district from that in which the defendant resides. But, at the same time, it is also necessary that in that case no part of the cause of action should have arisen in the district in which the defendant resides. Well, in this case, certainly part of the cause of action arose in the district in which the defendant resides, and the plaintiff is therefore not entitled as a matter of right to claim the costs of the Superior Courts, and under the circumstances, I will give judgment for the plaintiff for £6, with Magistrate's Court costs.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

STANDARD BUILDINGS, LTD. { 1907.
V. WHEELER. { Oct. 23rd.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL V. MARKS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

FAULKNER V. SALIE.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest from the 1st January, 1907, plus 10s. arrear interest, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

POTGIETER V. POTGIETER.

This was the return day of a summons calling upon defendant (sister of the plaintiff) to show cause why she should not be declared of unsound mind, and a curator appointed of her person and property.

Mr. Sutton appeared for plaintiff; Mr. Watermeyer appeared as curator ad litem of the alleged lunatic.

Mr. Howes said that he desired to intervene on behalf of the grandparents (Johannes S. F. Potgieter and wife) to oppose the application.

Mr. Sutton said that, while he did not admit his learned friend's locus standi, he did not object to his appearing as amicus curiae.

It appeared from the affidavits that the defendant, who was now 17 years old, resided with her grandfathers at the farm Nootgedacht, division of Oudtshoorn, to whose custody she was handed over when she was 10 days old. Plaintiff submitted that defendant was of unsound mind, and that it was desirable, in her moral interests, that she should be placed under proper care, plaintiff's intention being to have her removed to the Good Hope Home, at Wynberg. The grandparents both denied that the girl was insane, and strongly urged that it was against their own and the girl's desire that she should be removed from the farm. Medical testimony was also given both in favour of and against the application.

Mr. Watermeyer, as curator ad litem, said he could not say that defendant was insane, though he considered that she was imbecile. She was incapable of managing her own affairs, and he (the curator) thought it advisable that she should be removed from the farm, if only temporarily.

Mr. Sutton and Mr. Howes addressed the Court.

Buchanan, J.: The circumstances in this case prevent the first part of the order asked for being granted, and the defendant being declared insane. It is alleged that the defendant, being of weak intellect, has been committing improper conduct with a bywoner on the farm of her grandparents. On this point I would have liked to have clearer evidence, but no direct evidence of this improper intercourse has been given. It is no use in this case making an order for custody of the girl's property, because it is in the Master's hands, and is perfectly safe and well looked after. But I am asked to appoint a curator for the purpose of having her removed from the farm and placed in a home. Alleged improper conduct is not a ground for taking a minor from her home, and placing her in a home, treating her as a kind of culprit, and putting her in a kind of reformatory. On the information before the Court, I am not justified in making any order in this case. I recognise that the action has been undertaken in the interests of the girl herself, and I am unwilling to visit the parties with costs, but I do not see out of whose funds the costs should come, and I am afraid, in refusing the application, I can make no order as to costs. The application will be refused. I would like to make one remark. It has been suggested that if there is any difficulty it may be obviated in the future by providing this girl with a companion, but I would suggest that a much more effective method is that the bywoner with whom it is alleged that the improper conduct took place should be removed by the grandparents from the farm, and not be allowed to remain.

Mr. Sutton applied for the costs of the curator ad litem to be paid out of the defendant's funds.

Mr. Justice Buchanan said that he would be prepared to make an order accordingly.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SOUTH AFRICAN CONSERVATORIAL OF MUSIC V. { 1907.
HOFFMANN. { Oct. 23rd.

Mr. Roux moved to make absolute a certain rule nisi restraining respondent from giving lessons in music, and singing in the village or district of Stellenbosch to persons other than pupils of the Conservatorium.

Dr. Greer appeared for respondent to show cause against the rule.

Applicants based their case on an agreement for three years, entered into with them by respondent in July last, under which he was prohibited from giving music lessons on his own account in the village or district of Stellenbosch. They alleged that he had been giving lessons to private pupils since the agreement was entered into.

Respondent's contention was that it was a condition of the agreement that he should be supplied by the Conservatorium with 30 pupils at a time, and be paid at the rate of £1 15s. per quarter per pupil. Applicants had only supplied him with six pupils when he started, and had thus failed to give him anything like remunerative employment.

Applicants denied that they made any guarantee as to the number of pupils that would be forthcoming.

Having heard Dr. Greer in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: A rule nisi was obtained, operating as an interim interdict, restraining the respondent from carrying on for his own benefit the teaching of music in the district of Stellenbosch, and this rule has been founded upon a contract entered into between the applicant and respondent. One clause of the contract is in dispute between the parties. As written, it says that the respondent agrees to take at least 30 pupils per quarter, or more if required to do so, by the Conservatorium. The respondent alleges that this was meant and was stated at the time to mean that it was to be a reciprocal contract, that he undertook to teach this number of pupils or more, and that applicants agreed to supply him with at least this number. That is a matter which is still in dispute between the parties, and which would have to be settled by action. It is not merely a construction of a document, or the Court might settle the matter now. Therefore, as a rule has been granted, to operate as an interdict, that rule will be made absolute, pending action to be instituted forthwith, and to be set down for trial before the end of next term, by the respondent, to determine his rights in reference to the contract, costs to be costs in the cause. I would suggest to the parties that there ought to be a reciprocal right to both sides on a contract such as this, and that the parties would be much wiser if they came to a settlement in the meantime. There seems to me to be no reason why the parties should not come to terms. In case respondent does not bring an action, the rule will be made absolute, with costs.

Ex parte WAINSTEIN.

Dr. Greer moved for leave to petitioner, who is a minor, aged nearly 20 years, to enter into a certain marriage and ante-nuptial contract. Applicant's parents reside in Russia, and consequently their approval of the marriage in this colony cannot be obtained. She has been residing with her grand-uncle at Dordrecht, and she desires to obtain the Court's leave to marry and to enter into an ante-nuptial contract with the assistance of the said grand-uncle.

Buchanan, J.: Under the Consolidation Act, No. 35 of 1896, the application should be made to the Chief Justice in chambers, or, in his absence, to the senior judge at present in town. The Chief Justice is in town, and the application had better be made to him.

KEMSHED V. KEMSHED.

This was an application for an order upon respondent to pay over to applicant a sum of £50 to enable her to defend an action for divorce instituted against her by respondent.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the parties were married in England in January, 1899, and came to the Colony in 1902. Applicant was sued for divorce by reason of her alleged adultery with one M. J. Kirschhoff. She denied the allegations of intimacy, and made counter-charges, saying that she intended to bring a cross action. Respondent said that he had no means that he could pay over to applicant, and that it was only by the assistance of friends that he had been able to bring the action.

Mr. H. G. Lewis was for applicant, Annie Kemshead; Mr. Alexander was for respondent, Arthur H. Kemshead.

Mr. Lewis, in argument, mentioned Jopling v. Jopling (16 S.C., 480), Botha v. Botha (21 S.C., 543), Tyfield v. Tyfield (3 C.T.R., 393), Muller v. Muller and Another (8 C.T.R., 5 and 45), and Wilkie v. Wilkie (17 C.T.R., ???).

Buchanan, J.: This is an application made for the purpose of having funds paid by the plaintiff to the defendant (his wife) to enable her to defend the action, and certainly under the circumstances set forth, and under the allegation that the plaintiff does not come into Court with clean hands, an order would be made in ordinary circumstances, but it seems to me, as far as the affidavits go, that the respondent would not be able to comply with any order for a substantial amount. The best solution under the circumstances of the case is to allow the applicant, which, I believe, is consented to by the respondent to defend in forma pauperis. Of course, this leave to sue in forma pauperis applies only to the applicant, and does not apply to the co-defendant in the action. Mr. Lewis will be appointed counsel, and Messrs. Wahl, Fuller and De Klerk attorneys of the defendant, plea to be filed by the 4th November and the parties to go to trial this term.

DE WAAL AND ANOTHER V. DE JAGER AND OTHERS.

Insolvent Ordinance—Proofs of debt—Time of making supporting affidavits.

The estate of one K. was placed under voluntary sequestration. Before the actual order of sequestration was granted, but after K.'s schedules were prepared, certain creditors swore affidavits in support of their claims.

Held, that the proofs of debt made by such creditors must be admitted.

This was an application calling upon respondents to show cause why certain alleged proofs of debts in the insolvent estate of one Kritzinger admitted by the R.M. of Willowmore at the second meeting of creditors, should not be expunged; why De Waal should not be declared to have been duly elected sole trustee in the estate, and why respondents should not be ordered to pay costs; or, alternatively, why De Waal should not be appointed provisional trustee, with power to sell live-stock and perishables, and liquidate the estate.

It appeared that at the creditors' meeting a deadlock had occurred in regard to the appointment of trustee, Mr. De Waal having the support of a majority of the creditors in value, and Mr. Stone receiving the votes of a majority of the creditors in number. Applicants contended that the Magistrate should not have admitted certain nine proofs of debts filed by the respondents.

Mr. McGregor, K.C., was for applicants; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, K.C., was for respondents.

Mr. McGregor, in argument, cited Nauke's Executor v. Maritz (19 S.C., 171).

Mr. Buchanan said that a technical objection was relied upon by the applicant, and that the proofs ought to be allowed to stand.

Buchanan, J.: This is an application, in the first place, to expunge certain proofs of debts filed in the insolvent estate of one Kritzinger. The order of sequestration was made on the 19th August, and two meetings of creditors were held under the Insolvent Ordinance on the 2nd and 9th September. At these meetings Stone, the agent for several creditors, proved their debts. The proofs of debts were admitted by the Magistrate, and have been recorded. The proving of a debt by the 27th section of the Ordinance is required to be made by an affidavit, in which affidavit certain particulars are required to be stated. Affidavits were made in every one of these cases and all the requirements of the 27th section of the Ordinance were complied with, but it appeared that the affidavits were sworn to before the date of the order of sequestration. This was a voluntary sequestration, and the affidavits were made after the schedules had been prepared and notice given that application would be made for the sequestration of the estate. The question is whether this fact that the affidavits were sworn to after the schedules were prepared and before the actual order of sequestration was given, rendered the proofs invalid. Now, no doubt it is better that everything should be in order and in due form, and in these affidavits it is stated that the insolvent was at the date of the issuing of the order of sequestration indebted to the creditor. Strictly speaking, until the date of sequestration was fixed, the affidavit was in error in stating this a few days before the order was actually given, but at the time when the order was made, the allegations in the affidavit were quite accurate, and contained all the information which is required by the law. I am not prepared to say that the fact of swearing an affidavit when sequestration was impending, and before the actual order of sequestration was given, is an illegal practice. As counsel has pointed out in the argument, a creditor might see a notice that a debtor was going to surrender his estate; the creditor might be about to leave his place of business, and be absent for a time, and before he left he prepared his proof of debt and made his affidavit, which was to be filed at the meeting of creditors to be held after sequestration. No doubt the specimen forms given for this purpose are so framed as to imply that the affidavit would be made after sequestration, still I think this technicality should not prevent a creditor from having his remedy against the estate. The affidavits were thoroughly accurate, they contained all the information required to be given. The proofs here were accepted by the Magistrate, and have been recorded. Because the affidavits were sworn before the order of sequestration was made is not, I think, sufficient reason for ordering these proofs to be expunged from the record. The object of this application is to determine who is to be appointed trustee. If the proofs stand, one candidate for the trusteeship gets a majority in number, and another candidate gets a majority in value of the votes of the creditors. If these proofs were expunged, then one candidate receives of the remaining votes the majority both in number and value. An application is further made for an order appointing a provisional trustee, as there is no chance of an election, and I think the fairest course in this case would be to order that Messrs. De Waal and Stone be appointed joint provisional trustees, with power to administer and finally liquidate the insolvent estate. As it was necessary to come to the Court under any circumstances to have a provisional trustee appointed, the costs may fairly come out of the estate.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY and a Jury.]

TROLLIP V. SOUTHERN LIFE ASSOCIATION. { 1907.
Oct. 24th.
" 25th.

This was an action to recover money alleged to be due on a policy of insurance.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a farmer, residing at Mount Prospect, in the district of Bedford. The defendant is the Southern Life Association, a joint stock company, duly incorporated and registered, having its chief office at Cape Town.

2. On or about the 18th day of May, 1899, the plaintiff effected a policy of assurance with the defendant, being No. 13,470, whereunder the defendant agreed in consideration of the sum of £7 paid to the defendant by the plaintiff on or about the 3rd day of May, 1899, and of a yearly premium of the said amount payable within fourteen days of the said date in any year, that if at any time within one year from the said last mentioned date, or during the continuance of the said policy the plaintiff should sustain any bodily injury, caused by violent accidental external and visible means, then in case such injury should within three calendar months from the occurrence thereof directly cause the loss by physical separation of one hand, or of one foot, or the complete and irrecoverable loss of sight in one eye (such loss being deemed permanent partial disablement within the meaning of the said policy), the defendant upon satisfactory proof of such injury and of such loss being furnished to the directors thereof, would pay to the plaintiff the sum of £500, and in case such injury did not entitle the plaintiff to the compensation above provided for permanent partial disablement, but should, independently of all other causes, immediately and totally disable and prevent the plaintiff from attending to his business or occupation, then upon satisfactory proof of such injury and of such total disablement being furnished to the directors of the defendant, the defendant should pay to the plaintiff compensation at the rate of £6 per week during such total disablement, provided it should immediately and continuously follow such injury, and which disablement should be deemed temporary total disablement within the meaning of the said policy, and in case such injury should only partially disable the plaintiff, so that he could attend to some portion of his business or occupation, but not the whole thereof, or in case the plaintiff should have so far recovered from temporary total disablement so as to be able to transact some portion of his business or occupation, but not the whole thereof, then, in either of such cases, on satisfactory proof of such injury and of such partial disablement being furnished to the directors of the defendant, the defendant should pay to the plaintiff compensation at the rate of £2 per week during such partial disablement, and which disablement should be deemed temporary partial disablement within the meaning of the said policy. Thereafter on or about the 18th day of July, 1900, the defendant issued to the plaintiff, in substitution of the said policy, Policy No. 15,559.

3. The plaintiff annexes hereto a copy of the said Policy No. 15,559, to which he craves leave to refer for the full terms of the said agreement.

4. Thereafter on or about the 20th day of July, 1906, and during the continuance of the said last mentioned policy, the plaintiff sustained a certain bodily injury caused by violent external and visible means which directly caused within three calendar months from the occurrence thereof the complete and irrecoverable loss of sight in one eye, and immediately and totally and independently of all other causes, disabled and prevented the plaintiff attending to his business or occupation; full particulars thereof were, on or about the 12th day of September, 1906, duly furnished to the defendant,

5. The plaintiff has duly paid all premiums, given all notices and particulars, has furnished such proof as aforesaid, and has fulfilled all his obligations under the conditions of the said policy, and becomes and is entitled to claim from the defendant payment of the sum of £500 in respect of the premises, but the defendant, after lawful demand duly made, refuses to pay the said sum so due in respect of the said injury. Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) Judgment of the sum of £500, with interest a tempore morae; (b) alternative relief; (c) cost of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

For a special plea in bar the defendant association says:

1. That notice was first received by the association on 12th September, 1906, and therefore not within 21 days after the alleged occurrence referred to in paragraph 4 of the declaration, and that a fair and reasonable explanation for the delay in giving such notice has not been made to defendant.

2. That a period of more than 12 months has expired since the said alleged occurrence, and that no settlement with the insured or his representative has been agreed upon, or ascertained, in terms of clause 8 of the conditions of the policy.

3. That plaintiff obtained proper medical advice only on or about the 4th day of August, 1906, and failed to procure proper medical advice, and to act upon same as soon as possible after the accident.

4. That plaintiff failed to make a written demand for arbitration within six months from the date of the alleged occurrence.

5. That by reason of one or more, or all, of the foregoing facts, plaintiff is barred by the provisions of clauses 5, 7, and 8 of the policy from any right of action which he might otherwise possess.

Wherefore he prays that the claim may be dismissed with costs.

And for a further plea, if this Honourable Court should find the foregoing plea insufficient in fact or in law, it says:

6. It admits the allegations in paragraphs 1, 2, and 3, save that it says that the association is not a joint-stock company.

7. As to the allegations in paragraph 5, it denies that the alleged bodily injury was caused by violent external and visible means within the meaning of the policy. It denies that the injury caused within three months from the occurrence, or at all the complete and irrecoverable loss of sight in one eye, and it also denies that it immediately, or at any time, disabled and prevented the plaintiff attending to his business or occupation; it admits that on or about 12th September, 1906, plaintiff reported to one H. W. Trollip (defendant's agent), that he (plaintiff) had sustained injury in his right eye on 14th July, 1906, by poisoned dust, which blew into it while he was at work in the goat kraal on his farm; but otherwise, save as is herein admitted, it denies the allegations in the said paragraph, and especially that the alleged occurrence took place on 20th July, 1906.

8. It admits that plaintiff has paid all premiums, and that it refuses to pay the sum of £500, or any part thereof, but otherwise it denies the allegations in paragraph 5.

Wherefore it prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiff, in his replication, admitted that notice was first received by the association on the 12th September, but said he had always had a fair and reasonable explanation in terms of clause 5. Such explanation, however, was never asked for. Thereafter, in or about the month of October, at Witmoos and Rosemead Junction, the defendant's duly authorised agent expressly waived any right the association had, in terms of the said clause. Plaintiff admitted that more than 12 months had elapsed since the accident, that no written demand had been made by him for arbitration, and that there had been no settlement with him, but otherwise he denied the facts and conclusions of law in the special plea.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiff. Mr. W. P. Buchanan, K.C. (with him Mr. P. Jones) for defendants.

Roland James W. Trollip, the plaintiff, said he was a farmer, residing in the district of Bedford. He deposed to having taken out a policy of insurance with the defendant association in May 1899. Thereafter a new policy was substituted, which remained in force up to the time of the accident. Prior to the accident he had recovered £5 from the association for a slight injury to the eye, caused by some prickly pear thorn blowing into it. He was not then medically attended, and the injury was not serious. On the 20th July, 1906, while he was at an out-station, sorting his goats in the kraal, some dust was blown into his right eye. The wind was blowing, and the dogs were running up and down, causing dust to rise. The dust consisted of goat manure. The injury caused him great pain, and he had to go home at once. About three or four hours afterwards, matter formed in his eye. He remained at home for two or three days. Then he had some urgent business at Schoombie. He went there, his eye being bandaged. He returned on the 27th, but his eye got no better, and he consulted two doctors in Bedford. He also saw a medical man at Port Elizabeth and another at Cathcart. When he went to Bedford to see the doctor, he saw Mr. Henry Trollip, the local agent of the defendant association.

The latter asked him what was the matter with his eye, and witness said some dust had blown into it. Witness was not then aware that he was required to send in a written statement about the accident within 21 days. He had not read the policy. On the 12th September he again saw Mr. H. Trollip, who was his cousin, and the latter took down in writing a statement made by witness. (The statement was read. It referred to the date of the accident as being July 14.) Witness said he gave Mr. Trollip the date from memory, but when he got home he found he had given the wrong date. On September 13 a form was sent by Mr. H. Trollip to be filled in by witness, and another form to be filled in by the doctor. Both these forms were filled in and returned to Mr. Trollip on the 27th September. Mr. Cumming, the manager of the Port Elizabeth branch of the defendant company, subsequently wrote him, asking witness to meet him at Witmoos station. Witness met him at the station. That was, witness believed, in the middle of October. Mr. Cumming offered £24 in settlement. Witness declined to accept this. Cumming said he was entitled to £6 a week for four weeks. Finally the company repudiated the claim. He had another interview with Mr. Cumming at Rosmead, where they met casually. On that occasion Cumming said he had had a report from one of the doctors who attended witness, and it was not satisfactory. He offered witness £20. Witness was not blind in the right eye, but it was of no use to him. He could not distinguish faces with that eye alone. Previously the eye was a very good one. He had been a good shot, but he had been unable to shoot since. Witness's left eye had always been weak.

In cross-examination by Mr. Buchanan, the plaintiff said that on the 20th November he had an operation performed on his eye. Between September and November he did no work, beyond giving instructions to his boys. He never went to the out-stations. He did not engage anyone to take his place, but he had handed a couple of transactions over to other people. Mr. Cumming did not say at Witmoos that the association was not liable.

By the Court: Witness was 53 years of age, and had always been an active man. His right eye was now of no use to him in his business.

Dr. G. J. E. Pitman, of Bedford, said he saw the plaintiff when the latter came into Bedford on the 4th August. The account of the accident given by the plaintiff was consistent with the general appearance of the eye. Witness believed the present condition of the plaintiff's eye would be permanent. The injury arose from some external cause, because there was an abrasion of the eye.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: If plaintiff had got medical attention two or three days after the accident, the result would have been the same.

Other medical witnesses gave similar evidence, and evidence was also led corroborative in certain particulars of the testimony given by plaintiff.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

William Elliott, manager of the Southern Life Assurance said no reasonable explanation of the notice of the accident not having been sent within the prescribed time had been given, nor had any notice demanding arbitration been received. So far as he knew, there had been no waiver of any of the conditions of the policy. The association repudiated all liability.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The association did not write asking plaintiff for an explanation of the delay. They naturally expected a man to read and understand his policy. The association did not want to take advantage of the notice if they found the case was a genuine one. He claimed that the repudiation took place at Rosmead Junction, and when Mr. Cumming's report was confirmed.

By the Court: The reason why the association considered the notice of the accident important was, for one thing, because the association was particularly watchful in eye cases, and would send its own medical officer.

Further cross-examined: Witness quite believed Mr. Trollip considered his claim a genuine one, but on the other hand the association took up the position that there was no proof such as they could reasonably require.

Re-examined: Even after plaintiff's attention was directed to clause 5, requiring that notice or a reasonable explanation should be given, he did not send any explanation.

By the Court: Witness considered that the delay prejudiced the association. It could have sent its own doctor if notice had been given.

Further evidence was led for the defence, among the witnesses being Mr. Cumming, the Port Elizabeth manager of the association, who denied that he had waived any of the conditions of the policy. He told plaintiff definitely at Witmoos that his explanation of the delay was not satisfactory, and that the association repudiated liability. He was prepared to make an ex gratia payment.

Medical evidence was also adduced for the defence, Dr. Wood giving it as his opinion that the sight of the plaintiff's injured eye could be restored to one-third of the normal by a further operation.

Counsel addressed the jury on the facts.

Hopley J., in his address to the jury, said that with regard to plaintiff's omission to give notice of the accident within 21 days, what he would ask the jury to find was whether there was a reasonable explanation given at any time. Supposing the jury came to the conclusion that there was no reasonable explanation given, then the next point they would have to decide was whether there was a waiver of the condition by the defendant association either by their conduct or by the express act of their authorised agent. It was for the jury to consider further whether there had been, in terms of the policy, a complete and irrecoverable loss of sight of one eye. If the policy had spoken of total blindness there would have been no trouble on this ground, but the medical evidence was that the eye was practically useless, that while he had the left eye he made no use of the right, and that he did not see out of it when both his eyes were open, and when he was going about in a normal way. If the jury found there was not complete and irrecoverable loss of sight, then it would be for them to consider whether there had been total disablement for the 20 weeks for which the association assumed responsibility, or partial disablement.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for £500. They found that there was a waiver by the association of the condition requiring notice by the offer of £24 made by the agent of the company and by the terms of the letter from the company to Cumming; also that a reasonable and sufficient explanation was given to Mr. H. Trollip, the local agent at Bedford, and that the plaintiff completely and irrecoverably lost the sight of his right eye within three months of the accident.

Mr. Upington accordingly moved for judgment for £500, with costs.

Mr. Buchanan asked that under the 33rd section of the Act, judgment should be postponed on the ground that the first two pleas in bar had not yet been decided upon.

Hopley, J., said he would hear argument on these points.

Mr. Buchanan quoted the case of Daries v. South British Insurance Company (3 Juta, 416).

Hopley, J.: I have no doubt whatsoever as to the points now raised by Mr. Buchanan. Clause 7 of the conditions of insurance provides that the right to recover compensation in respect of any accident shall be forfeited on the expiry of twelve months from the date of its occurrence, on the completion of which period the liability of the association in respect of such accident shall cease and determine, unless a settlement with the insured or his representatives has been agreed upon or ascertained in terms of condition 8. All I can say as to that condition is that the claim here was instituted, summons was issued, and the process for the recovery of this compensation was begun well within a period of twelve months from the occurrence of the accident, and I consider that is all that that clause means. It cannot possibly be taken to mean that, although you claim within twelve months, if the proceedings are protracted in some way or another beyond the twelve months, you cannot then recover the amount due to you. I feel no doubt as to that point. With regard to clause 8, it reads as follows: "In case of any difference between the association and the insured regarding any claim under this policy, it shall be in the option of the association to have the said difference decided by arbitration or by action in the ordinary manner, and the association shall declare within 14 days after written demand has been received at the chief office from the insured whether the same shall be decided by arbitrators to be mutually chosen, and in case the arbitrators shall not agree, by an umpire chosen by them prior to commencing the arbitration, whose award in writing shall then be conclusive and binding on both parties, and whose award may be made a rule of the Supreme Court of the Colony or State wherein the policy is payable; and in case the association shall decline to refer the said difference to arbitration or shall give no answer to the demand therefor within the aforesaid fourteen days the insured may proceed by action in the ordinary manner in the Supreme Court of the Colony or state wherein the policy is payable." Now, this clause does not say that it is agreed between the parties that in all cases of difference the matter shall be referred to arbitration. Had that been so it would have fallen within the scope of cases like the one quoted by Mr. Buchanan (Daries v. South British Insurance Co., 3 Juta, 416), and the numerous other cases on the point. Of course, it is a perfectly good thing to say that before you go to the Law Courts you shall go to arbitration, but this insurance policy is not in those terms. The Insurance Company had the option of going to arbitration, but they did not choose to do so. They repudiated the whole claim, and there is nothing obliging the plaintiff to have gone to arbitration. Then the clause goes on to say: "Provided, however, that if no written demand for arbitration as above mentioned be made by the insured within six months from the date of the accident in respect of which the claim is made, the insured shall be held to have waived and abandoned, and he hereby agrees to waive and abandon, all claims against the association, whose liability, if any, to the insured shall thereupon absolutely cease and determine." I don't know what it means when it says "as above mentioned," except it be in the seventh section, and that only gives a man the right to proceed by action unless they agree to arbitration under clause 8, and under clause 8 arbitration is left to the option of the company. I must rule against the defendant on both points. Judgment will be entered for the plaintiff for £500, with costs.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

Ex parte FOOT. { 1907.
Oct. 24th.

Mr. H. G. Lewis moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of Mr. A. N. Foot as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of S. Henry, boot and shoe importer, of Cape Town and Wynberg.

Order granted, appointing A. N. Foot as provisional trustee, with power to carry on the business of the insolvent and collect outstanding accounts.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

POWRIE V. VAN DIEMAN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, with interest from the 1st June, 1903, less £3 10s., paid on account; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Defendant denied that he owed £200, and said that when he signed the document, he did not know what it contained.

Provisional sentence granted, and property declared executable, execution to be stayed until the first day of next term (February 1, 1908).

Mr. Justice Buchanan suggested to defendant that he should consult an attorney in the meantime.

MATRIMONIAL CASE.

RAWBONE V. RAWBONE

This was an action brought by John Wm. Rawbone, engine-driver, Woodstock, against his wife Elizabeth Maria Rawbone, also of Woodstock, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, with declaration of forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage by defendant and custody of the children to plaintiff.

Mr. Alexander was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

W. T. Birch, of the Colonial Secretary's Office, gave formal proof of the registration of the marriage.

Plaintiff said that he was married to defendant on the 8th May, 1888. He was an engine-driver in the employ of the C.G.R., having been in the service about 19 years. Six of the eight children of the marriage were living with him at his home in Oxford-street, Woodstock. In February, 1905, he had to complain about his wife associating herself with other men. Later, she left him without any warning, taking with her two of the children. She hired another house in Oxford-street, Woodstock. He asked her to return, but she declined. She was now living with her sister-in-law in Argyle-street, Woodstock. Witness desired to have custody of the eight children of the marriage.

By the Court: Defendant had given him no reason for refusing to return to him.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before the 1st November, failing which, to show cause on the 12th November, why a decree of divorce should not be granted, defendant declared to have forfeited benefits of the marriage, and plaintiff declared to be entitled to custody of the children of the marriage.

INTERDICT.

Ex parte QUINE.

Mr. Alexander moved, as a matter of urgency, for an interdict restraining Conrad Cohen and his wife Rachel Cohen, old-metal dealers, of Cape Town, from disposing of goods in their store, pending an action to be brought by applicant. Applicant said that he supported respondents in their business, that they owed him £109 3s. 2d., and that, in defiance of an agreement, respondents had been selling part of the goods in the store without first obtaining his permission.

Rule nisi granted, operating as an interim interdict, in the terms prayed, action to be instituted by applicant forthwith, leave reserved to respondents to move on due notice at any time to set aside this order, costs of this application to be asked for in the action.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE { 1907.
ZIEFER. { Oct. 24th.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute.

Rule absolute, subject to messenger's return of service on second defendant being certified to by affidavit.

Ex parte BIECH.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for a certain rule to be made absolute admitting petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights.

Rule absolute, Mr. Watermeyer appointed counsel, and Messrs. Le Roux and Wege attorneys to the petitioner.

Ex parte SMARTT SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. Close moved for a certain rule to be made absolute authorising the reduction of the company's capital, and the alteration of the articles of association. Counsel also applied for directions as to publication of notice of the registration of the minute, in accordance with the terms of section 41 of Act 25, 1892.

Rule absolute, and notice of registration required by Act 25, 1892 (section 41), published in the "Government Gazette."

GREEVE V. KEAL.

Mr. Roux moved for the appointment of a Commission de bene esse, to take the evidence of applicant and her witnesses at Kokstad in an action in which she is suing Sydney Herbert Keal by edictal citation for damages for seduction and maintenance. Defendant was in the Argentine Republic, and service had been made upon him and upon his curator ad litem (J. B. Keal), as directed by the Court.

Order granted appointing the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Kokstad, or officer acting as such, to be Commissioner to examine the plaintiff and her witnesses, costs to be costs in the cause.

WILKINSON V. ESTATE WILKINSON AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Rowson moved, on the application of George Wilkinson of Cape Town, for the appointment of a Commission to take the evidence of his mother and others at Boston, Lincolnshire, in an action instituted by applicant against the respondents.

Mr. Howes (for respondents) opposed on the ground that an exception had been taken to the declaration that it disclosed no valid cause of action, and that this exception should be disposed of before the present application was dealt with.

Mr. Rowson: We intend to apply for an amendment when the exception is heard.

Order granted appointing the Registrar of the County Court at Boston, Lincolnshire, as Commissioner to examine the witnesses mentioned by applicant, Commission not to issue until after the exception taken to the declaration has been heard, the exception to be set down before the 31st October, costs of Commission to be determined at the trial, and costs of this application to be costs in the cause.

ROWAN V. ESTATE LOUW AND ANOTHER.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondents to show cause why applicant should not be admitted to sue them in forma pauperis for certain interest alleged to be due to her from the estate of her late parents.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for applicant; Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for respondents.

Affidavits having been read, and Mr. De Villiers having been heard,

The matter was referred to Mr. De Villiers for report, and upon his certificate of probabilis causa, the matter to be set down for hearing upon notice, as if it had been the return day of the rule.

Ex parte FIGLAN.

Mr. Ingram moved for leave to petitioner to sue his wife, Sarah Anne Figlan, by edictal citation, for divorce, on the ground of her alleged adultery. Respondent was last heard of at the Ndabeni Location, Cape Division, in June last, and her present whereabouts were unknown.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, citation returnable on the 12th December, personal service, failing which one publication in the "Imvo" newspaper.

INSOLVENT ESTATE KLAAS V. KLAAS.

Insolvency—Provisional order of sequestration — Ante-nuptial contract.

By ante-nuptial contract K. had agreed to settle certain property on his wife, but delayed passing transfer until after a provisional order of sequestration had been obtained against his estate.

Held, that as by the provisional order his estate became vested in the Master, and as an ante-nuptial contract, apart from actual transfer conveys no rights in rem, the transfer from K. to his wife was null and void.

This was an action brought by the provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of Isaac Klaas against Sophy Klaas (born Blumenfeld), of Oudtshoorn (wife of the insolvent), for an order declaring certain transfer of half-share of certain piece of land in the town of Oudtshoorn to be null and void.

From the pleadings it appeared that the insolvent and defendant entered into an ante-nuptial contract on the 20th August, 1905, under which he settled upon her the portion of land in dispute. On the 19th April, 1907, Isaac Klaas's estate was provisionally sequestrated, and on the 26th April, 1907, insolvent purported to pass transfer of the ground to his wife.

The matter had been before Mr. Justice Buchanan on Circuit, and it was there agreed that no witnesses should be called on the removal of the hearing to Cape Town.

Mr. Howes was for plaintiff; Mr. Louwrens was for defendant.

Mr. Howes submitted that as transfer of the property had not been passed at the date of the sequestration, the land would be vested in the hands of the Master, and the insolvent would after that have no right to pass transfer to the defendant. He cited sections 5, 6, and 93 of the Insolvent Ordinance, and mentioned Harris v. Huissine (2 Menz., 105).

Mr. Louwrens said that the estate was only provisionally sequestrated. He cited Ishmail v. Ally (16 C.T.R., 266). He submitted that when the ante-nuptial contract was entered into dominium in the property passed to defendant, and that at the sequestration of the estate of Isaac Klaas, the land in question did not, therefore, vest in the Master. He cited Van Leeuwen's Cens. For. (1, 2, 4, 7), Van der Keessel (Thesis, p. 202), Voet (41, 1, 41), Act 21, 1875 (secs. 3, 4, and 7), and Anstruther v. Chiappini's Trustees (3 Searle, 91).

Buchanan, J.: Husband and wife had been married by ante-nuptial contract. On April 19, 1907, the estate of the husband was placed under sequestration in terms of section 5 of Ordinance 6, 1843. Seven days after, i.e., on April 26, a transfer was registered in the Registry of Deeds of this colony, transferring to the wife certain landed property which had belonged to the husband. Action is now taken to set aside this transfer on the ground that at the time it was made the husband, by his insolvency, was no longer vested with the property, and could not, therefore, transfer it. The defence set up is, shortly, that as the transfer was in compliance with the terms of the ante-nuptial contract, it cannot now be impeached, and it is contended that the registration of an ante-nuptial contract has the effect of passing dominium in property to which the contract refers. It is also argued that as the transfer was made before the final sequestration of the estate of the husband, though after the provisional order had been obtained, dominium still vested in the insolvent. This latter contention, I think, cannot be supported. Section 5 of the Ordinance, which provides for what is called, in ordinary parlance, provisional sequestration, provides that when, on the application of a creditor, compulsory sequestration is prayed for, and an order of sequestration is granted, such order places the estate of every such person or persons under sequestration in the hands of the Master of the Court until the same shall, in manner hereinafter mentioned, be adjudged to be sequestrated, or the said petition shall be discharged. Here is clear and precise language of the Act vesting the estate on the provisional order being granted by the Master. Section 46 of the Ordinance further says that every order made placing an estate under sequestration as insolvent, shall so soon as made have the effect of divesting the insolvent of the property, and after such an order has been made, the insolvent has no power to alienate such property. The fact, therefore, that at the time this transfer was made, only a provisional order of sequestration, and not a final order of sequestration, had been made, cannot support the passing of this transfer, as transfer was passed at a time when the insolvent was not vested with the property. The other question is, what was the effect of the registration of the ante-nuptial contract? Now, the registration of the ante-nuptial contract does not, in my opinion, have the same effect as the registration of a deed of transfer passing the dominium in the property. Though, by the contract, it may be stipulated between the parties that certain property shall be transferred, still until the actual transfer is made, the dominium remains in the person who holds the title to the property. The learned counsel for the defendant referred to Act 21, 1875, which protects property in certain circumstances, which is settled by ante-nuptial contract. Here it is not sought to impeach the ante-nuptial contract, the wife has all the rights under the ante-nuptial contract which she had before sequestration, but her remedy to enforce those rights is affected by her husband's insolvency. If the transfer had been effected before the provisional order of sequestration, it is possible it might have been a question whether the transfer, being a compliance with the terms of the ante-nuptial contract duly registered, could be attacked, but though the rights of the wife remain, her remedy to enforce those rights is affected by the divesting of the insolvent of his property before he effected the transfer. In this case, the transfer having been made after the insolvency, it cannot be considered a bona fide transfer, and the trustee of the insolvent estate is entitled, therefore, to have the transfer declared null and void. The wife may insist upon her rights, and make any claim she may have on the estate. The transfer is set aside simply on the ground that at the date when it was passed it was passed by a transferee who had no dominium in the property. It was, therefore, an illegal transfer. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff as prayed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

SIVERTSEN V. SIVERTSEN. { 1907.
Oct. 25th.

Will—Ord. 15 of 1845 — Witnesses.

Every will executed in this Colony to which Ord. 15 of 1845 applies, must be signed on each leaf by two witnesses who, when signing, must do so in the presence of the testator and of each other.

Semble: In English Law witnesses need not sign in presence of each other.

Sullivan v. Sullivan (3 L.R. Ir. 299).

This was an action brought by certain children of the late Hans Sivertsen, for an order declaring a document null and void, in so far as it purported to be the last will and testament of the late Hans Sivertsen, and the setting aside of the defendant's appointment as executors, or for such other relief as the Court might seem meet, with costs out of the estate.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows: (1) The plaintiffs, who reside in the Cape Peninsula, are Arthur Lawrence Sivertsen, Sivert Christian Sivertsen, Johanna Dorothea Sutherland (born Sivertsen), married out of community of property to Robert George Sutherland, and Pieter Nelson, married in community of property to Maria Elizabeth (born Sivertsen). The three first-named plaintiffs and Maria Elizabeth Nilson are children of the late Hans Sivertsen, who died on or about the 6th August, 1907, and as such interested under a will executed by him on or about January 12, 1904. (2) The defendants, Hans Gerhardus Sivertsen and George William Steytler, who are sued in their capacity as executors testamentary of the estate of the late Hans Sivertsen, of Wynberg, hold letters of administration granted to them on or about August 15, 1907, by the Master of this Honourable Court, as executors testamentary, in accordance with a document executed on or about the 12th July, 1907, purporting to be the last will and testament of the late Hans Sivertsen. (3) The document, which purported to revoke all former wills and testamentary disposition, is not the legal last will and testament of the late Hans Sivertsen, by reason that, although it purports to have been signed in the presence of two witnesses, John Andrew Coetzee and Hendrick Fredrik van Eyssen, yet in truth and in fact it was not so signed, nor did the testator acknowledge his said signature to the said two witnesses, both being present at the same time. On the contrary, the testator acknowledged his signature to the document in the presence only of John Andrew Coetzee, who thereupon added his signature as a witness, and the said acknowledgment did not take place in the presence of Hendrick Frederick van Eyssen, nor was Van Eyssen present when Coetzee witnessed the document. Thereafter Hans Sivertsen brought the document to Hendrick Frederick van Eyssen, to witness his signature thereto, when Van Eyssen appended his name as witness, but the testator did not sign, nor acknowledge his signature in the presence of Van Eyssen, nor was Coetzee present when the request was made, nor did Van Eyssen witness the document in the presence of Coetzee: wherefore, in terms of Ordinance 15 of 1845, the document is not the last will and testament of the late Hans Sivertsen. Wherefore the plaintiffs pray for an order declaring the document to be null and void, in so far as it purports to be the last will and testament of the late Hans Sivertsen, and the setting aside of the defendants' appointment as executors, or for such other relief as to this Honourable Court may seem meet, together with costs out of the estate.

The defendants' plea was as follows: (1) Defendants admit paragraph 1 of the declaration, save that they deny that the plaintiffs are interested under the will dated 12th January, 1904. They say that the will dated 12th January, 1904, was revoked not only by the will dated 12th July, 1907, but also by a duly executed will and codicil dated 8th April, 1907, containing for the most part the same provisions and dispositions as the said will of 12th July, 1907. (2) The defendants say, furthermore, that they were appointed as executors of the late Hans Sivertsen, not only by the will dated 12th July, 1907, but also by the aforesaid will dated 8th April, 1907, and also jointly with one Paul de Villiers by the aforesaid will, dated 12th January, 1904, and codicil thereto dated 7th August, 1906. (3) The defendants admit paragraph 2 of the declaration, but they do not admit any of the allegations contained in paragraph 3 thereof, and put the plaintiffs to the proof thereof. Wherefore they pray that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Plaintiffs' replication was as follows:

(1) They have no knowledge of the existence of a document executed by the late Hans Sivertsen on or about April 8, 1907, purporting to be a will and codicil of the late Hans Sivertsen. The document has not been filed with the Master of the Supreme Court, nor have the defendants applied for or taken up letters of administration thereunder. They do not admit that the document in so far as it purports to be a will and testament of the late Hans Sivertsen is legally and validly executed in terms of Ordinance 15 of 1945. (2) Save as aforesaid, and save in so far as it consists of admissions, they deny all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the plea contained, join issue thereon, and again, as before, pray for judgment, with costs.

Mr. McGregor, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiffs; Mr. De Villiers for defendants.

John Commaile, clerk in the Master's Office, produced the original will, dated 12th July, 1907, of the late Hans Sivertsen. Letters of administration had been taken out under that will by the executors testamentary.

John Andrew Coetzee, commercial traveller, of Observatory-road, who witnessed the will, said that the late Mr. Sivertsen called him into the house to do so, remarking that he was getting old, and as he was feeling unwell, he thought the best thing he could do was to make his will. Witness pointed out that Mr. Sivertsen had already signed it, and he replied that the ink was not quite dry.

By Mr. De Villiers: Mr. Sivertsen asked him to witness the will. When he witnessed the will he did not think that there should be two witnesses present.

Hendrick F. van Eyssen, a dairyman, of Wynberg, who also witnessed the will at the request of Mr. Sivertsen, stated that the latter brought the document to him, and asked him to sign it. The signature of the last witness was already on the document.

This concluded the evidence in the case.

Mr. De Villiers having been called upon, said he would leave the matter in the hands of the Court.

Maasdorp, J.: The executors in this case were quite right in coming to Court to see that the case for the plaintiff was clearly established, but it has certainly now been proved that the signature of the testator was not made or acknowledged by him in the presence of two competent witnesses present at the same time, and besides that it appears that one witness, Van Eyssen, did not attest and subscribe the will in the presence of the testator. The will and letters of administration are declared null and void, costs to come out of the estate.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ILLIQUID ROLL.

NEL V. DU PLESSIS. { 1907.
Oct. 25th

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., moved for judgment, under Rule 319, for £76, rent due under a certain lease, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

MASON V. DE MEILLON.

Mr. Roux moved for a certain rule calling upon respondent to show cause why petitioner should not be admitted to sue him in forma pauperis to be made absolute. Service had been made upon respondent, but there was no appearance on his behalf.

Rule absolute as prayed, and Mr. Sutton appointed counsel and Mr. E. J. Schultz attorney to the petitioner.

LIPSCHITZ V. KLEYN.

This was an application, upon notice, calling upon respondent to show cause why a certain portion of his plea in the action brought against him by applicant should not be struck out as embarrassing, bad in law, and disclosing no defence to the action.

Mr. Bisset was for applicant; Mr. Louwrens was for respondent. The parties reside in the Oudtshoorn district.

It appeared that an action had been instituted by applicant against respondent for delivery of the plumage of certain ostriches, or, in the alternative, for £108 damages for breach of contract. Applicant desired to have the following paragraph of the plea struck out: "In paragraph 2 of the defendant's plea the number 68, and the words, 'but defendant did not at the time notice that the receipt erroneously contained the words, ses en tagentig (86), instead of the words, acht en zestig (68), the whole of paragraph 3; in paragraph 4 the words, 'though by law compelled to do so, and without receiving any further consideration.'"

Respondent was willing to consent to an amendment of paragraph 2 by inserting, 'defendant says that the agreement of sale was a verbal one, and never reduced to writing.'

Mr. Bisset, in argument, said that the application was brought under Rule of Court 320 (sub-section 8). Plaintiff was embarrassed because he did not know what defence he had really to meet.

Mr. Louwrens said the defence would be that the plumage of 86 birds had been delivered. The declaration raised the question of fraud, alleging that defendant fraudulently represented that he had delivered to plaintiff's agent the feathers of 18 more birds than was actually the case.

Buchanan, J., said that the plea was not artistically drawn, and did not make any specific attempt to answer the allegation of fraud.

Application granted, with costs, and defendant ordered to amend his plea.

Buchanan, J.: The affidavits which have been produced are altogether unnecessary, and no costs will be allowed for the affidavits. I wish it to be understood that I do not specifically say that these paragraphs should be struck out.

CONNOLLY, LTD. V. VAN DER MERWE.

This was an application for the personal attachment of respondent for contempt of Court by disobeying an order granted on September 20, directing him to render an account of all moneys and goods received by him from applicants for sale on their account, and all moneys disbursed and received in connection with the sale of the goods.

Mr. Swift was for applicant; respondent did not appear.

Mr. Swift produced an affidavit of service of no notice of motion upon respondent by leaving it at his last known place of residence at Wellington. Affidavits were also read to the effect that £300 worth of goods had been advanced to respondent, and that he had not accounted for any sales that he had made, or any goods that he still had in his possession.

Order granted for respondent's attachment, with costs.

Ex parte ESTATE FRASER.

Mr. Long moved, on the petition of J. B. Cleghorn, one of the curators bonis of the estate, for the appointment of G. W. Steytler and A. N. Foot as provisional trustees.

Order granted appointing Messrs. Steytler and Foot as provisional trustees.

Ex parte VENTER.

Mr. Roux moved for the release of petitioner, a minor, from tutelage to enable him to purchase one-third of a farm with his two brothers and pass a bond. Petitioner resides in the district of Hanover, and was born on the 10th January, 1888, and had carried on farming for some time past. Petitioner also prayed for an order declaring him to be a major at law, but counsel said that he did not now press this part of the application. The tutors testamentary approved of the prayers of the application. Counsel cited in re Cuchet (16 S.C., 5).

Ordered that the Registrar of Deeds be authorised to register any bond tendered by the minor without the assistance of his tutors.

Ex parte WIGG.

Mr. Howes moved on behalf of petitioner, P. W. Wigg, of Uitenhage, for an order for registration of a certain antenuptial contract. Petitioner said that he was married on the 4th September last. On the 2nd September an antenuptial contract was executed before Martin Edward Mackenzie, attorney, Uitenhage, and deponent paid to Mackenzie the estimated cost and disbursements to be incurred in the preparation and registration of the contract. Mackenzie had failed to have the contract registered within the period required by law.

Buchanan, J., said that no explanation was given in the petition as to why Mackenzie failed to see to the registration of the contract. He thought Mackenzie ought to be called to account.

Mr. Howes said that, of course, he appeared on behalf of Mr. Wigg.

Buchanan, J., said that he would grant an order, subject to notice of motion being given to Mackenzie calling upon him to show cause why he should not pay the costs of this application.

Mr. Howes said that he was instructed to give an undertaking accordingly.

Order granted authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register the antenuptial contract, saving rights of creditors which may have accrued in the meantime.

Ex parte DE MARILLAC.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for the cancellation of certain sales of land on the Cape Flats made by applicant to certain two persons, on the ground of failure to pay instalments of the purchase price as stipulated in the conditions. The present whereabouts of both respondents were unknown.

Rule granted calling upon respondents to show cause why the sales should not be cancelled, personal service if possible, failing which one publication in the "Cape Times," rule returnable on the 12th December.

Ex parte MILLER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent Johannes Stephanus Burger, of Clanwilliam, in an action to have him declared of unsound mind. Petitioner is a creditor against Burger's estate, and Burger is at present confined in the Valkenburg Asylum. Previous proceedings had recently been taken on the petition of Mrs. Burger, and a temporary curator had been appointed, but no further action had been taken, and the curator (W. P. Burger) had not taken out his appointment.

Order granted, appointing Mr. Marais as curator ad litem in proceedings to have respondent declared of unsound mind, summons to be served on the alleged lunatic and the curator ad litem. Notice to be given of the set-down to Mrs. Burger and the temporary curator, summons returnable on the 12th November.

MOSTERT AND SON V. TAHA.

Mr. Roux produced affidavits of service on the executors concerned as required and applied for the rule nisi to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

SONNENBERG V. MAITLAND MUNICIPALITY.

This was an application upon notice to the respondent Municipality for an order compelling them to authorise certain slaughter-house within the Municipality belonging to one Loubser, whereof applicant is the lessee as a duly authorised house in terms of the Municipal regulations.

Applicant's case was that he had been refused permission to use the premises as a slaughter-house, and that the opposition was due to the fact that as a cattle dealer he was ready and willing to deal with Indian butchers. The European Butchers' Association had passed a resolution refusing to have anything to do with any dealer who traded with Indians. Applicant said that the refusal was made in the interests of the "meat ring."

Respondents said that they had no animus against applicant, and that they declined to give permission, in response to a circular from the Government, asking them not to licence fresh premises pending negotiations as to the establishment of public abattoirs.

Dr. Greer for applicant. Mr. Benjamin, K.C., for respondents.

Dr. Greer said that this matter was of considerable importance not only to applicant, but also to a number of Europeans, who were engaged in the butchering business, who were outside the "ring," which it was not denied had been formed. It was clear that, even if the question of public abattoirs were solved, and abattoirs of that kind were erected a considerable time must elapse before they were available to these people. The existing slaughter-houses had, within the past few months, passed into the hands of certain cold storage companies, who had refused to allow any person to slaughter there except those approved of by them. For the people outside the Butchers' Association this was almost a question of life and death. These premises were originally under the jurisdiction of the Cape Divisional Council, and subsequently came within the Municipality of Maitland, and were accepted by them as a slaughter-house, and inspected by their officers. The Municipality were now estopped from saying that these premises were unauthorised. Counsel also submitted that application having been made by Loubser to the Municipality, and their regulations having been complied with, respondents ought to have issued an authorisation such as was required. He cited Clark v. Town Council of Cape Town (4 C.T.R., 42), and contended that there had been an unreasonable refusal on the part of the Council to exercise the powers entrusted to them. It was said that the respondents had been asked by the Government to stay their hands pending a solution of the question of public abattoirs. Applicant was, however, willing to accept an order permitting him to slaughter in those premises until public abattoirs had been constructed. He cited Tregidga v. Rondebosch Municipality (6 S.C.R., 321).

Mr. Benjamin said that regulations 178 and 179 of the Municipality were framed under the Municipal Act, No. 45, of 1882 (section 109, sub-section 12). These premises had never been sanctioned by the Municipal Council.

[Buchanan, J.: I see no evidence of authorisation in this case.]

Mr. Benjamin submitted that there was no ground of estoppel in this matter. The sanitary inspectors could not authorise this slaughter-house. The Council had used their powers bona fide, and were exercising the discretionary power vested in them in a reasonable manner. The Government had represented to the Council the extreme undesirability of sanctioning any new houses pending negotiations in connection with the establishment of public abattoirs. It was not for the purpose of supplying meat to the inhabitants of the Municipality of Maitland that this application was brought, but in order to supply meat in the city of Cape Town. There was nothing to prevent applicant endeavouring to set up a slaughter-house in some other Municipality.

Buchanan, J.: The applicant in this case has hired certain premises in Maitland, which he wishes to use for the purpose of slaughtering stock. These premises were built some 13 or 14 years ago, and were for a time used as a slaughter-house. The ground upon which they were built was then under the control of the Divisional Council. For trade reasons, several years ago the premises ceased to be used for slaughtering purposes. About a twelvemonth past the land upon which these premises were situated was brought within the Municipality of Maitland. On the 1st June last, for the first time since they were so brought within the Municipality, the owner of the property, or his tenant, began again to slaughter within these premises. One of the Municipal regulations framed under the authority of the General Municipal Act No. 45 of 1882, which is in force at Maitland, provides that there shall be no slaughtering of cattle, etc., within the Municipality, except in premises duly authorised by the Council. The Municipality had reports made, and are now prosecuting the persons who have contravened the regulations. The applicant meanwhile asks for a mandamus to compel the Council to authorise the slaughtering of stock in these premises. But in argument it is urged that they have already been authorised, if not expressly, at any rate by implication. The first question is whether these premises have ever been authorised by the Council. I fail to find any evidence whatever that there has been any authorisation. But it is argued that as the Municipal inspectors had inspected these premises and pointed out that certain alterations would be necessary before they would be fit for slaughtering purposes, therefore the Council was estopped now from saying that they would not recognise this place. If that Council has actually or impliedly given its consent to slaughtering in this place, then this application would be altogether unnecessary, for an order to compel the Council to authorise these premises for slaughtering purposes. The application is itself opposed to the idea that there was any previous authorisation. Then it is said that the Council has mala fide and unreasonably refused to authorise these premises. In the first place, it has been pointed out that the purpose for which it is sought to use this place for, slaughtering, is not for the benefit of the Municipality within which it is situated, but for the benefit of traders living in another Municipality, viz., that of Cape Town, and it is alleged that the traders of Cape Town have formed a "ring," as it is called, and have so co-operated that they have shut out a certain number of people from competing in the business of butchers. If there was any discrimination made by the Council between applicants who apply for licences from them, and this discrimination was to support the "ring," or to support other traders, I think that that would be mala fide and unreasonable ground upon which to refuse giving a licence. But in this case, before I can make an order in terms of the motion, it must be established that the Municipal Council of Maitland has acted unreasonably, or acted mala fide, in refusing to authorise slaughtering in these particular premises. I think the affidavit of the Town Clerk shows that, instead of any mala fide or unreasonable refusal, the Council considered that they had very good reason for their action. The Town Clerk says there has been considerable discussion, and the Government have recently addressed a circular to the Municipality in which they strongly discountenance the authorisation of fresh slaughter-houses, pending the establishment of public abattoirs. Well, the erection of abattoirs may take a long time, but if the Council have acted honestly and bona fide in this matter, I do not think the Court can compel them to give a licence which they on these grounds refuse to give. As I said before, if their refusal had been because they wish to support the "ring" in Cape Town, or that they wish to shut out small traders and Indian traders from carrying on business in competition with others, that would be an unreasonable ground for refusal. But on the affidavits it appears that that is not the ground on which the Council acted, and in the absence of mala fides on the part of the Council, I do not think that I can grant this application, seeing that it is not for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Municipality in question, but for that of persons residing and trading in some other Municipality. The Council has exercised its discretion honestly, and on what appear to be good grounds, and I think the Court cannot order them to depart from what they consider bona fide is the proper course to adopt. The case of Tregidga v. Rondebosch Municipality (6 Juta, 321) is somewhat in point here. In that case the applicant had been slaughtering for some forty years within the Municipality of Rondebosch, and the Municipality, acting under the same Act, passed a regulation which prohibited the slaughtering of stock within the Municipality. The Court said they had a perfect right to do so, if they did not act unreasonably or mala fide, even though the applicant might have acquired what one might almost call a prescriptive right. That was a criminal case, it was a conviction for contravening Municipal regulations, and the Court sustained the conviction, and dismissed the appeal. In this case, I think the Court must, under the circumstances stated, refuse the application with costs.

DU TOIT V. DE SMIDT.

This was an application brought by Anna Susanna du Toit, married without community to Abraham G. N. du Toit, upon notice to Charles de Smidt to show cause why an award of a certain arbitrator (Attorney A. R. Truter) should not be made a Rule of Court.

It appeared that the applicant commenced an action against respondent upon a promissory note, but that before the case came on for trial it was agreed to submit the matter to arbitration. Mr. Truter was appointed arbitrator, and he called for papers and gave notice to respondent, but the respondent did not appear, and Mr. Truter proceeded to arbitrate in his absence. He had made his award, finding in favour of applicant for £300.

Mr. Long was for applicant; Mr. Howes was for respondent.

Mr. Howes said that the deed of submission did not contain any authority that the award should be made a Rule of Court. The arbitrator in this matter was not an official arbitrator. Counsel cited Act 28, 1898 (section 23). Respondent said that this was merely a friendly sort of proceeding. If he had regarded it as an arbitration under the Act it was hardly likely that he would have allowed the attorney to the other side to be appointed arbitrator. The deed of submission contained a clause that each party should pay his or her own costs. The respondent furthermore was not heard in the arbitration proceedings, and was not given a reasonable opportunity of appearing. Counsel quoted the schedule to the Arbitration Act (section 4), and submitted that there had been no reasonable cause for the arbitrator to proceed ex parte.

Mr. Long argued that the clause in the deed of submission did not mean that each party should pay his or her own costs in the arbitration.

Buchanan, J.: The applicant sued the defendant in this court upon a promissory note. Before the case came on for trial the parties agreed to submit the issue to the arbitrament of Mr. Truter, and abide by the result of his award. The consent paper to this effect, subject to certain conditions, was signed by the defendant. In the submission it is agreed that all papers were to be submitted to the arbitrator on or before the 10th June. Defendant did not submit his papers to the arbitrator, he was called upon to do so. He was given notice to attend the arbitration, but failed to appear. After repeated notice, he asked for a week's longer time; he got a week's longer time, but even then he did not appear. The arbitrator, in his absence, as he was authorised to do under the Act, proceeded with the arbitration, and made his award. He awarded the plaintiff £300, the amount of the promissory note sued upon, and costs. It is objected that there is nothing in the agreement signed by the parties authorising the award to be made a Rule of Court. There have been cases before the passing of the Act (No. 29, of 1898), in which it has been held that this is a necessary requisite, but under the 23rd section of that Act "the report or award of any officer of the Court, or official, or special referee or arbitrator, may, upon motion by any party, after due notice to the other parties, be made a judgment or Rule of Court." Section 3, which has been referred to, puts a submission by consent on the same footing as an order of Court. Under these circumstances, after the passing of the Act, there is no doubt that either party has a right to come to the Court to have the award made a Rule of Court. The only difficulty I see in this case is as to the portion of the submission, which says that the reference is "subject to the condition that each party pays his own costs, and that the case be withdrawn." As it stands, this might be held to be an agreement that each party was to pay his own share of the whole costs, and that being the case, while making the award a Rule of Court, it will be an award only for the amount awarded by Mr. Truter, with costs, of the order of Court, but without the costs of arbitration, and costs of the action. It will, therefore, be made a Rule of Court.

In re ASSETS REALISATION ASSOCIATION.

The Registrar handed in the final report of the official liquidator of the Assets Realisation Association.

Buchanan, J.: The official liquidator reports that this was a bogus company, and that there are no assets in the estate of any kind. The papers will be filed in the Court, and anybody who is interested can look at them. The report will be confirmed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX V. STRATTON. } 1907.
 } Oct. 28th.

Law of evidence—Admissibility at criminal trial of depositions—Illness of witness—Act 17 of 1874, Sec. 5.

In a criminal trial before the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, medical evidence was given that a certain witness, who had made a deposition, on oath, at the preliminary examination, had left the country on account of ill-health, that it would have been dangerous to his life to remain in the country and that he would be unable, owing to his ill-health, to give evidence at his trial, although he was actually travelling, in order to make the change which the state of his health required. The presiding judge, being satisfied that the witness was too ill to be able to travel to the Court for the purpose of giving his evidence, allowed the deposition to be read under the 5th section of Act 17 of 1874.

Held on appeal, that there was no ground for holding that the discretion of the Judge had been improperly exercised.

This was an appeal from a decision of the High Court of Rhodesia by which the accused, Thomas Stratton, a servant of the Beira and Mashonaland Railways, was found guilty of appropriating £39 odd and £100, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour. The indictment set out that on 26th June, 1907, at Bulawayo, the accused falsely and fraudulently gave out and pretended to the stationmaster at Cape Town, and as such acting for and on behalf of the Cape Government Railways, that Robert Thompson Anderson, stationmaster at Bulawayo, and as such acting for and on behalf of the Beira and Mashonaland Railways, authorised the expenditure of the sum of £10 sterling as the price of a second-class railway ticket from Cape Town to Bulawayo, together with an advance of fifteen shillings in cash, which ticket and sum of fifteen shillings were issued and granted to Johanna Subert by the stationmaster at Cape Town, in his said capacity, and did then and there, by means of false pretences, cause Robert Thompson Anderson, for and on behalf of the Beira and Mashonaland Railways, to become liable for the sum of £10 to the Cape Government Railways; whereas, in truth and in fact, Thomas Stratton well knew when he so gave out and pretended that the said Robert Thompson Anderson, in his capacity as aforesaid, did not authorise the issue of the ticket and the advance of the said sum of money to the said Johanna Subert by the said stationmaster at Cape Town aforesaid, or otherwise; and thus the said Thomas Stratton did commit the crime of fraud. Secondly: As also, in that, during the month of July, in the year aforesaid, and at Bulawayo aforesaid, the said Thomas Stratton did receive and take into his possession from divers persons, who are to the prosecutor unknown, money amounting to £142 7s. 1d., their property, which money it became the duty of the accused to pay to Robert Thompson Anderson for and on behalf of the Beira and Mashonaland Railways as aforesaid, yet the said Thomas Stratton, not regarding his duty in that behalf, did not pay the said money or any part thereof to the said Robert Thompson Anderson for and on behalf of the Beira and Mashonaland Railways as aforesaid; but, on the contrary, did afterwards, to wit, during the month of July, in the year aforesaid, wrongfully, unlawfully, and fraudulently convert and appropriate the same to his own use, and thus did commit the crime of theft. The grounds of appeal were: (1) That the admission of Anderson's evidence was illegal, and that without such evidence there was no evidence that the crime as charged in the indictment was committed by the prisoner; (2) that there was no evidence aliunde the prisoner's statements as contained in the books that the crime as charged had been committed.

Mr. M. Bisset was for the appellant, and Mr. Struben was for the Crown.

On the question of the admissibility of the evidence, counsel quoted section 5 of Act 17 of 1874. The question seemed to be, was the deposing witness in this case too ill to be able to travel? and it was on that ground that there was no proof that the objection in this case was taken. The interpretation of the Statute must be a very strict one, and the Court must not extend the words of the Statute. It was prejudicial to the prisoner that the evidence of a material witness should be admitted merely on his deposition. The witness Anderson was not cross-examined, save on a very small portion of his evidence.

De Villiers, C.J., said the Court would then hear counsel for the Crown on the point of the admissibility of the evidence.

Mr. Struben submitted that the fact of a witness not being fit to travel had been held in the English Court not sufficient to bar the evidence from being put in. (Counsel referred to 11 and 12 Vic., chapter 42, sec. 17, Rex v. Wilson (8 Cox, p. 38), Rex v. Wicker (8 Jurist, p. 252), Regina v. Daly (6 Cox, p. 55), Rex v. Coburn (7 Cox, p. 265). The question whether the evidence should be admitted or not had been decided in the case of Rex v. Sterenson (31 "Law Journal," p. 147) to be a question within the discretion of the judge. Counsel submitted there was good ground for admitting the evidence. The doctor showed that the witness was too ill to be able to travel to give evidence, without risk to his life, and he had sent him away for that reason.

Mr. Bisset, on the question of the discretion of the judge, referred to the case of Rex v. Tate (2 Foster and Finlayson, 565), and also Rex v. Bull (12 Cox, 31). He submitted there was no reason why the case should not be postponed until Mr. Anderson was able to come back to Bulawayo, when he could have been cross-examined.

De Villiers, C.J.: The judge at the trial has a large measure of discretion as to whether he should admit evidence of this kind or not, but the discretion must be exercised within the limits required by law. The question now is whether the learned judge exceeded those limits. The words of the section are: "That a deposition shall be admissible in evidence if it shall be proved on oath to the satisfaction of the Court that the deposing witness is too ill to be able to travel." A reasonable construction of these words, in my opinion, is that the witness was too ill to be able to travel to the Court for the purpose of there giving his evidence. The mere fact that he is able to be moved does not prevent the section from being put into operation, if the witness is too ill to be able to travel to the Court in order to give his evidence. Now, the learned judge was satisfied that the deposing witness was too ill to be able to travel to the Court, there to give his evidence, and the evidence of the doctor fully supports that view. The doctor had not seen him on the day he had to appear in court, but this was not a case of a sudden illness coming upon the witness. It was a long-standing illness, for which the doctor had attended him, and the doctor says that "he left for home the Sunday fortnight preceding. He went on account of ill-health. He was suffering from debility and a severe rupture. In my opinion, it was necessary he should go at once. It was necessary for him to go home for his own safety and health. I would have given a certificate willingly as to his inability to remain here to give evidence. I do not think he would have been able to give evidence even last Tuesday. It was dangerous to his life to remain here, and he is actually travelling now because of the dangerous condition of his health." Under the circumstances I am not prepared to hold that the learned judge, in allowing the evidence to be read, exercised his discretion improperly, and the appeal must be dismissed.

Buchanan and Maasdorp, J.J., concurred.

Mr. Bisset then proceeded to read the record of evidence taken in the Court of first instance, from which it appeared that the accused was found not guilty on the first count, but was found guilty of appropriating £39, and recommended to mercy on the ground of previous good character. Counsel contended that there was no evidence, apart from the entries in the books, that the crime as charged had been committed. If the books were not conclusive, then the appellant was entitled to an acquittal; if conclusive, there was an end to the matter. He cited Rex v. Chapman (1 Carrington and Kirwan Reports, 119), Rex v. Waldenholme (11 Cox's Criminal Cases, 313), Rex v. Lloyd Jones (8 Carrington and Payne's Reports, 288), and submitted that it would seem clear that, according to English law, it was not enough for the prosecution to say that it appeared from the books that he had received so much, and that he had paid out so much, and that therefore there was a deficiency for which he had not accounted.

Without calling upon Mr. Struben,

De Villiers, C.J.: The learned counsel has adduced some very strong arguments, which I have no doubt have been used before the jury, but the jury was satisfied that the accused had received the money, and that he failed to pay it over, and the only question is, was there sufficient evidence before the Judge and jury to justify that conclusion? Well, the evidence of the accused himself I think goes very far to prove the statements of the indictment. Then in addition to that there is the fact that accused himself, by the books which he kept, showed that he received these moneys. The station-master says that accused did not pay over these moneys, that he did not pay the whole of the moneys, and there was a deficiency of £100, and again of £39.

This is the evidence of the station-master, which the Court has held to be admissible. I do not consider that the English cases relied on go so far as to show that, where a jury is satisfied from the admissions made by the accused that he has received certain moneys, the jury would not be justified in holding that there was an embezzlement, if he did not pay over that money to the proper person to whom he had to pay it over. None of the decisions went to far as that, but whether they did or not, I am satisfied that there was sufficient evidence to justify the jury in coming to the conclusion that accused had received certain moneys on behalf of the Railway Department, and that he failed to pay over the whole amount which he had so received to the Railway Department. His books showed that he had received the money. There is no explanation how the books came to show that. Then there is the statement that he had made to certain persons that he was in trouble, and that he tried to borrow money. The only question is whether there was sufficient evidence before the jury to justify them in coming to the conclusion that he was guilty? I am not prepared to say that there was not. For those reasons, I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

Buchanan and Maasdorp, J.J., concurred.

REX V. HOP LEE.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, who had convicted appellant, described as a Chinese laundryman, of contravening section 6 (sub-section 1), Part 2, Act 36, 1902, in that between the 1st and 11th August, 1907, he wrongfully and unlawfully owned or kept a gaming house at 78, Castle-street.

The case for the prosecution was that the accused had carried on a gaming-house at 78, Castle-street, at which fan tan was played. Accused denied the charge, and said that he did not even know what fan tan was.

The Magistrate found accused guilty, and sentenced him to pay a fine of £100, or in default three months' imprisonment with hard labour.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. De Villiers, in argument, submitted that there was much doubt as to whether the man who was arrested—the appellant—was the banker; that the evidence was by no means conclusive as to his identity.

Without calling upon Mr. Nightingale, the Court dismissed the appeal.

De Villiers, C.J.: The accused was charged with being the owner or occupier of a gaming-house. The words "owner or occupier" are defined in the third section of the Act, which says: "Owner or occupier" shall be deemed to mean and include any 'owner' who is cognisant of the purposes for which or uses to which his property is being used or put, and also a tenant, occupier, lodger, manager, banker, dealer, croupier, secretary, clerk, messenger, or any person employed in any house or place in any capacity other than a menial or domestic capacity." These words are certainly so wide, in my opinion, as to include the accused, who was in this house taking a very prominent part. He was the most prominent figure there among these 28 Chinamen. Walker says he saw the accused standing on a box and counting out washers, while the others were around him. The suggestion is now made that the police constable made a mistake as to the man. Well, there could hardly be a mistake, because the officer says he at once arrested the accused, whom he had seen taking this prominent part. I could understand the difficulty of the identification of a Chinaman by an European who had only seen him once, but here the European then and there arrested the Chinaman, and took him to the police station, and I can hardly understand that there could have been a mistake, even in the confusion which is supposed to have taken place. The Magistrate believed the evidence of the constable, and had no doubt as to the identity of the accused. The appeal must be dismissed.

Buchanan and Maasdorp, J.J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ABRAHAMSON V. GUARDIAN { 1907.
ASSURANCE CO., LTD. { Oct. 29th.

Policy of insurance—Condition as to keeping proper books.

In the body of a policy of fire insurance on stock-in-trade issued by the defendant Company in favour of the plaintiff, there was a condition that the plaintiff should keep proper books and accounts. Among the conditions indorsed on the policy was one requiring the plaintiff, in case of loss or damage, to produce to the Company all such books, vouchers and other evidence as may be reasonably required by the Company. A fire having taken place, the plaintiff demanded the amount of the policy, and upon being required to produce his books, he handed over to the Company certain books which, in the opinion of the Court, were improperly kept, as they contained important erasures which could not be satisfactorily explained, and were in other respects wholly untrustworthy for the purpose of shewing the amount and value of the stock at the time of the fire.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

This was an action brought by Abraham Abrahamson, a general dealer, of Brackenfeldt, in the division of Stellenbosch, to recover from the defendants £500 on a policy of insurance issued by the defendants on the stock of the plaintiff, which was destroyed by fire in October last.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows: (1) The plaintiff is Abraham Abrahamson, a general dealer, carrying on business at Brackenfeldt Siding, in the division of Stellenbosch. The defendant is the Guardian Assurance Co., a limited liability company, whose head office is situate in London, England, and carries on business in this colony from an office situated in Cape Town. (2) On or about the 29th November, 1905, the plaintiff effected an insurance with the defendant company under a policy bearing date November 29, 1905, and numbered 38,181,848, for the sum of £500 against loss or damage caused by fire to the goods or stock contained in the plaintiff's shop at Brackenfeldt Siding. The said policy was issued as subject to the terms and conditions in the said policy contained, and which the plaintiff craves leave to refer to when produced at the trial. (3) On or about October 11, 1906, a fire occurred on the premises at Brackenfeldt Siding, and the building, together with plaintiff's whole stock, was completely destroyed by fire, and the value of the plaintiff's stock so destroyed was £955 7s. (4) From the issue of the said policy of insurance up till the time of the fire the plaintiff had duly and regularly paid the premiums stipulated in the said policy, and plaintiff further says that at all times he has fully complied with and fulfilled all the conditions of the said policy. (5) The plaintiff says that on the premises the defendant has become indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £600 sterling in respect of the loss of stock by fire as aforesaid, but defendant refuses or neglects to pay the said sum or any part thereof. Plaintiff claims judgment in the sum of £500, with interest and costs of suit.

The defendants' plea was as follows:

1. Paragraphs 1 and 2 are admitted.

2. The defendant admits that on or about the 11th day of October, 1906, the plaintiff's building at Brackenfeldt Siding and the contents thereof were destroyed by fire, that all premiums due and payable under the said policy have been paid, and that it refuses to pay the amount of the plaintiff's claim or any part thereof. Save as above, the defendant denies each and every allegation in paragraphs 3, 4, and 5, as specifically as if herein set out.

3. By clause 1 of the conditions of the said policy referred to in paragraph 2 of the declaration, it is provided as follows: "If there be any material misdescription of any of the property hereby insured, or of any building or place in which such property is contained, or any misrepresentation as to any fact material to be known for estimating the risk, or any omission to state such fact, the company (meaning the defendant) shall not be liable upon this policy, so far as it relates to property affected by any such misdescription, misrepresentation, or omission."

4. On or about the 8th day of November, 1905, the plaintiff signed and delivered, or caused to be delivered, to the defendant a certain proposal form, necessary for the purpose of the defendant estimating the risk.

5. The plaintiff in the said proposal form wrongfully and unlawfully, and in breach of the said clause, represented the construction of the said building to be as to the walls thereof of brick, and as to the roof thereof of iron, whereas the plaintiff well knew that the said walls were of iron, lined with brick, and thus materially misdescribed the building in which the property insured was contained, and misrepresented a fact material to be known for estimating the risk. By reason thereof, the defendant is not liable upon the said policy.

6. By clause 10 of the said conditions, it is provided as follows: "On the happening of any loss or damage, the insured (meaning the plaintiff) must forthwith give notice in writing thereof to the company (meaning the defendant), and must, within 15 days after the loss or damage, or such further time as the company may, in writing, allow in that behalf, deliver to the company a claim in writing for the loss and damage containing as particular an account as is reasonably practicable of all the articles or items of property damaged or destroyed, and of the amount of the loss or damage thereto respectively and of any other insurances, and must at all times at his own expense produce and give to the company all such books, vouchers, and other evidence as may be reasonably required by or on behalf of the company, together with a declaration on oath or in other legal form of the truth of the claim and of any matters connected therewith, and if the insurance is subject to average, the insured must within the aforesaid 15 days, or such further time as the company may in writing allow in that behalf, deliver to the company an account of all the property insured, together with the estimated value thereof at the breaking out of the fire. No amount shall be payable under this policy unless the terms of this condition have been complied with."

7. The plaintiff did not within the said 15 days deliver a claim in writing as provided by the said clause, but on or about the 7th day of November, 1906, delivered to the defendant a claim in writing, together with a solemn declaration, in both and each of which he alleged the amount of the loss or damage to be the sum of £580 1s. 8d., and further, did not, when reasonably required thereto by the defendant, produce true books and vouchers as evidence of the truth of the said claim, but produced books containing false and improper entries. The said claim did not contain a true account or an account as particular as was reasonably practicable of the articles or items of property damaged or destroyed.

8. Thereafter, on or about the 11th day of November, 1906, the plaintiff withdrew the said claim, and on or about the 23rd day of November, 1906, delivered to the defendant a further claim in writing, and a further solemn declaration, in both and each of which he alleged the amount of the said loss or damage to be the sum of £955 7s. 11d., and produced books prepared after the happening of the said fire as evidence of the truth of the said claim. The said claim did not contain a true account or as particular an account as was reasonably practicable of the articles or items of property damaged or destroyed.

9. By reason of the matters set forth in paragraphs 7 and 8 hereof, the plaintiff has committed a breach of the conditions of the said policy and in terms of the said clause 10, no amount is payable under said policy.

10. By clause 12 of the said conditions, it is inter alia provided that if the claim be in any respect fraudulent, or if any false declaration be made or used in support thereof, or if any fraudulent means or devices are used by the insured (meaning the plaintiff), or anyone acting on his behalf, to obtain any benefit under the said policy, all benefit under the said policy shall be forfeited.

11. The said claims were false and fraudulent claims, and the said solemn declarations, or one or other of them, were false declarations, and were made and used in support thereof, and the books produced were fraudulent means or devices used by the plaintiff to obtain benefit under the said policy, and the plaintiff has by reason thereof forfeited all benefit under the said policy.

Wherefor the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The replication was as follows: (1) As to paragraph 2 of the plea, the plaintiff denies that the building therein referred to was his property, and says that only his stock of goods in the said building was insured by him. (2) With reference to paragraphs 3, 4, 5, of the plea, plaintiff says that the proposal form therein referred to was filled in by the defendant's agent. Plaintiff further says he gave no information of any sort concerning the said building to the said agent, but that the said agent assured him that the description of the said building which had been previously given in the proposal form filled in by the owner thereof for the purpose of effecting an insurance policy thereon with the defendant, and on which the defendant granted a policy of insurance was the same description as that which was filled in on plaintiff's proposal form, and that plaintiff signed the said proposal form on receiving the said assurance from the defendant's agent. Plaintiff explicitly denies the allegation that there was any misdescription, misrepresentation, or omission of any material facts on his part in the filling in the said proposal form. (3) As to paragraphs 6, 7, and 8 of the plea, plaintiff says that within the time required by clause 10 of the conditions of the policy, he duly submitted to the defendant a statement showing the loss by the said fire amounted to £580 1s. 8d., and that the said statement was merely a rough statement, as plaintiff considered that it was sufficient to show that his loss was over £500, that being the limit covered by the insurance policy. Thereafter, at his request, the plaintiff caused a detailed statement of his loss to be framed by an accountant, which showed that plaintiff's actual loss by the said fire amounting to £580 1s. 11d. The plaintiff expressly denies that he at any time withdrew his first statement of loss, or that he has committed any breach of the conditions of the said policy, or that the claims were false or fraudulent, or that the declarations were false declarations. (4) Save as above, and save for admissions in the plea contained, plaintiff denies all and singular the allegations of fact, and conclusions of law in the pleas contained, joins issue thereon, and again prays for judgment as before with costs.

Dr. Greer for plaintiff. Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Lewis) for defendant.

Abraham Abrahamson, the plaintiff, stated that his shop originally belonged to his brother. In 1905, witness purchased the stock of the shop from his brother. There was about £600 worth of stock in the shop. Roughly, he paid £330 for the stock. After he had met Mr. Malan in the train, the latter, who was an insurance agent, came to see the shop. Witness admitted that he had no knowledge of the building, and Malan said he would find everything out through the company. Subsequently he received the policy of insurance, and in October, 1906, a fire broke out in the premises. Witness was not at home when the fire broke out. When he returned, he wired to the police and the company. Mr. Hay, of the Guardian Company, came and inspected the premises, and the books, which were locked up in the safe. The books were subsequently handed over to the company. Mr. Walker, an accountant, made up the value of the destroyed stock at £582. The books put in showed a true and full account of all his dealings in the shop, and they showed the stock to be worth over £900.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Prior to his taking over the business, he was a clerk in the employ of his brother. He did not keep his brother's books. The bookkeeper, who kept witness's books up to September, was at present in Laingsburg. On the 1st, 2nd, or 4th October, his books were last made up by Williams, his brother's bookkeeper. His brother Simon Abrahamson was tried at the Paarl for fraudulent insolvency. There was £4 odd in the bank at the time of the fire. He did not know that almost from the start of the business he was paying out more money than he was receiving.

Jacob J. Hammond, who owned the shop at Brackenfeldt Siding, stated it was insured with the Guardian Company, and the outside of the walls was of corrugated iron and the inside of bricks, and the roof was also of corrugated iron. He gave the description of the property to the insurance people, who had paid him in full for the loss by fire. When he insured the building he had to give the name of the tenant.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The property was described in a document as iron-built, with brick lined under and iron roof.

Dr. Greer closed his case.

William Hay, fire loss assessor, who acted for the Guardian Assurance Company, stated he had about four years' experience in this business. He saw the premises on the 12th October, and went out again on the following Saturday. On the first occasion he did not see the books, but they were produced to him from the safe on the second visit. The books were represented to him as the books of the business. When witness met plaintiff in the Guardian Office he explained to him that the correct description of the building did not tally with the proposal form. It was on the 7th of November that he received an account of the loss. Witness went into the books very carefully, and he did not consider them to have been properly kept. The plaintiff's cash account showed that he was paying out more than he received. To begin with, the plaintiff was buying far more goods than he was selling. The cash sales towards the date of the fire were falling off, and the purchases were increasing. From the books witness was under the impression that the plaintiff did not enter up the cash sales properly, or he parted with the goods.

[De Villiers, C.J.: From the ruins could you judge whether there was a large stock at the time of the fire?—Whatever stock there was was entirely destroyed.]

Proceeding, the witness, in reply to Mr. Upington, said the books had apparently not been kept up from day to day. They were all written up at the one time. According to the books the plaintiff was paying when he had no money to pay. From a set of admittedly new books, the loss was brought up to £955. Witness found it impossible to frame anything like an accurate account of the loss from the books supplied. Some of the entries he thought were not bona fide. The plaintiff claimed £60 as owing to him, but there was not a single entry of outstanding debts in the books. In one particular instance there were erasures which gave the entries the appearance of not being bona fide. The books were not properly written up.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: He did not in writing tell the plaintiff on the 12th October to send in his claim within fifteen days, although he told him verbally. Witness saw the books taken out of the safe, but thought the safe had been opened before that. He would qualify his statement by saying that the business did not increase in proportion to the increase of goods which the plaintiff bought.

John M. F. Leibbrandt, clerk in charge of the loss department of the Guardian Company, stated the construction of a building was most material in estimating the risk. There was about 30 per cent. difference in the case of Hammond and the plaintiff.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: He did not know what passed between the plaintiff and the company's agent. He was not aware that the agent said he would take the description of the building from the description already actually insured.

David S. Malan, the agent of the Guardian Company, denied that he met the plaintiff in a train and spoke of the advantages of insurance. Witness was told to see the plaintiff by a Mr. Solomon, a friend of the plaintiff. He did not say to the plaintiff that as long as the description was the same as that of Mr. Hammond the insurance would be all right. He did not know at the time whether Mr. Hammond insured the building or not.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: The plaintiff apparently knew the building was insured with the Guardian. The description of the building was filled in at the time witness filled in the proposal form.

Counsel having been heard for the plaintiff,

De Villiers, C.J.: It is not necessary to hear Mr. Upington for the defendant. The policy which was issued in favour of the plaintiff and on which he now sues, lays stress throughout upon the condition that the insured keep proper books and accounts. That appears in the body of the policy. Then there is the tenth condition, which prescribes what shall be done by the insured on the happening of loss or damage. And the condition provides that the insurer forthwith give notice in writing thereof to the company. Well, I take it he has done that. But it goes on: "He must, within 15 days after the loss or damage, or such further time as the company may, in writing, allow in that behalf, deliver to the company a claim in writing for the loss and damage." So far, if the books had been proper books, I should be inclined to think that the time within which the account was delivered was a reasonable one, and that there has been really no ground under all the circumstances of the case for forfeiting the right of the policy. But this condition goes on as follows: "He shall deliver to the company a claim in writing for the loss and damage, containing as particular an account as is reasonably practicable of all the articles or items of property damaged or destroyed, and of the amount of the loss or damage thereto respectively, and of any other insurances, and must at all times at his own expense produce and give to the company all such books, vouchers, and other evidence as may be reasonably required by or on behalf of the company." Now, I take it that the company may reasonably require that the books which are produced in support of the claim shall be proper books, shall be such books that it is possible for the company to ascertain from them what the actual amount of stock was in the shop at the time of the fire. In my opinion the books which he did produce were not of such a nature. It would be impossible for any accountant, however clever he may be, to frame a proper account, because there are grave inaccuracies in these books. They are kept in a slovenly manner. There are erasures which cannot be properly explained. Some of the entries cannot be explained, and although as far as the stock actually purchased is concerned there is not much discrepancy between the accounts furnished by the merchants and the books, yet that does not settle the matter, because if once it is clear that the books are untrustworthy in other respects, then it is impossible to know whether the daily sales have been properly entered, and that is of the utmost importance. It is not enough to prove that the goods were purchased from the merchants, because if goods were sold and delivered out of the shop, of which there are no entries, then there is no means of ascertaining what the stock was at the time the fire took place. And that is where the real difficulty comes in. Upon the books which were furnished to them it would have been impossible for them to accept the statement that the books are correct, and that all the sales have been properly entered. The books should clearly show what stock went out of the shop. In the present case I consider that the stock appearing in the books had entered the shop, but it is by no means clear that a very considerable quantity of stock had not gone out of the shop, which the books do not show. I think the company is acting quite within its rights under the policy to require that better books than these which were produced to the company should be forthcoming. It is said that this is a small country business, but even in a small country business the books may be properly kept. At all events the insured had full notice in the terms of the policy that he was to keep proper books. It was an essential portion of the contract in the body of the policy, and the tenth condition authorised the company to require among the proofs of the correctness proper books. For these reasons I consider it is not necessary to make further reference to the misrepresentations. I am inclined to think that the plaintiff himself did not misrepresent the nature of the building in which his business was carried on. The second ground, in my opinion, is clearly made out. The books are wholly improper books, and not such books as the company was bound to accept. The judgment of the Court must be for the defendant, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

LOUW V. ISMAIL. { 1907.
Oct. 29th.

Principal and agent—Proofs of agency.

This was an action to recover the sum of £148 12s. 4d., being the purchase price of certain sheep.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff, Jacob Petrus Louw, is a stock dealer, carrying on business at Mowbray.

2. The defendant, Mahomet Ismail, alias Hadje Camrodien, is a butcher, carrying on business at 118, Chiappini-street, Cape Town.

3. On divers dates during the months of February, March, and April, 1907, the said plaintiff sold to defendant, and defendant purchased from the plaintiff, a number of sheep at various prices, for the sum of £273 12s. 3d., particulars whereof will appear in a copy of the detailed account hereunto annexed, and to which the said plaintiff craves leave to refer.

4. On divers dates between the 5th day of March, 1907, and the 18th day of April, 1907, the said defendant reduced his liability by various cash payments, and the return of two goats by the sum of £124 19s. 10d., particulars of which will appear in a copy of the detailed account hereunto annexed, and to which the said plaintiff craves leave to refer, leaving a balance due from the said defendant to the said plaintiff of £148 12s. 4d.

5. Although repeatedly requested to pay the said sum of £148 12s. 4d., the said defendant neglects and refuses to do so.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays: (1) For judgment in the sum of £148 12s. 4d.; (2) interest a tempore morae; (3) costs of suit; (4) alternate relief.

The defendant's plea was as follows: 1. Paragraph 1 of the declaration is admitted.

2. As to paragraph 2, defendant admits that his name is Hadje Camrodien, but denies the remainder of the said paragraph. He says that he is not, and never has been known by the name of Mahomet Ismail, and that he has not carried on business at 118, Chiappini-street, save as hereinafter set forth.

3. Paragraphs 3, 4, and 5 of the declaration are denied as specifically as if every allegation in the said paragraphs was set out herein and defendant specially denies being indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £148 12s. 4d. sterling, or any other sum.

4. In reference to the said paragraphs 3, 4, and 5, defendant says that during the months of February, March, and April, 1907, and thereafter, he acted as manager of a butcher's business, carried on at 118, Chiappini-street, for and on behalf of one Mahomet Ismail. In his said capacity as agent for the said Ismail, defendant admits that he made certain purchases from the plaintiff and also made certain payments, as set forth in the declaration, save that he says that plaintiff ought to have given a further credit of £9 18s. 9d., and that the sum actually due by the said Ismail to plaintiff is £138 13s. 7d.

5. Defendant further states that at the time of the said transaction plaintiff was fully aware, and specially informed by the defendant, of the fact that defendant was acting merely as manager or agent for the said Ismail, and that Ismail was the principal and liable to plaintiff on the said transactions. In the premises defendant denies any liability to the plaintiff.

Wherefore the defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiff's replication was as follows:

1. The plaintiff joins issue with the defendant on paragraphs 2 and 3 of his plea herein, admissions excepted.

2. As to paragraph 4 of the plea herein the plaintiff denies that the said defendant acted as manager of the said butcher's business carried on at 118, Chiappini-street for and on behalf of one Mahomet Ismail, and says that he acted as principal and made the payments referred to in the declaration as such. He denies that the defendant did make a further payment of £9 18s. 9d., as alleged.

3. The plaintiff denies the allegations contained in paragraph 5 of the plea herein. The defendant did not inform the plaintiff that he was acting as manager or agent of one Ismail, and that Ismail was the principal, but held himself out to be the principal.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays for judgment as before.

The defendant's rejoinder was general.

Mr. Wallach was for the plaintiff; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the defendant.

Plaintiff gave evidence bearing out the allegations in the declaration and replication. He described in detail the nature of the transactions with defendant.

In cross-examination, the witness denied that he went to the defendant and asked for his custom, and that defendant said he was manager for Mahomet Ismail who was away from the country. He denied that defendant gave him any promissory notes.

Buchanan, J., pointed out that the witness had given defendant credit for two promissory notes in his account.

Witness repeated that so far as he could remember he had got no promissory notes from defendant. In further cross-examination the witness denied that he told defendant he had sufficient authority to sign promissory notes for his master.

[Buchanan, J.: There must be some mistake, Mr. Louw, or you would not have put down two promissory notes on your account.]

Plaintiff still said he had no promissory notes.

[Buchanan, J.: You have evidently forgotten something?]

Plaintiff: I expect it's that, my lord. Further cross-examined, plaintiff said that defendant did not pay off two notes, and he (plaintiff) did not tell defendant when he paid one of these that he had forgotten to bring the note.

Re-examined: The accounts were written by his bookkeeper, Mr. Stevens, on witness's instructions.

Edward McGregor, speculator, said he had been dealing with defendant since February last, and had always known him as Mahomet Ishmail. He owed witness about £27. Until certain Police Court proceedings (defendant was charged with theft and acquitted), he did not know that defendant was not Ishmail. He had always looked upon defendant as a principal.

In cross-examination, witness admitted having received a promissory note signed "H. Camrodien, for Mohamed Ishmail." Witness did not see this note. It was given to his brother. At the end of April, he signed a receipt in the following terms: "Received from H. Camrodien the sum of 5s. 3d., being trespass money on 125 sheep."

Harry Hogarth, clerk in the employ of the C.G.R., produced certain railway receipts signed by the defendant in February. One was signed "Mahomed Ishmail," and another "for Mahomed Ishmail."

A. F. du Toit, plaintiff's attorney, said that defendant had admitted the debt to him. Witness knew defendant as Camrodien.

The defendant was called. He said his name was Hadje Camrodien. Mahomet Ishmail was in India. He left this country last February, previous to which witness was employed as his manager in a shop in Chiappini-street. Ishmail left powers of attorney with two men. In February, Louw came to witness and asked him if he wanted sheep. Witness replied in the affirmative, but said he was not the master. He said that if Louw would trust him, he would take the sheep. Louw said he would trust witness, and that witness could sign. He told Louw his name. He gave Louw two promissory notes, and both of these he afterwards paid, but defendant brought him only one of these notes back, saying he had forgotten the other.

In cross-examination, the witness said he had no power of attorney from Ishmail. He had no authority to sign for Ishmail. As a manager, he had to do the master's work. The two men who had the powers of attorney were witness's "bosses."

Cross-examined: Witness had been losing a lot of money in the business. It was Ishmail's money. He had not sent Ishmail any remittances. He had no money belonging to Ishmail. The latter left a little capital.

Charles Geddes, agent-at-law, said he had always known defendant as Camrodien. He witnessed a power of attorney signed by Ishmail in favour of a man other than the present defendant.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, J.: This is an action for the payment of money due upon the sale of certain sheep. The plaintiff, Mr. Louw, is a stock dealer, and the defendant is one Camrodien, to whom the summons and declaration give the alias of Mahomet Ishmail. As far as the evidence goes the defendant has no alias of Mahomet Ishmail, and is not Mahomet Ishmail, but Hadje Camrodien. But the defendant Camrodien is the only person who dealt with Louw. Ishmail has been known in Cape Town for a number of years and carried on business here. Camrodien has also been in Cape Town for a number of years, and has also carried on business here, but both were unknown to the plaintiff before the transactions in suit. Before the first meeting of the plaintiff and defendant it is said that Ishmail had left for India. Camrodien, the present defendant, says that after Ishmail left, he (Camrodien) carried on Ishmail's business. The plaintiff, however, was altogether ignorant of the existence of Ishmail. Camrodien was the only person who saw Louw, and who had any dealings with him, and the question is whether in these dealings which took place between Louw and Camrodien credit was given by Louw to Camrodien or whether it was given to the unknown Ishmail. If I had solely to rely on the evidence of Louw I should have considerable difficulty in finding in his favour, because his evidence is not correct on one important matter. He says Camrodien came to him and represented himself as Ishmail. On that day Camrodien gave Louw two promissory notes, each for half the purchase price of the first transaction between them. Louw denied altogether that he ever received any such promissory notes, but this denial cannot be sustained in face of his own documents and in face of the one promissory note produced. Now this statement of his—I won't say it was made falsely—is an incorrect statement, and the fact that he denied having received these promissory notes throws discredit on the whole of his evidence. But when we come to look at the other circumstances proved, there is corroboration on the main issue in support of Louw's statement as to the person to whom he gave credit. It appears that when Ishmail left the country he gave his power of attorney to two other persons, not to Camrodien at all. After Ishmail left, Camrodien carried on the butcher's business in the same premises which Ishmail previously occupied. He does not produce any books of that business, nor does he show that he accounted to Ishmail for any of the proceeds of that business, and the effect of his own evidence given to-day seems to me to imply—though he says he did mention Ishmail's name to the persons from whom he bought sheep—that he himself was the purchaser of the stock, and that the persons who sold the sheep to him were justified in considering that they were dealing with him and not with anyone else. He was asked if he would buy the sheep, and he said, "Yes, I will buy the sheep." Louw said if he would sign for them he would let him have the sheep. Now he did sign for them, and signed, it is true, in his own name for Mahomet Ishmail, but as he bought the sheep, as he carried on the business in the absence of the other man, as it does not appear that he in any way accounted for the business to the other man, whose power of attorney he does not hold, and as he from time to time paid amounts off this account to Louw, and especially as he answered Louw's telegram and settled with Louw thereon, I think Louw may be justified in saying he looked to Camrodien and Camrodien only, as the person responsible to him. I think justice would be done in this case by giving judgment for the plaintiff as prayed with costs.

WILKINSON V. ESTATE WILKINSON.

Will (holograph) — Privilege — Illegitimate issue.

The privilege granted to a holograph will, whereby a father distributes the corpus of his estate among his children, is not to be extended to provisions in favour of natural children.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiff was the natural son of the late John George Wilkinson, of Pontefract, Yorkshire, England. In 1886 (or 1896) the late J. G. Wilkinson came to this Colony for the benefit of his health, but never abandoned his domicile of origin. On January 1, 1902, he executed a will in accordance with the laws of England, where the testator was domiciled at the time. Paragraph 6 read: "Should the Court hold that for any reason whatever, the said will cannot be upheld as a valid English will, but not otherwise, the plaintiff says that it is valid by the Common Law of this Colony as a privileged will so far as the bequests to the plaintiff are concerned," and paragraph 7 was to the effect that defendants (the Master of the High Court of Griqualand West and the executor dative in the estate of the late J. G. Wilkinson) wrongfully and unlawfully refused to accept the will, wherefore plaintiff claimed an order directing the Master of the High Court of Griqualand West to accept the will and the executor dative to administer the estate in terms of the will.

To this declaration, the defendant excepted on the ground that both claims were invalid and bad in law, and then pleaded over.

Mr. Howes appeared for the excipient (defendant in the action); Mr. Rowson for the respondent (plaintiff in the action).

Mr. Rowson applied for an amendment of the summons, which was granted by the Court, and the exceptions based on divergence between the summons and the declaration were abandoned by the exceptor.

Mr. Howes: Any will made in this country by a British subject must be executed in terms of Ordinance 16 of 1845. See Dwyer v. Flynn's Executors (3 Searle, 16), and Re Lloyd's Estate (12 S.C.R., 117).

[Buchanan, J.: The Ordinance referred only to wills which had previously been required to be witnessed by 7 witnesses.]

Dicey Conflict of Laws (p. 687, Edit. of 1896). The will must follow the law of the domicile. Even should the will be shown to be good as an English will, it must be proved in England; it cannot be proved here.

[Buchanan, J.: I think that English wills may ex comitate be admitted to proof in this Colony. We take cognisance of English law.]

Then see Dwyer v. O'Flinn's Executor (3 Searle, 16).

[Buchanan, J.: There the testator was domiciled in this Colony; and if the learned Judge went beyond deciding on the mere facts of the case, what he said were mere obiter dicta.]

See In Re Robinson (1 Rosc., 411). Van Leeuwen Roman Dutch Law (Kotzé's Translation), Vol. 1, p. 323. Voet (1-4-2, secs. 11, 13, 16, and Schorer's note on Grotius (B. 2, C. 17). As to my second point (viz., that the declaration is bad, inasmuch as it alleges that an illegitimate child may take under a privileged will: See Maasdorp's Institutes of S. African Law, Vol. 1, p. 125. Voet (28-1-16). Burge's Colonial Law, Vol. 4, p. 398.

Counsel further cited Re Pillans (3 C.T.R., 278). The exception had to be raised otherwise the defendant would not have been entitled to his costs if successful in the action, vide Alexander v. Armstrong (Buch. 1879, p. 233), and on the ground of variance Cabrita v. Du Preez (10 C.T.R., 429).

Mr. Rowson argued that if the testator's domicile was English he not only might, but must make his will according to the provisions of English Law (Phillimore, Vol. 4, p. 628). As to the question of the rights of natural children under a privileged will he cited Van Leeuwen (Cris. For. (Book 3, part 1, ch. 2, par. 21, page 20, Schreiner's trans.). Christinaeus, Vol. 1, Decis 117, par. 7 to 10. Carpovius, Definitiones Forenses (pars. 3. Constit. 4, Def. 24). Gronowegen's note on Grotius (Bk. 2, C. 17), Codex (5-29-4).

With respect to Voet (28-1-16) he admitted that that authority was against him, but denied that the authorities cited by the said author bore out his contention. To begin with, the Court had never bound itself to follow Voet, and had in many cases departed from his doctrine, and notably in this very section in which he upholds bequests to a wife or a stranger contained in a holograph will "if they be written in the handwriting of the testator and have been recited or named before two witnesses."

[Buchanan, J.: That means only that if in such case the will were attested by two witnesses, certain other formalities might be dispensed with.]

Voet admits that a holograph will made by a mother in favour of her illegitimate child is privileged, then why not that made by a father? The only difference is that the mother is easily ascertained, but supposing that the father can also be certainly ascertained, why should he not enjoy the same privilege?

Then to go into his authorities, he states that by the term "liberi" we must always understand legitimate children. The first authority he cites is Digest (27-1-2-3), which clearly refers only to a plea which might be urged against having a tutorship imposed upon a man. A man might be excused if he had already undertaken several tutorships, but that that plea might avail him all these tutorships must have been in respect of minors who were of legitimate birth.

His next authority is from Digest (1-6-6), in which it is said that he is a son who is born of a husband and his wife." But what is the compiler talking about? He is speaking of the patria potestas, and unquestionably natural children did not fall under the patria potestas.

Then to take the general principle with which he begins: "Privilegia strictam recipiunt interpretationem." That principle on which the whole of his doctrine is founded is diametrically opposed to Digest (50-17-20), (50-17-56), (50-17-183), and to Canon Law (Decret. Greg. 15, t39, Cap. 16), "Beneficia principum sunt interpretanda largissime." A man who has injured a child by causing it to be brought into the world under the stigma of illegitimacy should be assisted as far as the law can possibly permit in his endeavours to make reparation to that child for the injury done.

Buchanan, J.: Exception is taken to the declaration filed by the plaintiff claiming that a certain will made by the late Mr. Wilkinson shall be held to be a valid will. This will was not executed in accordance with the requirements of the law of this country, but the first claim on the declaration is that Mr. Wilkinson, who was born in England, and had only come out to the Colony for the benefit of his health, had never abandoned his domicile of origin, and had executed this will with all the formalities necessary by the law of his domicile, namely, the English law. That is admitted on both sides, but it is contended that as the will was executed in this country, it must be executed according to the law of this country. The second claim is founded upon an allegation that even if the will cannot be upheld as valid under English law, it is valid by the common law of this colony, in that it is a privileged will. The will is not executed in compliance with the requirements of the Will Ordinance No. 15 of 1845, but it is a holograph will, that is, it is written by the testator himself, and signed by the testator in the presence of two witnesses, and it institutes the plaintiff, who is a natural son of the testator, as beneficiary under that will. On this part of the declaration learned counsel have quoted authorities so very fully that, although the question of privilege wills is not a matter which the Court is frequently called upon to decide, I have no hesitation in stating now my opinion that according to the law of this colony the privilege that is given to the testator by holograph will to institute his children as his heirs does not extend to illegitimate children. The older authorities, such as Carpovius and Christinaeus, certainly are somewhat favourable to the plaintiff's contention, but Voet, who is a later authority, in Book 28, chapter 1, section 16, is clearly of opinion that this privilege does not extend beyond legitimate children. In the several cases in which holograph wills have come before the Court, it has, as far as I can call to mind, always been clearly recognised that the institution of children as heirs by a holograph is a privilege, and in the language of Voet, this privilege is not to be extended, except to those to whom the law clearly gives it. Therefore, my opinion upon the second part of the declaration is that this will cannot be upheld as valid by the common law of this colony as being a privileged holographed will in favour of the plaintiff. To both causes of action set forth in the declaration, the exception is taken that the claims are invalid and bad in law. Now, in my opinion, the second claim is certainly not founded on a good cause of action, and is therefore invalid, and the plaintiff cannot, in my opinion, sustain any action on that ground. As to the other allegations in the declaration, they may or may not at the hearing be found to be sustained by evidence. But taking the allegations, for the purposes of the argument on exception, as correct, here we have a will of a person domiciled in England, and only temporarily resident in this colony, executed with all the formalities required by the home of the domicile. Such a will prima facie is a good will so far, at any rate, as the movable property is concerned, so that the exception to the first ground of action set forth in the declaration cannot now be sustained. The exception as to the claims being bad in law will not, therefore, be sustained as to the first claim, but it will be sustained as to the other claim, and consequently all the paragraphs of the declaration which do not set forth any cause of action must be struck out. The form of the order will be in favour of the exception for expunging clauses 2, 6, and 7 of the declaration. As to the questions of fact raised, the plaintiff may or may not have a good cause of action. That depends upon the evidence which may be led at the hearing. As this is a question of considerable importance, and as it arises out of the will of the testator, I think the question of costs should stand over until we can determine whether the will is valid or not, on the facts. Costs will therefore abide the result.

MATRIMONIAL CASES.

HUMPHREYS V. HUMPHREYS.

This was an action brought by Harold Francis Humphreys, a farmer and dentist, in the division of Uitenhage, against his wife, Alice Jane Humphreys, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with custody of the children and a declaration that defendant had forfeited the benefits of the marriage.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl was for plaintiff; defendant, who was sued by edictal citation, did not appear.

Mr. Van Zyl produced an affidavit of service of citation upon defendant, who was stated to be residing in London, England.

Plaintiff said that he was married to defendant at Plaistow, Bromley, Kent, in 1890. At the beginning of 1900 witness came out to serve in the Imperial Yeomanry. In November of that year he settled down in Oudtshoorn to manage a dental practice. In January, 1901, he asked his wife to come out to join him, but she refused. There were three children of the marriage, aged 16, 14, and 13 years. His wife in her letter said she thought they were better apart, and that they had not been happy when they were living together. Witness was now carrying on a dental practice and farming in the division of Uitenhage. About 12 months ago he again wrote to his wife, asking her to come out, but she refused. He had tried other methods, but she would not join him. He did not ask for costs against defendant.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to plaintiff on or before the 31st December, failing which, to show cause on the 12th January why an order should not be granted in terms of the declaration.

CARR V. CARR

This was an action brought by Sara Elizabeth Hendrick Carr, of the Paarl, against her husband, Carl Louis Carr, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with custody of the two children of the marriage.

Mr. Marais was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

W. T. Birch, of the Colonial Secretary's Office, gave formal proof of registration of the marriage.

Plaintiff said that after the marriage her husband treated her badly. In September, 1906, he deserted her, and had since contributed nothing towards the support of witness and the children. She did not know where her husband's present whereabouts were. She had been informed that he had gone to German South-west Africa.

Mr. Marais said that service had been made upon defendant by registered letter and publication in the "Cape Times" Weekly edition.

Ordered that defendant restore conjugal rights on or before the 18th December, failing which show cause on the 12th January why a decree of divorce should not be granted in terms of declaration, service as directed in regard to citation, and by registered letter to the address in German South-West Africa given by defendant in his letter.

HOFFMAN V. HOFFMAN.

This was an action brought by Johanna Maria Hoffman, of Cape Town, against her husband, Andrew Francois Hoffman, of the Paarl, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with custody of the child of the marriage.

Mr. Marais was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Plaintiff said that while she was residing with her husband at the Paarl, he drove her out of the house on the 19th June, 1904. Defendant was addicted to drink. He tried to take her life with a razor while he was under the influence of liquor. Her brother interfered and took away the razor. Defendant had not since supported her. Witness had written to his father, but had received no reply. Defendant had refused to do anything towards providing her with a home or maintenance.

Ordered that defendant restore conjugal rights on or before the 27th November, failing which show cause on the 12th December why a decree of divorce should not be granted in terms of the declaration.

REHABILITATION.

{ 1907.
Oct. 29th.

Mr. Toms applied for the release of the private estate of Joseph Powell Taylor from sequestration. It appeared that after the estate had been compulsorily sequestrated, a second meeting of creditors was held, but no debts were proved, and no trustee was appointed.

Maasdorp, J., said that the applicant asked for rehabilitation in his application, and now counsel, finding that that could not be given, asked for a release. The matter must be brought before the Court in proper form. No order would be made upon the present application, but leave would be given to apply again.

At a later stage the matter was again mentioned, and Mr. Justice Maasdorp granted an order for the release of the estate from sequestration.

BOTHA V. MILFORD AND ANOTHER.

Will—Adiation—Error—Tempus deliberandi.

This was an application brought by Christoffel Jacobus Botha, of Adelaide, for leave to make his election in reference to the mutual will executed by his late wife and himself, either to abide by the terms of the will or renounce the said will, leaving his half-share of the joint estate free and unencumbered, and leaving the other half to go to the legatees appointed by the will.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the will contained the following clause: "We give and bequeath to our said adopted children the remainder of our movable property belonging to our joint estate, which shall be left at the death of the survivor of us, such movable property to be divided between them equally, share and share alike."

Applicant's case was that he had been under a misapprehension as to the meaning of this clause, and he now desired a month's time within which to make his election.

Mr. McGregor, K.C., was for applicant; Mr. Close was for respondents.

Mr. McGregor cited in re Gous (23 S.C., 72), Klipper v. Smit (9 Juta, 167), in re Jordaan (24 S.C., 84), Brown v. Rickard (2 Juta, 314), in re Meintjes, and Watson v. Burchell (9 Juta, 2). He submitted that the applicant had put a wrong construction upon the will, in that he had thought he had the right to alienate the joint estate in his hands, and that the children should only get the residue. Applicant should now be allowed to make his election either to adiate or take his own half of the estate, unaffected by the provisions of the will.

Mr. Close submitted that the applicant had not adopted the proper procedure to have the issues decided which were raised in this case.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the applicant asks that time should be allowed him to make his election whether he will adiate under the joint will made by himself and his wife, or rather, to put it more correctly, whether he shall adiate under his wife's will or renounce his rights under that will, and merely take his share of the joint estate. Now, it appears that already in 1904 he actually did adiate under the joint will, and he has since then enjoyed the benefit of certain movable and immovable property. He now asks for relief, because he alleges that he adiated under the will under a wrong construction of its purport, and authority has been quoted which shows that the Court has given relief under similar circumstances. The misapprehension which he relies upon is the following: It appears that the will, after making certain other dispositions, proceeds to say: "We give and bequeath to our said adopted children the remainder of our movable property belonging to our joint estate, which shall be left at the death of the survivor of us, such movable property to be divided between them equally, share and share alike." The applicant states that the construction he had put upon this will was that he would have free disposal of the movable property during his lifetime, and that it was only such property as may be left at his death which should be divided amongst the children. In making out his account, he mentions the movable property, consisting of large sums of money, and states that he is to remain in undisturbed possession thereof till his death, when the residue thereof, in terms of the will, goes to the adopted children. Now, the terms used by him in that statement follow very nearly the terms of the will, and it is quite possible that the applicant may have been under the impression that he would have the free disposal of the property during his lifetime. Now, in the form in which this application comes before the Court, the Court cannot now go into the construction of the will. It is quite possible that the applicant may have been right in what he now considers a misapprehension, and in that case he would not ask for relief, or, on the other hand, he may have been wrong, and there may still be certain circumstances under which the Court may refuse to give him relief. It does not follow that, merely because he has adiated under a mistake, in all such cases the Court will grant relief. It is a matter which will have to be gone into and the facts will have to be considered by the Court. These facts are to some extent in dispute. The respondent mentions certain circumstances which may go to prove that applicant never laboured under any wrong impression at all of the construction of the will, that whatever the construction may be, it is a construction of which he was fully aware, and that he acted with full knowledge of his rights. All these matters will have to be decided by the Court upon issues properly raised, and the authorities which have been cited are in respect of actions brought in the ordinary form for the purpose of having these matters determined. No order will be made, and the applicant can take such steps as he may be advised, the question of costs to stand over. If declaration be not served by the end of December, applicant will have to pay costs. Notice of motion will stand for summons.

MAGOR AND FOGARTY AND ANOTHER V.
MULVIHAL AND SON AND OTHERS.

Magistrate's Court judgment —
Supreme Court — Attachment.

The Supreme Court has power to order the movable property of a debtor against whom judgment has been obtained in a Magistrate's Court to be attached when such property is in the hands of a third person.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why they should not be ordered to restore certain moneys to the second respondent (Mr. J. M. P. Muirhead), and why a certain order granted by Mr. Justice Hopley should not be set aside.

The notice of motion called upon respondents to restore forthwith to Mr. Muirhead a sum of £40 by reason of the wrongful payment thereof to Mr. A. J. MacCallum (respondents' attorney), and to show cause why an order granted by Mr. Justice Hopley should not be set aside.

The order made by Mr. Justice Hopley declared the sum of £40 in the hands of Mr. Muirhead, belonging to the firm of Magor and Fogarty, executable for the amount of the judgments and costs obtained by the petitioners (now respondents) against the firm of Magor and Fogarty in the Court of the R.M., Cape Town, on the 30th September, and authorised the Messenger of the said Court to attach the said money and pay over the same to petitioners in discharge of the judgment and costs, including costs of the present application.

Applicants now asked that this order be set aside on the following grounds: (1) That the judgment of the R.M. upon which the same was founded was never made a judgment of the Supreme Court; and (2) that the applicants (Magor and Fogarty) had since given notice of their intention to surrender their partnership estate as insolvent.

Mr. Bisset was for applicants; Mr. Benjamin, K.C. (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan), was for respondents.

Affidavits were read.

Mr. Bisset quoted from Sir Henry Juta's "Magistrates' Courts" (p. 401), and cited De Vos v. Voerse (3 Juta, 79), Deercourt and Faulds v. Urie (14 E.D.C., 86), Silberbauer v. Day (2 C.T.R., 66), Blake v. Rous (3 C.T.R., 110), Becker v. Duarte (5 H.C., 192), Ross v. Chetty (11 C.T.R., 500), and Law Society v. Donner (22 S.C., 108).

Mr. Benjamin cited Fassati v. Kleynhaus (6 C.T.R., 140), and mentioned an application heard in Chambers in Empire Steam Laundries v. Fowler.

Maasdorp, J.: It would seem that the respondents in this case had obtained judgment against Magor and Fogarty, and it was found that Mr. Muirhead had in hand a sum of money belonging to the firm. Thereupon application was made on behalf of the judgment creditors to have this money declared executable in satisfaction of the judgment. By virtue of an order granted by the Court upon that application, the money came into the possession of the attorney for the judgment creditors. Application is now made to have the order for the attachment of the moneys set aside upon the ground that no judgment had been obtained in the Superior Court upon which execution could issue. Now, it would appear that orders are frequently given by the Supreme Court in aid of Magistrate Court judgments in order to obtain possession of movables which, being in possession of third parties, would not be available for execution, and these orders are given without requiring that any judgment should be taken out in the Supreme Court. Authorities have been cited from which it would appear that execution in respect of a Magistrate's Court judgment would not be issued by the Superior Court as against immovable property, but then the distinction made between movable and immovable property is quite obvious, because under the Rules of Court no immovable property is executable at all in respect of a Magistrate's Court judgment, and consequently it is necessary that there should be a judgment in respect of which it may be executable, but all movables are executable in satisfaction of a Magistrate's Court judgment, and it is only where there is some difficulty in the way of obtaining possession

COOKE V. VANGER.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Montagu.

In the court below, the plaintiff sued for the delivery of nine goats, or their value, £9. Plaintiff alleged that a contract of barter or exchange was entered into between plaintiff and defendant, the terms of which were that the plaintiff had to give a gelding, and to receive in exchange a mare and nine goats, and that the nine goats had to be selected from a certain flock of 25 running on a farm, and were to be of the value of £1 each. The gelding was delivered to the defendant, who duly delivered the mare to the plaintiff, but plaintiff said that when he selected nine goats from the flock, they were claimed and recovered by action in the Magistrate's Court by a third party, who alleged that he had the first choice of goats from the flock. Plaintiff said that of the other goats in the flock, none were of the value of £1, and he refused to take them. As a matter of fact, only two were goats, and the remainder lambs. He claimed delivery of the goats or their value, £1 each. Defendant admitted that the contract of exchange was entered into, and that nine goats had to be delivered, but he denied that any value was specified, or that they had to be selected from the flock. Most of the evidence in the case was taken by interrogatories. The Magistrate gave absolution from the instance, and the reasons for judgment given by him were as follows: "I am of opinion that the evidence for the plaintiff is not strong enough to justify judgment in his favour."

Mr. H. S. van Zyl was for appellant (plaintiff in the action); Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for respondent.

Mr. Van Zyl submitted that the evidence clearly supported the plaintiff's version of the contract, and that, even if the Magistrate was right in finding on the evidence that no value was specified or selection stipulated, he was wrong in giving absolution from the instance, inasmuch as the defendant tendered nine goats on payment of 1s. per month for the grazing of each goat for six months. Judgment should, he contended, in any case have been for the plaintiff to the extent of the tender on the pleadings.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are you entitled to appeal on that ground? I suppose the goats are still there for you?]

Mr. Van Zyl: After the judgment in the case, there is nothing to compel the defendant to hold to the tender. He may claim a large sum for grazing.

Mr. De Villiers said there were reasons not on the record why the Magistrate did not give judgment in terms of the tender.

De Villiers, C.J., said he was anxious to put an end to further litigation at once. It was a petty little squabble between two neighbours. The only point of difference was between nine goats and nine selected goats.

Mr. De Villiers said the tender was at an abnormal rate of grazing, and it was of advantage to the plaintiff that the Magistrate gave absolution from the instance and did not give judgment in terms of the tender.

De Villiers, C.J.: Full particulars were given by the plaintiff as to his contract with the defendant, but it is quite clear that there was a definite denial by the defendant of the statements made by the plaintiff. Defendant's evidence was very brief, no doubt, but the denial was perfectly clear that the plaintiff had agreed to accept the remaining nine goats of the flock. Then another witness said that the plaintiff agreed to this. Well, the Magistrate must have been placed in a position of considerable doubt after hearing this definite evidence, and the conclusion he came to was that the plaintiff's evidence was not strong enough to meet the evidence given on behalf of the defendant. How is this Court now to judge as to the credibility of these witnesses? The Court is certainly not in so good a position as the Magistrate, who saw these witnesses for the defence, and who must have been considerably shaken as to the truth of the evidence taken on behalf of the plaintiff by interrogatories. Upon the merits, the Court cannot interfere with the decision of the Magistrate. But then a further question is raised as to the tender. If there had been an unconditional tender, then no doubt the Magistrate ought to have given judgment in terms of the tender, but unfortunately it was a conditional tender, namely, that the defendant was prepared to deliver nine goats on the condition that the plaintiff paid him a shilling a month for each goat. It does not appear that the plaintiff was prepared to accept this tender. Counsel is not now prepared to say the plaintiff will accept this tender. Then why should the Magistrate have given judgment in terms of the conditional tender? The plaintiff did not offer to take the nine goats at less than a shilling a month. If he had done so, then perhaps this Court might have interfered, but it is only as a second string to the bow that counsel now says, "At all events I ought to have judgment in terms of the tender." But counsel is not prepared to say that he will take judgment in terms of the tender. If he were to state now on behalf of his client that he would accept the tender, I could make an order that would put an end to the litigation, though that would probably not affect the question of costs. Therefore, I am afraid the only course open to me is to dismiss the appeal, with costs. But in dismissing the appeal with costs, I wish to say this, that, in order agreement entered into in the month of June, 1906. When the summons was originally served at the residence of the defendant he was away from home, and judgment was given in default. The case was reopened by the Magistrate on proof of these facts, but unfortunately at the trial no plea was filed by the defendant. The plaintiff's son, who conducted plaintiff's business, in support of this claim for £20, produced a written memorandum of agreement of June, 1906, purporting to be signed by the marks of defendant and two other persons. Now, looking at the summons in this case, looking at the account annexed to the declaration, and looking at the agreement which the plaintiff's son produced in support of his claim, it is clear that the question in dispute before the Court was whether or not £20 was due upon the agreement produced. The question at issue was whether or not the defendant had signed this specific agreement. The Magistrate found that the defendant did not sign this agreement, that he was not present at the time it was signed, and that he did not give anybody else any authority to sign it. Under these circumstances the Magistrate should have given judgment for the defendant with costs. But in the course of his evidence the defendant said that he had had a previous verbal agreement of lease with the plaintiff, entered into three years ago, under which he was to pay £7 per year, and that was the only agreement on which he was liable. He admitted that he was liable, under that agreement, to pay £7. The Magistrate thereupon held that defendant should pay £7 under the other agreement, and costs of suit. The Magistrate justified his judgment by saying that the summons did not specify a written contract. But the evidence and documents produced at the trial show that it was the contract sued upon. The Magistrate gave judgment against defendant on a contract which was not before the Court. The question the Magistrate had to try was whether or not the defendant had signed the agreement under which £60 per year rent was payable to the plaintiff. It was proved to the satisfaction of the Magistrate that the defendant had not signed such agreement, and he ought to have given judgment for the defendant, or at least have granted absolution from the instance. The appeal will be allowed, with costs, and judgment in the Court below altered to one of absolution from the instance, with costs.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN,]

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Jansenville, in an action brought against appellant by respondent to recover £20, one-third share of rent of farm, Paardenberg North, district of Jansenville, for the year ended May 31, 1907, in accordance with an agreement of lease entered into in or about the month of June, 1906.

Mr. Uppington said that the appeal was brought mainly on the ground that the Magistrate had given judgment upon a different agreement from that set out in the summons. Defendant (now appellant) admitted liability for £7, under an agreement entirely different and distinct from the contract sued upon. Counsel submitted that the Magistrate had erred, and that there was nothing in the evidence to support his conclusions, plaintiff having wholly failed to prove his contract. The proper judgment for the Magistrate to have given would have been one of absolution from the instance.

Mr. Howes submitted that plaintiff was entitled to succeed even if the amount of the defendant's liability was less than the amount sued for, so long as defendant had made no tender. The judgment of the Magistrate should be upheld. Counsel cited Craba v. Kuhn (16 S.C., 266) and Basson v. Van Zyl (14 S.C., 24).

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Magistrate's Court for the sum of £20, being one-third share of rent for one year, due in terms of an

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Indwe, in an action brought by appellant (Harry Whitaker) against respondent (Samuel A. Johnson) to recover £1, balance of account for goods sold and delivered.

Appellant had sued defendant for a balance owing of £1 on an account for £19 18s. 6d. Defendant denied liability, on the ground that he should have been credited with a payment of £4 12s., which was not shown in plaintiff's account, and which was more than sufficient to extinguish any indebtedness by him to plaintiff.

Mr. Bisset was for appellant; Dr. Greer was for respondent.

Mr. Bisset having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff in the Court below sued for the sum of £1, being the balance of an account for goods sold and delivered. The defendant, who is stated by the Magistrate to be a somewhat illiterate person, appeared in person, and denied the debt. He produced to the Magistrate a number of accounts and receipts, and it appeared from the plaintiff's own books that the transactions between the parties extended over a period of five years. In April, 1906, the books showed that the parties came to a full settlement, and the balance then found due was paid by the defendant, and a receipt in full was given by plaintiff. In July, 1906, defendant opened a fresh account, and on the 29th July, 1907, there was another settlement, and a receipt was granted by the plaintiff to the defendant to the effect that the account was settled up to that date. From the documents put in there seems to have been a number of other transactions between the parties which are not entered in plaintiff's books. Some of these were settled by contra account and some by cash. In one instance a cheque was given which is not entered in plaintiff's books, and the plaintiff says it must have been for a cash transaction. Plaintiff now says, though it was not clear when he first gave his evidence before the Magistrate, that he made a mistake in casting up some of the earlier accounts and in dividing a certain amount by half he charged defendant 10s. too little in each case. The Magistrate says that after going through the accounts the parties seemed to get somewhat mixed as to what had taken place, and consequently, when the plaintiff had given receipts for the accounts as settled up to certain dates, he held that the plaintiff was bound by his receipts.

There is a conflict of testimony on the point of the disputed item, and I think that the Magistrate's judgment was one that might reasonably be held to be supported by the documents. Under the circumstances, I think the plaintiff would have been much wiser to have gone no further, and not to have brought this appeal. The Magistrate gave absolution from the instance, and plaintiff could have brought a fresh action if he had been able to substantiate the case further, instead of going to the cost of an appeal. I think, with the facts before the Magistrate, he cannot be said to have erred in giving the judgment which he did. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

LEGAL AND GENERAL TRUST
AND INSURANCE CO., LTD., { 1907.
LONDON V. LE SUEUR. { Oct. 30th.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence against the defendant on a judgment of the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division, in the sum of £200 on a promissory note, and £10, the amount of a bill of exchange, with costs. Order granted.

SUBERTSKY V. FRIEDGOOD.

Mr. Toms moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied judgment of the Supreme Court in the sum of £20, with interest and costs.

In reply to His Lordship, counsel said he believed the defendant was at present in Kimberley. The defendant had offered £14 in full settlement, and later he made an offer of £2 10s. per month.

Maasdorp, J.: If you put him in prison you will get nothing. I think under the circumstances you should accept the offer. The decree will be granted, with costs, to be stayed while the defendant pays £2 10s. a month, the first payment to be made on November 15.

BYRNE V. BILSON.

Mr. Pohl moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Wynberg, in the sum of £6 16s. 4d., for goods sold and delivered. There had been a return of nulla bona to the issue of a writ of attachment. Counsel now asked that the defendant's pension be attached from month to month.

Maasdorp, J., said he understood the papers were not quite in order. There was nothing to show that the judgment was served on the defendant. A similar order to that in the case of Toms v. Blakall (supra) would be granted, the amount to be £3 monthly, the Sheriff allowed to attach it at the office of the Resident Magistrate, Wynberg.

LE ROUX AND GARLAKE V. BAILIE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for an extension of the return day of the summons, as it was found there was not sufficient time to serve the defendant.

The return day was extended to the 14th November.

REHABILITATION. { 1907. Oct. 30th.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the rehabilitation of Pierre Francois Haupt.
Application granted.

Ex parte DIVISIONAL COUNCIL OF WORCESTER.

Mr. Philipson Stow moved to have a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands' Act made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte ENGELBRECHT AND OTHERS.

Mr. McGregor, K.C., moved for leave to the petitioners to set down a special case, under Rule 322, to determine the construction of a joint and mutual will of the late Johannus Cornelius Martinus Engelbrecht, and Anna Jacomina Engelbrecht, of Cathcart.

Leave granted, the case to be set down for the 8th November, pending further inquiry.

BARTIE V. BARTIE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan said that this matter had been before Mr. Justice Hopley, who, he had been informed, was likely to be away for a month, and who had ordered certain publications in granting leave to sue the defendant, John William Bartie, by edictal citation. The parties were married out of community of property, and had lived together at Kalk Bay for some nine years. There were five children of the marriage. On the 23rd April last the defendant left the plaintiff and returned about May 9. He then informed petitioner he was going to Cape Town to transact some business, but had not returned, and she had not heard of him since. The facts were not fully before his lordship, and since the granting of the order the defendant had made inquiries from friends of the plaintiff, and could not trace his whereabouts. There was an affidavit now as to the defendant's means. She was in poor circumstances although not able to sue in forma pauperis. Nine publications had been ordered by Mr. Justice Hopley, and if these were all made the expense would amount to from £10 to £20, and when the rule was made absolute there would be similar publications.

[Maasdorp, J.: How would you prevent all that?]

Mr. Buchanan: I would suggest it has been customary in most of these cases to make one publication.

Maasdorp, J., said he would like to know the relations between the parties, which might throw some light on the plaintiff's disappearance. He had the same difficulty as the judge who first dealt with the matter. Some attempt should be made to throw some further light on the matter, which could be mentioned again.

CAPE TOWN TRAMWAY CO { 1907. V. MARKS. { Oct. 31st.

This was an action brought by the Cape Town Tramway Company against Samuel Herbert Marks, advertising agent, Cape Town, to recover certain sums of money due under an advertising contract and for labour performed and materials supplied.

Plaintiffs, in their declaration, said that by an agreement entered into between the parties on the 18th September, 1902, defendant was accorded sole right and monopoly of advertising in and upon the cars of the plaintiffs for a period of five years ending on the 30th September, 1907, on certain conditions, upon payment of £962 per annum in quarterly instalments, due and payable in advance, and a greater sum in proportion for an increased number of cars with advertising space available. One of the conditions was that, upon defendant failing to pay any instalment within one month after it had become due, the agreement should be cancelled forthwith at plaintiffs' option. Defendant from time to time paid off his indebtedness to plaintiffs, but in or about April, 1907, there was due by him a sum of £514 15s. for rent of space for the quarter ending June 30, 1907, and a further sum of £35 1s. 6d. for certain work done for, and goods supplied to, defendant in or about the painting of signs and other work connected with the agreement. On the 4th June he paid off £100, and on the 31st July, £50, and plaintiffs had moreover allowed him a credit of £9 15s. on the said sum of £35 1s. 6d. by reason of certain boards destroyed by fire. The agreement was terminated on the 31st July, 1907. Plaintiffs claimed £390 1s. 6d., less £9 15s. omitted to be claimed in the summons, with interest a tempore morae and costs. Alternatively, plaintiffs claimed £354 17s., balance of the sum of £514 15s. due for rent, £25 6s. 6d., balance of the sum of £35 15s. for work and materials, interest a tempore morae and costs.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted the terms of the contract and the payment of £100 and £50, but denied that in making such payments he admitted the correctness of plaintiffs' statement of account, and said that these payments were made without prejudice to his claim in reconvention. He admitted further that if plaintiffs had accorded him the exclusive right to which he was entitled, the amount of £514 15s. would have been due, less the two payments made on account. As to the claim for £35 1s. 6d., he said that after debate the plaintiffs agreed that he should be credited with £9 15s. and £6 15s. 11d., leaving a balance due of £18 7s. 7d. For a claim in reconvention, defendant said that the company wrongfully and unlawfully, and in breach of the agreement, let to the proprietors of the Mount Nelson Hotel, Cadarga, and the International Hotel, advertising spaces on nine passenger cars for a period of two years, during which time the advertisements of the said hotels appeared on the said nine cars. For these the plaintiffs were indebted to him in the sum of £648. Defendant said further that plaintiffs were indebted to him in respect of advertising space let by them to the organisers and proprietors of various undertakings, to wit, the Rosebank show, agricultural shows, football matches, dog and poultry shows, and the like in the sum of £150. He claimed judgment for £648 and £150, less £383 2s. 7d. credited in account, or, alternatively, for £798, damages for breach of contract.

Plaintiffs, in their plea to the claim in reconvention, denied that they let advertising spaces on nine cars to the parties mentioned, or to any parties other than defendant during the existence of the agreement. They said that from time to time they placed notices on different cars on their various systems indicating that the said cars respectively proceeded past or to some particular place, show, or entertainment, and that such notices were so placed merely for the convenience of the public, to prevent confusion, or to induce the public to use the cars of the plaintiffs as a mode of conveyance, and were, if anything, merely adventitious advertisements of such places, shows, or entertainments, for which plaintiffs received no remuneration. They prayed that the claim in reconvention be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Struben appeared for plaintiffs; defendant appeared in person.

Defendant went into the box, and produced a copy of the original contract between plaintiffs and himself. The first clause, he said, gave him the sole right and monopoly of advertising for five years. He had not been allowed a sole monopoly. On nine of the cars the names of three hotels, viz., the Mount Nelson, the Cadarga, and the International, were displayed on boards, which had been on the cars for two years during the currency of the contract. He had protested to the manager, Mr. Giles, but without avail. Then when shows were being held, he had been deprived of earning money by advertisements because the company had put streamers at the front of the cars. Had it not been for this, he should have been able to obtain advertisements relative to the shows. He also protested to Mr. Giles with reference to this practice.

Cross-examined: If Mr. Giles said that witness had never protested in regard to the hotel boards on the cars, he was not speaking the truth. He did not know whether the company had received any remuneration for the hotel boards. He had objected to the manager every time he had seen the show notices on the cars. He had not written to the company raising a protest; all his protests had been made verbally. He would have commenced a lawsuit in regard to this practice had he had means wherewith to commence proceedings.

Alfred S. Giles, general manager of the plaintiff company, was called by Mr. Struben. He said that defendant complained that they were putting up hotel advertisements on certain cars. Witness thought he persuaded the defendant that the boards were not advertising boards, but destination boards to guide passengers to the principal hotels in the Gardens. As to show notices, the object of the company was not to advertise the shows, but to intimate that their cars passed the show ground, and thus obtain traffic. The company were not paid either by the hotels or the organisers of the shows.

By the Court: No destination boards were not upon cars that did not pass the hotels mentioned on the boards.

Arthur G. Syfret (attorney for the plaintiffs) said that after the summons had been issued, defendant paid sums on account, but he never said that he had a counter-claim against the company, and the first witness heard of such a counter claim was when the plea was served.

Defendant addressed the Court, and said that his means of livelihood had for the present been taken away, the spaces having been let to the Tobacco Company, which was one of his customers formerly.

De Villiers, C.J.: It may be a hardship on defendant that he has lost this contract, but that is a matter that cannot enter into the consideration of the present case. What the Court has to decide now is whether or not the defendant has made out his counter-claim for damages against the company for their alleged breach of contract in advertising on the cars in breach of their contract, which gave the defendant sole and exclusive right and monopoly of advertising. The only thing that was done by the company seems to have been, in regard to shows, that there was some notice to the effect that these trams ran past the show grounds. Well, that seems a mode of advertising the Tramway Company. It calls the attention of the public to the fact that those cars will carry people to the show. The show people would advertise in the newspapers and elsewhere, but the tram-cars would advertise for themselves so as to attract as many customers as possible to utilise the cars, instead of utilising other means of conveyance to the show. I do not consider that that was advertising in breach of the contract. There was no payment made, and there was no intention to advertise on behalf of the show people. The same remark seems to me to apply to the case of the hotels. On one occasion, Mr. Giles admitted, a board had been left on the car by the negligence of one of the tramway men, but a single act of negligence like that cannot be regarded as such a breach of contract, as would entitle the defendant to damages for breach of contract. There was no deliberate advertising. There was a notice given on the cars that these cars pass certain hotels. That was the object, as far as I can see. There could have been no other object, as far as I can see, and it was of use to strangers that they should know that cars passed certain hotels, and the sole object, as it appears to me, of placing the names of the hotels on the cars was to show that these cars would pass the hotels mentioned. And here again it was all done with a view of benefiting the company, so as to enable strangers to know that by that particular car they could reach a particular hotel or hotels, but there was no intention to infringe the rights of the defendant. Then also no payment was made, and really I do not consider that there was anything in the way of advertising of these hotels. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the defendant has not made out his case for the counter-claim, and the judgment of the Court must be for the plaintiffs as prayed, with costs, and judgment for plaintiffs on the defendant's claim in reconvention.

Defendant applied for a stay of execution for three months, and said that he had a claim against the estate of the late manager of the company (Mr. Lloyd) for £1,000, which he had been unable to get settled.

De Villiers, C.J.: I would suggest to the plaintiffs that they should not proceed to execution, because I do not think anything would be gained by it. I only throw this out as a wish that they should show consideration, but as a strict right they, of course, have the right to issue execution. I have no doubt that they will show you further consideration.

Mr. Struben said that the company had no desire to be hard upon defendant.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

SCHMIDT V SCHMIDT. { 1907.
Oct. 31st.

This was an action brought by Wilhelm Schmidt, a farmer, of the Claremont Flats, to have the defendant, Paul Schmidt, his son, ordered to specifically perform an agreement, and to transfer to the plaintiff certain portion of land, the plaintiff tendering the cost of survey and transfer, payment of £100, and failing these orders, payment of £218 14s. 7d., with interest and costs. The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a farmer residing on the Claremont Flats, in the Cape division. The defendant is also a farmer, residing on the said Claremont Flats, and is a son of the plaintiff. He is the registered owner of certain land there situate, being lots 10 and 11, block A, Downs No. 1.

2. On or about the 16th April, 1901, the parties hereto entered into a certain agreement, copy whereof is hereunto annexed, marked "A," which the plaintiff prays may be considered as if inserted herein.

3. The plaintiff, in consideration of and relying upon the said agreement, incurred expense and disbursed moneys for and on behalf of the defendant, and at the special instance and request of the defendant, amounting in all to the sum of £218 14s. 7d., all of which the defendant is liable to repay to the plaintiff in the event of the said agreement not being carried out by the defendant, account whereof is hereunto annexed, marked "B."

4. The defendant, after lawful demand duly made, has refused to carry out his part of the said agreement by transferring to the plaintiff the portion of the said lots 10 and 11, block A, Downs No. 1, as herein provided, and paying to the plaintiff the sum of £100 in terms of the said agreement.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) That the defendant be ordered to specifically perform the said agreement and to transfer to the plaintiff such portion of the said lots, the plaintiff tendering cost of survey and of transfer. (b) Payment of the sum of £100, with interest a tempore morae. (c) Failing compliance with prayers (a) and (b), payment of the said sum of £218 14s. 7d., with interest a tempore morae. (d) Alternative relief. (e) Costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. Defendant admits paragraph 1 of plaintiff's declaration.

2. With regard to paragraph 2, defendant admits that he signed the said agreement, but says that he cannot read, and was ignorant of the full intent and meaning thereof when he signed it. He specially denies the allegation in the said agreement contained that lots 10 and 11, block A, Downs No. 1, were at the time when the agreement was signed, or at any time whatsoever, virtually the property of plaintiff.

3. On the 13th day of November, 1899, defendant, being then a person of full age and otherwise fully competent to receive a licence to occupy land by virtue of Act 37 of 1882, and having duly conformed with the provisions of the said Act, obtained a licence from the Colonial Government to occupy the aforesaid lots 10 and 11 upon the terms and conditions laid down in the said Act.

4. Thereafter, in accordance with the requirements of the said Act, defendant resided upon the aforesaid lots 10 and 11, and at the time when the said agreement was signed, was so resident thereon, and plaintiff had no interest in the same, nor could he (plaintiff) lawfully acquire any interest therein, except in the manner laid down in section 12 of the aforesaid Act, and defendant specially denies that plaintiff acquired any such interest in the said lots or in any portion thereof by virtue of the said agreement.

5. On the 17th August, 1905, defendant obtained title to the said lots 10 and 11 from the Government, in terms of section 18 of the aforesaid Act, and he has ever since remained the registered owner thereof.

6. Defendant admits that he refuses to transfer to plaintiff any portion of the said lots 10 and 11, and to pay him the sum of £100, but denies that plaintiff is entitled to such transfer or to such payment. Save as above, defendant denies paragraphs 2 and 4.

7. With regard to paragraph 3, defendant admits that plaintiff paid licence fees on his behalf to the Government, but says that he advanced plaintiff the money to do so. He further admits that plaintiff supplied him with materials for building and wire for fencing to the value of £18 and £2 respectively, and that plaintiff on three occasions lent him horses to plough his ground, but he says plaintiff never sent him a proper account, nor ever made a demand upon him in respect thereof. He has always been ready and willing to pay the aforesaid £20, and herewith tenders the same.

8. He admits having bought a cart and harness from plaintiff, but says that he paid for the same. Save as above, he denies all and singular the allegations contained in paragraph 3.

Wherefore defendant prays that plaintiff's claim, subject to the tender made in respect of prayer (c), may be dismissed with costs.

For a claim in reconvention, the defendant (now plaintiff) says that on or about 30th January, 1906, plaintiff (now defendant) sold to him, as will appear more fully from an agreement of sale, copy whereof is hereunto annexed marked "A," to which he craves leave to refer when produced at the trial, all his goods, chattels, stock, furniture, and effects for the sum of £50, which sum was duly paid to plaintiff (now defendant).

The said goods, chattels, stock, furniture, and effects were delivered to defendant (now plaintiff), but subsequently restored by him to plaintiff (now defendant), the latter agreeing to repay him the said £50.

All things have happened, all times have elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled entitling defendant (now plaintiff) to payment of the said sum of £50, but plaintiff (now defendant) refuses to pay the same or any part thereof, although frequently requested so to do.

Wherefore defendant (now plaintiff) claims: (a) Payment of the sum of £50 with interest a tempore morae; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

Mr. Upington for plaintiff: Mr. Van Zyl for defendant.

Evidence having been called and counsel heard in argument on the facts, Buchanan, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff for actual beneficial expenditure on the property which the defendant would now get in the sum of £189 4s. 10d., and £25 10s., debts due, making a total of £164 14s. 10d. The claim in reconvention would be deducted, leaving a balance of £114 14s. 10d. in favour of the plaintiff, with costs.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

COATON AND ANOTHER V. { 1907.
SPIRO AND COLL. { Oct. 31st.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the final adjudication of defendants' estate as insolvent.

The defendant Spiro appeared in person.

Mr. Bisset said the other defendant had left the country, and there was a defect in the service. He therefore asked for an order in respect only of the estate of the defendant Spiro, and he asked that the return day of the summons against the other defendant should be extended.

Spiro, in reply to the Court, said he could not pay his debts.

The Court granted an order for the final adjudication of Spiro's estate, and extended the return day in the case of Coll to the last day of term.

HASKINS V. DE GOUVEA.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for £700 on a mortgage bond, with interest and costs, and for £1 10s. 6d., due for insurance, in terms of the bond. He applied also that the specially hypothecated property should be declared executable, and that the rents accruing therefrom should be attached.

Order granted as prayed.

BOALCH V. RIX.

Mr. Pohl moved for provisional sentence for £1,000 on a mortgage bond, with interest and costs, and for the hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Order granted as prayed.

RUDMAN V. KNOTTZE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for £635 on a mortgage bond, with interest and costs, and for the specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Order granted as prayed.

ESTATE LAITE V. VAN SITTEBT AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Bisset moved for provisional sentence against the first defendant for £286 10s., rent due, on an agreement of letting and hire, for judgment under Rule 329d, for £42 1s., for goods sold and delivered, and for an order for the delivery of certain articles as provided for in the agreement, and against the second defendant for provisional sentence for £309 11s. 4d., on an undertaking of suretyship, with costs.

Order granted as prayed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte DIVISIONAL COUN- { 1907.
CIL OF PORT ELIZABETH. { Oct. 31st.

Mr. Bisset moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act. Counsel said that in regard to one of the pieces of land (No. 15), the owner had appeared, and the application with respect of that particular land was withdrawn. Counsel further stated that in connection with another of the lots of land, the name of the last transferee was omitted in the advertisements of the rule nisi. He asked also that the Divisional Council should be allowed certain special costs for advertising in other colonies, before the Court granted the rule nisi, and costs incurred in obtaining assistance in the search to identify the several properties. He quoted sections 21 and 20 of Act 28 of 1881.

Maasdorp, J., said that the cost of the advertisements before proceedings were commenced was not part of the costs of litigation.

The Court made the rule absolute, except as to the property No. 15 mentioned in the petition, with costs, including the expenses of the Secretary of the Council, necessitated by his coming to Cape Town to make search in the Deeds Office, and the costs of the conveyancer.

Ex parte HEUNIE.

Mr. Marais moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis for damages for breach of promise, and maintenance of child. Service of the order of Court on the respondent had been made, as directed, by registered letter, and the Post Office receipt was now filed.

The rule was made absolute, Messrs Michau and De Villiers being appointed attorneys and Mr. Marais counsel.

Ex parte ENDERS.

Mr. Inchbold moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis the executors of the estate of the late Thomas Norman, to compel them to file an account or to pay out an amount alleged to be due under Norman's will.

A rule nisi was granted, subject to counsel's certificate being lodged with the Registrar, the rule being made returnable on the 14th November.

In re PETRUSVILLE PROSPECTING SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. Wallach moved for an order confirming the official liquidator's report, and authorising the winding up of the company and the destruction of the books. The report showed that there was a balance of £91 17s. 8d., less the liquidator's commission, to be divided amongst the shareholders. The company was formed with a nominal capital of £14,560, but only 35 shares, each of the value of £20, were subscribed.

The report was confirmed, and commission of the liquidator allowed at 5 per cent. on the assets realised, the company dissolved, and leave granted to destroy the books after six months.

ESTATE BUSSE V. THOMPSON AND THE HIGH SHERIFF.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on notice calling on respondents to show cause why an interdict should not be granted restraining the Sheriff from proceeding with the sale of certain land at King William's Town, attached by order of Court, dated the 30th July, 1907. Costs were prayed for against the first respondent.

Mr. Swift appeared for the respondent.

Mr. De Villiers said that the property was attached by the creditors of the wife of the late Busse for unsatisfied debts, incurred by her after the death of her husband. The trustees of the estate of the late Carl Frederick Busse now asked that the attachment be set aside, and that the land be declared part of the insolvent estate of the late Busse. The property belonged to the joint estate. The debts of the joint estate had not yet been liquidated, and it had not been shown that there was anything to come from the estate to the wife. Counsel referred to Maasdorp's Institutes (Vol. 1, p. 92). The property was registered in the name of Carl Frederick Busse.

Mr. Swift said the question was one of fact as to whether the joint estate was sequestrated or whether only the estate of the husband was sequestrated. In the latter event, half of the joint property would pass into possession of the widow, and such half would become liable for debts which she incurred after the death of her husband. Counsel quoted the case of Hiddingh (Buchanan, 1878, p. 36), and said that while Busse died in 1902, his estate was only sequestrated about four months ago. He submitted that, as by the terms of the will the wife became entitled to half of the property on the death of her husband, as the creditors had allowed her to carry on the business, and to incur further debts, and as Thompson had proved a vigilant creditor, the Court would not now grant the extreme remedy of an interdict. Counsel pointed out that only half the joint estate had been attached.

Maasdorp, J.: It seems quite clear that when the application was made for the attachment of this property in execution, all the facts were not placed before the Court. This property seems to be registered in the name of Carl Frederick Busse, who was married in community of property with his wife, and it appears that after his death his estate was insolvent. The estate was consequently adjudged insolvent, and any property which belonged to him became vested in the trustee, and amongst other things, there was this land now in question, which stands registered in his name. It is now necessary for the trustee to liquidate the estate, and, amongst other things, to dispose of this property. If it would appear that after the liquidation and the payment of the debts of the joint estate, there is any balance over, which is to be divided between the estates of the husband and the wife, then the latter will become entitled to such property, but for the present the property is at the disposal of the trustee, who has to liquidate the estate, and the Court, if it had been aware of the circumstances of this case, would not have granted an order making the property executable in satisfaction of the debts of the widow, incurred after the death of her husband. The Sheriff will be interdicted from proceeding with the sale, and the interdict granted on the 30th July will be set aside. Respondent Thompson will be ordered to pay the costs.

MULLER V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Nightingale moved, on behalf of the Colonial Government, to have the award of the arbitrators in this matter made a Rule of Court. The arbitration was in connection with the expropriation of certain land. A consent paper was filed.

Order granted.

HARVEY V. HARVEY.

Divorce—English marriage settlement—Forfeiture of rights.

H. and his wife were domiciled and married in this Colony. The wife brought certain movable property into the estate which, by a marriage settlement executed on the day of the marriage in the English form, was vested in certain English trustees for her separate use. II., however, was to enjoy a life interest in the property should he survive his wife. It was provided that the deed of settlement should be construed in accordance with English law. In any action brought by the wife for restitution of conjugal rights, &c., she prayed, inter alia, that H. be declared to have forfeited all benefits under the marriage settlement.

Held, that the said prayer be granted.

Mr. Inchbold asked leave to mention this matter. The case was one in which the petitioner claimed an order for restitution of conjugal rights. Mr. Justice Hopley had granted a rule nisi, but directed that on the return day a point should be argued relative to a claim that the respondent should be declared to have forfeited certain rights under a marriage settlement. Counsel said he understood that it was probable that Mr. Justice Hopley would be away for some time, and he asked leave to now argue the matter.

Maasdorp, J., said he would hear what counsel had to say on the point.

Mr. Inchbold said that the action was one in which the wife sued for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, for divorce. There were prayers also for the custody of the children, and for a declaration that the defendant had forfeited certain rights given to him by a marriage settlement executed on the day of the marriage. The property dealt with under the marriage settlement was brought into the estate by the wife, and the settlement gave the defendant a life interest in the property if he should survive his wife. Mr. Justice Hopley granted a rule nisi returnable on the first day of the present term, but he directed that on the return day the point should be argued, whether this Court had jurisdiction to declare that the defendant had forfeited his rights in the peculiar circumstances under which this settlement was executed. It appeared that the settlement was executed in this country, but it was in English form, and the trustees were in England. The property was movable property, being certain shares vested in the trustees, and there was a clause which said that the interpretation of the document was to be by English law. The question was whether this Court had the right to declare the defendant's rights forfeited under these conditions. Counsel quoted the cases of Forbes v. Forbes (2 Juta, p. 110), Moore v. Moore or Bull (1891, Probate, 279), Nunby v. Nunby (15 Probate Div., p. 186), Forsyth v. Forsyth (65 Law Times, p. 556), Collis v. Hector (32 Law Times, p. 223), and referred to 22 and 23 Vict., chapter 61, section 5, and to Nelson on International Law, page 124.

In reply to the Court, counsel said that the defendant left his wife in 1904. They lived apart in Cape Town, but subsequently defendant went to England, where he was residing at the time of the action. Defendant had not complied with the order to return to his wife.

The Court granted a decree of divorce, plaintiff to have custody of the child, the defendant being declared to have forfeited all benefits under the marriage settlement.

BARTIE V. BARTIE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan mentioned this matter, which had been ordered to stand over for further information on the previous day. Counsel now read an affidavit by the petitioner, in which she said that the relations between her and her husband had always been of a friendly nature, although he always lost his temper when she asked him where he had been and what he had been doing. On the day he left, she missed £20 from a wardrobe, which she believed he had taken.

Maasdorp, J., said the order of Court would be varied by ordering one publication in the "Cape Times" and one in the "S.A. News," instead of the eight publications previously ordered.

FIRST DIVISION.

MAJIEET V. ZUCKERMAN AND f. 1907.
CARROLL. (Nov. 1st.

Messenger of Magistrate's Court —Writ of civil imprisonment —Illegal arrest.

A writ of civil imprisonment having been obtained in a

Resident Magistrate's Court by the first defendant against the plaintiff upon an unsatisfied judgment against plaintiff's brother, whose name and occupation were identical with those of the plaintiff, the messenger (second defendant) arrested the plaintiff, but on being informed by the judgment creditor, to whom the plaintiff had been taken immediately on his arrest, that it was the wrong man, the messenger at once released the plaintiff.

Held, that as the writ had not been set aside, neither defendant was liable in damages for illegal arrest.

This was an action brought by Abdullah alias Abdol Majid to recover damages estimated at £500 from Joseph Zuckerman, trading as the Colonial Cabinet Manufacturing Company, and Joseph Aloysius Carroll, messenger of the R.M.'s Court, Cape Town, for illegal arrest.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a basket-maker, and at times carries on the trade of a fisherman as well, residing at No. 4, Cross-street, Cape Town. The first defendant carries on the business of a furniture dealer at Cape Town, under the style or firm of the Colonial Cabinet Manufacturing Co. The second defendant is the messenger of the Court of the Resident Magistrate for the district of the Cape.

2. On or about the 14th day of August, 1907, and in the vicinity of No. 4, Cross-street, the second defendant, acting with the authority, and at the request, of the first-named defendant, wrongfully and unlawfully seized and arrested the plaintiff in the presence and sight of a large number of friends and acquaintances of the latter, and falsely alleged in the hearing of the persons that the seizure and arrest was so effected.

3. The second defendant, in the course of such wrongful and unlawful seizure and arrest, violently grasped the plaintiff—who is 60 years of age—by the neck, and compelled him to enter the cart, for the purpose, as alleged, of proceeding to Roeland-street Gaol.

4. The second defendant, however, drove the cart to the store of the first defendant, where the plaintiff was released.

5. By reason of the premises, the plaintiff has been injured in his bodily health, has suffered great public indignity, and has been injured in his credit and reputation, and has sustained damage in the sum of £500.

The plea of the first-named defendant (Joseph Zuckerman) was as follows:

1. The first-named defendant admits paragraph 1 of plaintiff's declaration.

2. With regard to paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof, he denies that he ever authorised or requested the second defendant to seize or arrest the plaintiff, and he says, further, that he has no knowledge of the details of the said seizure or arrest.

3. The first-named defendant admits that after duly obtaining a judgment in the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town against one Abdol Majid, he regularly and lawfully applied for and obtained a decree of civil imprisonment against the said Abdol Majid. The said Majid is not the plaintiff.

4. The first-named defendant admits paragraph 4, and says that immediately upon the plaintiff being shown to him, he informed the second defendant that the plaintiff was not the defendant in the Court below, against whom the decree had been obtained.

5. With regard to paragraph 5, the first defendant denies that plaintiff has suffered any damage at all, or any damage for which the first defendant is in law responsible.

Therefore the first defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The plea of the defendant, Joseph Aloysius Carroll, was as follows:

1. The defendant, Joseph Aloysius Carroll, admits paragraph 1 of the plaintiff's declaration, but says that on or about the time when the writ was issued the plaintiff resided at 16, Horsburg-lane, off Hanover-street, Cape Town.

2. On the 14th August, 1907, the said defendant, pursuant to and in the discharge of his duty as messenger, by means of a certain writ of civil imprisonment, arrested the plaintiff in the vicinity of No. 4, Cross-street, Cape Town, using in such arrest no unnecessary violence.

3. The writ says that the plaintiff is the person referred to therein as "Abdol Majid, basket-maker, 16, Horsburg-lane, off Hanover-street, and that the plaintiff on the 14th August, 1907, before the arrest was effected, admitted to him that he (the plaintiff) had formerly resided at 16, Horsburg-lane, and had there received notice of the proceedings taken by the first defendant for the writ of civil imprisonment.

4. After the arrest of the plaintiff, and when he was in the cart of the defendant, the plaintiff denied that he was the man who owed the money to the first defendant, who trades as the Colonial Cabinet Manufacturing Company, whereupon the defendant forthwith drove with the plaintiff to the store of the first defendant, who then said that the plaintiff was not the man who owed him the money for which he had obtained judgment.

5. Thereupon the defendant forthwith released the plaintiff from arrest, under which he had been for less than half-an-hour, and offered him a sovereign, and to send him home in a cab, which offer the plaintiff refused, saying that he wanted nothing.

6. The defendant admits that there were various persons present when the arrest of plaintiff was effected, but says that the attention of such persons to the arrest was not drawn by any act on his part, but by the excitement of the plaintiff and noise made by him.

7. The defendant specially contends that he did no more than his duty in the premises in obedience to the writ addressed to him wherein the plaintiff was in fact the person described and referred to.

8. Save as aforesaid, the defendant denies all the allegations in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the plaintiff's declaration, specially denying that the plaintiff has sustained any damages for which he is responsible.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Alexander appeared for the first defendant (Zuckerman); Mr. Pohl appeared for the second defendant (Carroll).

The plaintiff gave evidence, and said he was born in 1848, and he was a Gatiep or official of his church. He had never bought furniture from Zuckerman, and he was never civilly summoned, but at Christmas, 1905, he received a civil imprisonment order, but he declined to accept service, and the document was thrown into his shop. He went to Zuckerman's shop, and saw a young woman, and repudiated liability, saying that he was not the man referred to in the document. Then he went to Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, Zuckerman's attorneys, and made a similar denial. He heard no more of the matter until August 14, this year, when he was suddenly arrested in the street as described. He alleged that he was induced to speak to his captor by the latter saying that he wanted to give him an order for baskets. Plaintiff wondered if he had been arrested for stealing, and the man replied, "Yes, you have been arrested for stealing Zuckerman's furniture." He was forced into a cart, protesting that he did not like to go to prison in the clothes he was wearing, but he was informed, "If you go in your Sunday clothes Zuckerman won't know you." They arrived at Zuckerman's shop, when Zuckerman remarked, "No, this isn't the man." The person who arrested proposed to compensate him by giving him 7s. 6d., and Zuckerman thought a couple of chairs or a toilet set would mollify him, but he refused to take anything, and was then liberated from arrest. The arrest was witnessed by about twenty people, and it greatly upset him mentally and physically. From the very first he denied that he was the man wanted, and he even explained that an almost similar mistake had been made in 1905.

Cross-examined: He regarded it as a sufficient repudiation of the 1905 incident to have told the girl in Zuckerman's shop, and to have seen Zuckerman's attorneys. There was another Abdol Majiet, a basket-maker, who was his brother. Witness was not supporting the children of his brother's two wives. 16, Horsburg-lane was witness's correct address at the present time. Witness denied that he had mentioned in Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl, and Fuller's office, the fact that he received things intended for his brother, and that his brother received message for him.

You want to charge the defendant £500 for your free drive of half-an-hour's duration up Plein-street? How do you make that up?—I am a coloured man.

Witness denied that he obtained the services of a doctor.

Did you get any medicine?—Yes.

Of what value?—Say, 9d.

De Villiers, (C.J.), said that if the Court found that there had been an illegal arrest, the damages could not be assessed on the quantity of medicine consumed. There was the question of the indignity to be considered.

When witness got to the shop he indignantly refused to take anything they offered him.

In cross-examination by Mr. Pohl, witness said that he was a Gatiep.

Is that not the person who waits on the priest?—No, he is another man.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Gatiep is a kind of deacon.]

Witness said he was still a Gatiep, so the arrest had not injured his position. He had no turban on then.

In reply to the Chief Justice, Mr. Pohl explained that the original summons was not served on the witness, but on the right man.

The witness stated that although Mr. Carroll said nothing about taking him to Roeland-street, everybody knew that when they got into Mr. Carroll's cart, there were only two places they would be taken to, and they were the Magistrate's Court and Roeland-street. Witness denied that Mr. Carroll suggested to him that he should pretend to measure a basket, and thus go away quietly. Witness denied that he shouted. He said in a low voice: "I am not a thief."

Carroll offered to pay for a cab to take him home or to employ his own cart, but he refused the offer. He was under arrest between five and ten minutes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did your brother ever tell you an action had been brought against him?]

Plaintiff: No; not that Zuckerman had summoned him.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you say, "The summons is for my brother?"]

I said it might be. That was in December, 1905.

Abdol Ganie, general dealer, Cross-street, son-in-law of plaintiff, gave evidence that plaintiff was much respected, and suffered a shock by the arrest.

Evidence of a corroborative nature with regard to the arrest was given.

The defendant Carroll described the affair, and said that when Zuckerman said the plaintiff was not the man, he (witness) remarked that he would hold Zuckerman responsible. Witness had done his duty by arresting the person described on the writ at the address named. Witness offered plaintiff £1 compensation, and offered to drive him back home, so that the people might see that the arrest was a genuine error. The plaintiff repeatedly, to witness and Zuckerman, said: "I want nothing." If he had to take the word of every debtor there would be no arrests made.

Mr. Pohl: You have arrested many people in your time?

Witness: Probably over 5,000. As many as 660 in a single year.

Have you ever had an action for illegal arrest or assault?—Never. I have never assaulted anyone.

Cross-examined: Plaintiff was evidently surprised when he was arrested.

Mr. Upington: Why couldn't you have let the man go into his house until you had made inquiries?

Witness: Why, I should never have been able to get him out again. I cannot arrest a man in his house. At the present time I have a writ for a man who is not a hundred yards from this court. He sits in his shop all day, and watches through a window myself and my deputies pass daily, but I can never catch him outside. I have had that writ, waiting to serve it, for two years, and haven't been able to serve it yet.

You had to adopt a little strategy by pretending you wanted a basket made?—Yes.

You were doubtful of your man?—I was never doubtful. I knew he was the man described on my warrant.

You see Zuckerman says he is not the man, and you say he is?—I say he is the man I had to arrest.

Mr. Pohl (re-examining): You do not regard a writ as stale when it is a year and a half old?

Witness: No; I have arrested a man on a writ 11 years old. I had another after seven years. He had been away seven years, and he was taken the first week of his return.

What would have happened if you had let plaintiff go into his house?—There would have been trouble, undoubtedly. We never allow a man to go back to his house.

Can you arrest a man in his house?—Certainly not; I would never attempt it.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Upington): I don't see what case there is against Carroll.]

Mr. Upington: The plaintiff had to join him as co-defendant. Carroll made a tender, but I admit I cannot press the case against him.

Michael Bolton (deputy messenger) corroborated the evidence given by Mr. Carroll, and added that when he served the summons the plaintiff denied that he was the person concerned, and he advised him, if so, to appear at the Court.

Other witnesses gave corroborative evidence.

An articulated clerk, in the employ of Wahl, Fuller and De Klerk, who conducted the case on behalf of Zuckerman, said that when application was made to Majid, at the top of Caledon-street, for the amount due, a person went into the office and said that the person concerned lived at 16, Horsford-lane.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an action for wrongful and unlawful arrest, and consequently the plaintiff can only succeed against either defendant by showing that the arrest was wrongful and unlawful. The arrest was effected by the second defendant as messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court of Cape Town under a writ of civil imprisonment, signed by the Magistrate, which commands the messenger to take Abdol Majiet, basket-maker, 16, Horsburg-lane, off Hanover-street, and place him in gaol until the claim of the first defendant is satisfied. The date of the writ is 20th December, 1905, at which time the plaintiff, who was and is a basket-maker, was the only person of the name of Abdol Majiet whose address was 16, Horsburg-lane, off Hanover-street. He therefore was the man specifically indicated by the writ as the person to be arrested, and consequently, whatever else was illegal, the arrest itself was not illegal. Up to the present time the writ has not been set aside, and so long as the writ stands it is impossible to hold that the arrest effected thereunder was either wrongful or unlawful.

In justice to the messenger, I am bound to say that the allegations of the use of unnecessary violence in effecting the arrest are not supported by the evidence, and that even if the arrest had been proved to be technically illegal, this would not have been a case for heavy damages or for awarding of more than Magistrate's Court costs. The detention of the plaintiff was very brief, and as soon as it was discovered that the writ had been issued against the wrong man the plaintiff was released from custody.

As to the first defendant, it is unnecessary to say what the decision of the Court would have been if the writ of arrest had been set aside before the present action was brought. In assessing damages for an arrest authorised by a writ which had been improperly obtained and afterwards set aside, the result would greatly depend upon the degree of impropriety on the part of those who induced the magistrate to issue the writ against the wrong person. The nature of the evidence required in such a case would differ from the evidence required in a case where the illegality of the arrest itself is relied upon. In the present case it would appear that the first defendant's attorneys are responsible for the obtaining of the writ, but the plaintiff himself is not free from blame, because after he had been served with a notice that a writ would be applied for against himself, he did not take the trouble to appear and oppose the application. He had been led to believe by a clerk in the attorneys' office that the matter would be set right, but on the other hand he had been warned by the messenger's officer who served the notice of application on him that he should appear personally to support his objection. The attorneys' clerk seems to have forgotten all about the matter, but it is quite possible that the attorneys might have produced further evidence on the point if their negligent conduct in obtaining the writ, after they knew that the plaintiff was not Abdol Majiet against whom judgment was given in the original action, had been stated as the ground of the present action. As it is, the only ground relied upon is the illegality of the arrest, but as the arrest was authorised by a writ, which is in due form and has never been set aside as having been improperly obtained, the Court can only grant absolution from the instance with costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte CHRISTIANIE. { 1907.
Nov. 1st.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute, admitting petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis for divorce.

Rule absolute, Mr. Watermeyer appointed counsel, and Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne attorneys, to the petitioner.

Ex parte KNOX.

Commissioner — Attestation of powers.

Any foreign Commissioner for Oaths, unless he be appointed by the Supreme Court, must have his powers attested by some person in authority, in order that depositions sworn before him may be accepted by the Court.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute, authorising petitioner to sue her husband John James Barry Knox in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights. Counsel produced an affidavit of service upon respondent at H.M. Dockyard, Devonport, England, sworn by a solicitor's clerk before a Commissioner of Oaths in England.

Maasdorp, J., said that there was a very serious defect of service in this matter. The affidavit was sworn before a man named Jackson, who called himself a Commissioner of Oaths, but the Rule of Court was very strict that any Commissioner in a foreign country, or any person exercising powers in a foreign country, must have his powers attested by someone in authority. In this case there was no attestation of the Commissioner by a person recognised by this Court. There were Commissioners of this Court in England, and if the document had been taken before a Commissioner of this Court, it would have been sufficient attestation.

Mr. Buchanan asked for the indulgence of the Court, seeing that this was a pauper suit, and applied for the rule to be made, subject to due proof of service.

The matter was ordered to stand over, pending inquiries as to whether the firm of solicitors mentioned appeared in the English Law List.

Later on, Mr. Buchanan stated that he found that to be the case.

Rule absolute, Mr. Douglas Buchanan appointed counsel and Mr. Bernard attorney to the petitioner.

Ex parte FERREIRA.

Mr. Toms said that this was the return day of a rule nisi calling upon respondent to show cause why petitioner should not sue him in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights. Counsel produced an affidavit showing that the rule had been served upon respondent's father at Knysna, but the latter had taken up a hostile attitude towards the applicant, and declined to disclose the whereabouts of respondent, with the result that it had been impossible to ascertain whether, in compliance with the directions of the Court, the rule had been brought to his notice. Counsel now applied for an extension of the return day, and leave to effect substituted service.

The return day was extended until the 14th November, and leave given to effect substituted service by one publication in the "Knysna Herald."

TRUTER V. TRUTER.

Mr. Swift moved upon notice to respondent to show cause why the petitioner (his wife) should not be appointed as curator bonis to administer his property and estate, and why costs of this application should not be paid out of his estate. Counsel read affidavits by the petitioner and respondent, the latter of whom consented to the application. It was explained that the reason of the present proceedings was that respondent was of intemperate habits. Counsel cited in re Chisholm (9 Juta, 61).

The matter was ordered to stand over for further affidavits in proof of the bona fides of the application.

Maasdorp, J., suggested that an affidavit either by the minister before whom the declaration had been made or by a medical man should be produced in reference to the state of respondent.

Ex parte DE VILLIERS AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Watermeyer moved on behalf of petitioners, husband and wife, for leave to register an ante-nuptial contract excluding community of property. The parties, who had been married in Edinburgh, Scotland, stated that they were advised before the ceremony that it would not be necessary at that time to enter into a contract in order to exclude community of property, and that it would be sufficient if they executed a contract upon their arrival in this country. Mr. De Villiers was domiciled in this country, having been a member of the South African Rugby team which toured Great Britain and Ireland in the season 1906-7. The petitioners said it had been their intention from the beginning to be married without community.

Maasdorp, J.: As it appears that there was an intention before the marriage of these parties to enter into this contract, but that they were advised in Scotland that this contract could be entered into after their arrival in this country, it seems to me that they were bona fide under a wrong impression, and the Court will now assist them to carry out the intention that they had formed before the marriage. It is wrong to call it a "post-nuptial" contract, because, after marriage, it is impossible in this country for the parties to enter into such a contract. What the Court now allows is that the contract, which they contemplated making before marriage and which would consequently have been an ante-nuptial contract, be made and registered as an ante-nuptial contract, saving the rights of creditors previous to the date of registration.

APPEALS.

LOUW V. HOOGENDYK. { 1907.
{ Nov. 4th.

Exception to summons—Vague and embarrassing.

In a summons for money due to a boardinghouse-keeper in lieu of notice, it is not sufficient to allege that the defendant was bound to give such notice; the grounds of such obligation must be fully set forth.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate at Caledon overruling an exception taken on a summons brought by plaintiff, who was now appellant, against the respondent.

The applicant agreed to supply respondent's wife and family with board and lodging for £16 a month. On August 31 respondent vacated the applicant's premises, having failed to give notice, for which the applicant claimed £16. An exception was raised to the summons that while the cause of action purported to be for damages, neither the requisite or any other essentials were clearly set forth; therefore the defendant was hampered in his defence.

The Magistrate upheld the exception, and in his judgment said that he was obliged to hold that the summons showed no cause of action. Plaintiff sued defendant because he had wrongfully and unlawfully left the premises without giving notice. The plaintiff might have meant to sue for a month's board and lodgings, but although that might be the inference, it was not stated. Therefore he upheld the exception.

Dr. Greer for applicant, Mr. Cloos for respondent.

Dr. Greer contended that the matter should be sent back to the Magistrate. The summons was particularly clear in showing why defendant was brought into Court. It was clear that he was sued for a month's money in lieu of notice, and the exception was taken on a technicality. Counsel quoted in support of his argument the case of Thompson v. Barkly East Municipality, Rinderpest Committee (4 Supreme Court Report, p. 193).

[Maasdorp, J.: Where does the contract say that notice was required.]

Dr. Greer: It is not given, but it is a usual custom.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff in the Court below complained that he entered into an agreement by which he was to supply the family of defendant with monthly board and lodging. The board and lodging was supplied in terms of that contract until August 31, 1907, and thereafter the plaintiff removed his family without giving a month's notice. Now, it is quite clear that the parties understood what the suit was about. The plaintiff complained that the month's notice should have been given, and that the defendant failed to give it. But then the question arises whether there is anything in the summons given as ground for saying that such monthly notice was required. The notice may be required on different grounds. It may be because it is one of the terms of the contract. It may be, as is suggested by counsel for the defendant, that it is a universal custom that such notice must be given. Or it may be that the mere fact of a monthly contract having been entered into, requires in law a month's notice. These different alternatives go to show that the summons is in its character embarrassing, and that the defendant is prejudiced in his defence. It is impossible for the defendant to say which of these grounds of action he is to meet, and the very suggestions of counsel for the appellant that he might take one or the other shows that it is necessary specifically to state that a month's notice became necessary before an end could be put to the contract. The Magistrate upon this exception has held that there was no cause of action. The exception taken was not on that ground. The exception was that the nature of the summons was such as to prejudice the defendant, and I think the defendant is prejudiced in his defence until he knows exactly what the ground of action is. The Magistrate said that if an application had been made for an amendment, it would have been allowed, and it now appears that if an opportunity had been given to amend that summons, the plaintiff would have had some difficulty in setting out his exact ground of action. There seem to be several grounds which might be set up in the proposed amendment of the summons, and the plaintiff is not now prepared to state what amendment he desires to make.

The appeal was dismissed, with costs.

BUILDERS' SUPPLY CO., LTD. V. FAULDS.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of East London.

The respondent (Faulds) had sued the applicant company for £19 15s. 4d., which he said the company owed him, as the balance of wages due by one John James Lacey, a contractor, formerly of Adelaide, to the plaintiff for work and labour performed by the plaintiff, which sum the defendant company had guaranteed and undertaken to pay. The defendant had denied the claim, and pleaded the general issue. The Magistrate, after hearing the evidence, gave judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, with costs, finding that Watson (the company's manager) had given plaintiff to understand that he would see that plaintiff was paid. He (the Magistrate) considered that privity of contract was established between Watson and the men. On May 6, Lacey was ejected from his contract, and on the same date the company received £208 from the Public Works Department by virtue of the assignment it held from Lacey. The contract was subsequently carried out by the company as Lacy's surety.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., for the appellant, and Mr. W. Porter Buchanan K.C., for the respondent.

Counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J.: "It appears that Lacey entered into an agreement with the Government, undertaking to construct certain buildings at Adelaide, and the Builders' Supply Company (defendant in the Court below) became guarantors that all the duties undertaken by Lacey would be performed. In the beginning of April, 1907, Lacey seems to have got into difficulties. He then owed the company about £275 for goods supplied, and he was also indebted to certain workmen for wages. The company wanted to secure themselves, and got an assignment from Lacey of the £275, which had accrued due to him on the certificates. Later in the month Lacey seemed to have thought that there had been some misunderstanding, and he inquired of the company how matters stood, pointing out that if the company drew all the money there would be nothing with which to pay the workmen. Lacey asked the company if they were prepared to pay the workmen, without whose services he could not proceed with the building, and in reply Mr. Watson (defendant's manager) wrote: "With reference to your favour of the 16th inst., regarding the order which you gave us to receive certain payments from the Public Works Department in connection with your contract at the Adelaide Gaol, we would advise, as we explained to you when the order was given, that sufficient moneys to cover your wages on the gaol would be paid from the further progress payments the Public Works Department would make, wages in the meantime would be advanced by us out of the progress payments as made." Here, therefore, there is a clear undertaking that the company will pay the workmen. Thereupon, at a later stage, the workmen approached Lacey, and he informed them of this undertaking. Here, then, there is an intimation by one of the parties that the workmen could expect their wages from the company, but still there is no privity of contract between the workmen and the company. Later on, when things became more pressing, the workmen, who were still engaged on their duties, began to press Watson (the company's manager) as to what their rights were. Watson then made statements which the Magistrate had found established the privity of contract. The most important statement was that of Blacker, who said that the result of the interview was that when the men asked for payment, past payment was made, and that Watson then told the men that he had not the money to pay them in full. Blacker said that he distinctly understood that the company was liable for the wages. So also in the evidence of Mr. Luckhurst. There was thus at that time a distinct promise on the part of Watson that he would pay the men, and the contract between them and the company was completed. There was an assignment and undertaking that the company would pay the men. It was quite clear that they gave up the indebtedness of Lacey, which was the consideration for the contract with Watson. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

REX V. DE VILLIERS. { 1907.

Butcher's licence—Selling from cart—Act 13 of 1870, Sec. 6.

A butcher who, having obtained a licence in respect of a certain shop, sends out a cart with instructions to sell meat therefrom is guilty of contravening Sec. 6 of Act 13 of 1870.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate, at Somerset Strand, fining the appellant (defendant in the Court below) 10s., for contravening section 6 of Act 13 of 1870.

It appeared that the appellant was a butcher, at Somerset West, and held a licence for the district. He sent meat in a butcher's cart to Gordon's Bay, where it was sold haphazard to whoever purchased it. The Magistrate, in his reasons, said the appellant had a licence for the sale of meat at Somerset West, and in going to Gordon's Bay, went outside the area, through which action he contravened the Act.

Dr. Greer for applicant, Mr. Nightingale for respondent.

Dr. Greer said that this case was really brought as a test case. His point was that when stock was slaughtered on licensed premises, the mere carrying round of it on a cart for sale was but an extension of his business.

Mr. Nightingale contended that a great hardship was inflicted on the other butchers in Gordon's Bay, who paid a licence there, by this man being allowed to vend meat in this way. He considered it was an illegal action on his part.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (November 15th).

Maasdorp, J.: In this case it appears that the defendant, who held a licence to carry on the trade of a butcher at Stellenbosch, obtained a new licence in terms of section 9 of Act 13 of 1870, on the 19th March, 1907, to carry on such trade at lot 1, block L, Main-road, at Somerset Strand. At his butcher's shop in Somerset Strand he cut meat into pieces which were labelled with the weight of each piece, and this meat he sent off in a cart to Gordon's Bay, with instructions to the driver to deliver to customers all that had been ordered from the shop, and to sell the rest there to anyone willing to buy. Meat was accordingly sold not only to customers upon their orders, but also to other persons. For selling to such other persons the defendant is now charged with carrying on the trade of a butcher at Gordon's Bay without a licence, in contravention of section 6, Act 13, 1870. Some authorities were cited at the bar, in which the question was raised as to the nature of the dealings in meat which would constitute the exercise of the trade of a butcher. But it seems to me these cases do not bear upon the present case. It is quite clear that the defendant is a butcher, and holds a licence authorising him to exercise his trade at lot 1, block L, Main-road, at Somerset Strand, and nowhere else. There he carried on his trade by dressing and selling meat, and he delivered the meat there sold to his customers at their residences wherever they might be, as he was justified in doing. But when he actually carried on, through his agent, the driver, this business of selling meat at Gordon's Bay, to persons who came to his cart to buy the meat there, he must be taken to have exercised the trade of a butcher at Gordon's Bay. He was therefore rightly convicted of contravening section 6, Act 13 of 1870, and the appeal must be dismissed.

SCHOEMAN V. NOURSE.

In this case the executors testamentary of the estate of the late Stephanus Job Schoeman, of Komhuis, district Oudtshoorn, claimed payment of £2,736 13s. 9d., balance of the purchase price of the farm Bultfontein, district Colesburg, and an amendment of a certain memorandum. To this declaration defendant excepted.

From the declaration it appeared that on June 7, 1904, the late S. J. Schoeman sold to defendant the remaining extent of the farm Bultfontein for £6,300, payable as £2,000 in cash, and the balance in 9 or 12 months. Thereafter defendant desired the contract to be reduced to writing, and signed a memorandum drawn up by the defendant or at his direction. The memorandum was accepted generally by the late Mr. Schoeman save as to (a) the terms directing payment of part of the purchase price to be made at the office of W. E. Gordon Davis, at Colesberg, and (b) the terms directing that transfer should be effected by Attorney W. E. Gordon Davis. As to these terms, defendant repudiated them as forming part of the contract. Plaintiff prayed that the terms might be considered as not inserted in the memo. There remains a balance of £2,736 13s. 9d. due on the contract, and defendant has had possession of the farm, but refused to pay the balance. The exception was that the alleged contract set out in the declaration was a material variance from the written contract set out in the summons. (2) That the allegations in paragraph 4 of the declaration were inconsistent with and contradictory to the allegations in the summons, inasmuch as it was alleged that the late S. J. Schoeman repudiated portions of the written contract, whereas on the summons it was alleged that the written contract was signed by the defendant and entered into by the late S. J. Schoeman.

Mr. Upington for the plaintiff, and Mr. Close (with him Mr. Louwrens) for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Mr. Justice Maasdorp suggested that the case should be allowed to stand over pending the parties interested being able to come to some agreement, and thus saving further costs.

Leave was given to mention the case again.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

HEX V. NOVEMBER AND { 1907.
ANOTHER. { Nov. 11th.

Evidence of accomplice—Corroboration.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Graaff-Reinet, who had convicted appellant (Jakie November), of stock theft, in contravention of Act 35, 1893, as amended by Act 7, 1905.

From the record, it appeared that the appellant and one Piet Jantjes, farm labourers, were charged with the theft of two goats, the property of their master, Jacobus Johannes du Toit. Jantjes pleaded guilty to stealing one goat, while November pleaded not guilty. Evidence was led in support of the Crown case, and Jantjes was convicted of the theft of one goat, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment and lashes, and to pay compensation or undergo a further term of imprisonment. Jantjes then went into the box, and gave evidence against November, who was convicted of the theft of one goat and similarly dealt with.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Jones submitted that the evidence of Jantjes was irregularly admitted against the appellant, seeing that the Crown case had to all intents and purposes been closed. When the verdict had been found against Jantjes there was really no evidence against either of the accused, had it not been for the admission of Jantjes that he was guilty of stealing one goat. He cited Regina v. Du Preez and Badenhorst (11, S.C., 274). In the event of this objection not being upheld, counsel argued that the evidence of Jantjes, being that of an accomplice, ought to be carefully scrutinised, and that it was far from conclusive against November.

Buchanan, J.: Two farm servants were charged with stealing two goats, the property of Mr. Du Toit. The prisoner, Piet Jantjes, pleaded guilty to stealing one goat. The prisoner November pleaded not guilty. The case was heard in the usual way. Mr. Du Toit gave evidence to prove that his goats had been stolen, and he and a constable gave evidence as to spoors. Thereupon the Magistrate convicted Jantjes, who had admitted the theft of one goat, and sentenced him, and, after he had been so convicted and sentenced, Piet Jantjes was called at a witness for the Crown against November. The first objection taken is that the evidence of Jantjes was improperly admitted, on the ground that the case for the Crown was closed. Now it is not an unusual practice for Magistrates, whenever they have two or more prisoners before them, and the evidence clearly shows that one of the prisoners is guilty of the crime, to convict and sentence him, and then allow him to give evidence. This has been done at the Criminal Sessions also. A case has been quoted in which, after the Crown case had been and after the defendant's case had been closed, and the Court had adjourned, the Crown then wished to call one of the prisoners who had been convicted to give evidence against the other, and the Court of Appeal, although there was some difference of opinion, said that, with such an irregularity, the prisoner would be prejudiced, and refused to support the conviction which had been so obtained. That was not the course adopted in this case. I do not think this was an irregular procedure. The conviction of Jantjes was proper and in order. I do not think an irregularity was committed, in that, before any evidence whatever was led for the defence, the evidence of Jantjes against his fellow-prisoner was taken. I fully agree with Mr. Jones that Jantjes must be looked upon as an accomplice, and that the evidence of an accomplice must be most carefully scrutinised, but our law says, provided a crime is proved aliunde the evidence of an accomplice may be sufficient to satisfy the Court of the guilt of anybody charged with a crime which is otherwise proved to have been committed. It has been very clearly laid down that it is not necessary to have corroboration of the fact of the guilt of the prisoner against whom the accomplice gives evidence, but it is always admitted that the crime of an accomplice must be looked at critically, and must be most carefully scrutinised. In this case we find very strong and distinct corroboration, especially in the evidence of Mr. Du Toit and of the constable as to the spoors found at the slaughtering place. Under the circumstances, I cannot find any fault with the Magistrate's decision in convicting November. The conviction will be confirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

REX V. GIBISELA.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Elliotdale.

Buchanan, J., said that the record had been received, together with the reasons, but a letter had come to hand from the appellant, who said that he was too poor to engage counsel to argue the case for him, and that he was undergoing a term of imprisonment. Under the circumstances, he proposed to assign counsel, and to appoint Mr. Swift to argue the case for the appellant.

Mr. Swift accepted the appointment, and an order was made accordingly.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

SMART V. ESTATE SIMEY. { 1907.
Nov. 5th.

Will—Interpretation.

The will of the late Mrs. S. gives and bequeathes to "my son T. J. S., my daughter M. J. W. and my youngest daughter C. S. equal shares in the estate, house and garden known as G. V....., also the piece of ground opposite the gates of G. V., belonging to me as per transfer. Each one of my children named herein to have equal shares in this property for their lives, and after their decease it shall descend to their lawful issue." The three children of C. S. (the plaintiffs) contended that under the terms of the will. T. J. S., M. J. W., and C. S. inherited only a life usufruct in the whole of the property named. The executors of the will (defendants) contended that on the death of Mrs. S. the said three heirs were each entitled to a third share of G. V., free and unencumbered, and that the restriction as to life usufruct applied only to the land opposite to G. V.

Held in terms of plaintiffs' contention.

This was a special case for the construction of certain clause in the will of the late Matilda Simey, of Cape Town.

The special case was set out in the following terms:

1. The plaintiffs are Arthur Samuel Smart and Winifred Mary Smart, the children of Caroline Smart, hereinafter mentioned. The defendants are William Edward Moore and Thomas James Simey, in their capacity as the executors testamentary of the estate of the late Matilda Simey.

2. On or about the 12th day of June, 1882, the said Matilda Simey, then resident in Cape Town, duly executed her last will.

3. By her said will the said Matilda Simey appointed William Edward Moore and Thomas James Simey to be the executors of the said will and administrators of her estate and the said William Edward Moore and Thomas James Simey duly took up the appointment pursuant thereto.

4. By a clause of the said will the testator made the following bequest: I give, devise, and bequeath to my son, named Thomas James Simey, and to my daughter, Matilda Jane Wright; also to my youngest daughter, Caroline Smart, equal shares in the estate of house and garden known as Greenwood Villa, situated between Caledon and Hanover streets. Also the piece of ground opposite the gates of Greenwood Villa belonging to me, as seen pr. transfer, each one of my three children named herein to have equal shares in this property, for their lives, and after their decease, it shall descend to their lawful issue.

5. By a further clause of the said will after making further bequests the testator appointed her said daughters to be joint heirs of the residue of her estate.

6. The said Matilda Simey died on the 2nd day of December, 1884, without having executed any further testamentary disposition in regard to her estate, and leaving surviving her three children, Thomas James Simey, Matilda Jane Wright, and Caroline Smart, and three grandchildren, the plaintiffs above mentioned, and James Greenwood Simey, child of the said Thomas James Simey.

7. At the date of the execution of the said will the said estate of house and garden known as Greenwood Villa was valued for Municipal purposes at £580, whilst the said piece of ground opposite the gates of Greenwood Villa, which was then vacant land, was valued at £20.

8. On or about the 2nd day of December, 1886, application was made by the executors to the Supreme Court for authority to sell the said piece of ground opposite the gates of Greenwood Villa. The said Court authorised the said land to be sold and the proceeds of the sale, amounting to £88 1s., were deposited with the Master of the Supreme Court to the credit of the lawful issue of Thomas James Simey, Matilda Jane Wright, and Caroline Smart, in terms of the order of the said Court.

9. On or about the 27th day of April, 1904, the said executors obtained an order from the Supreme Court authorising them to sell the house and premises known as Greenwood Villa, subject to the condition that the amount realised be paid in to the Guardians' Fund to the credit of lawful issue of the children of the said Matilda Simey. The said sale has not been proceeded with.

10. The said Matilda Jane Wright, who is 61 years of age, is a widow and has no issue. The said Caroline Smart, who is 59 years of age, has two children, the plaintiffs above mentioned, both majors. The said Thomas James Simey has one surviving child, the said James Greenwood Simey, a major.

11. The parties annex hereto a copy of the said will, and beg leave to refer this Honourable Court to the original of the said will when the same is produced from the custody of the Master at the hearing of this suit.

12. The plaintiffs contend: That the estate of house and garden known as Greenwood Villa and the piece of ground opposite the gates of Greenwood Villa were bequeathed to Thomas James Simey, Matilda Jane Wright, and Caroline Smart in equal shares for their lives, and that after the decease of the said Caroline Smart they, the said plaintiffs, are entitled to succeed to the said Caroline Smart's share of the said bequest.

13. The plaintiffs further contend: That on the death of the said Matilda Jane Wright without issue, her said share of the aforesaid bequest accrues in equal shares to the said Caroline Smart and Thomas James Simey for their lives should they be alive, and that thereafter on the decease of the said Caroline Smart, they, the said plaintiffs, are entitled to the said share thus accruing to her, and in the event of one or other or both the said Caroline Smart and Thomas James Simey predeceasing the said Matilda Jane Wright that the said plaintiffs are entitled to the share which would have accrued to the said Caroline Smart had she been alive.

14. The defendants contend: (a) That each of the said three children of the testatrix became entitled on the death of the testatrix to one-third undivided share of the said estate of house and garden known as Greenwood Villa, free and unencumbered. (b) That each of the said three children of the testatrix was appointed fiduciary heir of one-third undivided share of the said piece of ground opposite the gates of Greenwood Villa, and that upon the death of any one of them the said share of such deceased one must go to his or her lawful issue; but if any one of them should happen to die without issue, then the said share of such deceased one shall form part of his or her estate absolutely for the benefit of his or her heirs testamentary or ab intestato. (c) That on the death of any of the said three children of the testatrix there is no accrual of his or her share to the others of them, or to any of their issue.

Wherefore the parties pray for judgment on their respective contentions, and that this Honourable Court may be pleased to direct that the costs in this suit may come out of the said estate.

Mr. Sutton, for plaintiffs; Mr. Louwrens for defendants.

Mr. Sutton submitted that the clause in question should be read as one clause and as conveying one bequest. He cited Strydom v. Strydom's Trustee (11 S.C., 425).

Mr. Louwrens submitted that there were two different and distinct bequests in the paragraph in question, and that the restriction applied merely to the ground opposite the gates of Greenwood Villa. He quoted In re Simey's Estate (13 C.T.R., 262, and 14 C.T.R., 301). If one bequest had been intended it was strange that the terms "in equal shares" should be used twice, and that there should be a separate description of the property in each sentence.

Buchanan, J.: The question before the Court is the construction of a clause in the will of the late Mrs. Simey. The will seems to have been written by Mrs. Simey herself, and signed by her and duly executed before witnesses. In this will a clause appears giving and bequeathing to "my son named Thomas James Simey, my daughter Matilda Jane Wright, and my youngest daughter Caroline Smart, equal shares in the estate, house and garden known as Greenwood Villa, situate between Caledon and Hanover streets, also the piece of ground opposite the gates of Greenwood Villa belonging to me, as per transfer." It is sought by the defendants in this case to separate Greenwood Villa from the piece of land outside, opposite the gates, and a declaration is asked that by the will Greenwood Villa was bequeathed to the children named absolutely, and that it is only the piece of ground opposite the gates that is bound by the provisions in the next sentence of the will. After mentioning these two properties, the will goes on: "Each one of my children named herein to have equal shares in this property for their lives, and, after their decease, it shall descend to their lawful issue." Now, reading this, I think the intention of Mrs. Simey was to place both these properties on the same footing. Looking at the subsequent clause, it will be seen that she refers to "each of my children named herein." The "three children named herein" are named specially with reference to Greenwood Villa. There is no gift of the ground outside the gates to anybody, unless it go with the previous bequest. It gives Greenwood Villa to these people named, and then says, "also the piece of ground opposite the gates of Greenwood Villa, as seen per transfer." If that be the reading of the will and the intention of the testator, then the property must all be included, and "each of the three children named herein" had only a life interest in this property. In all these cases it is the intention of the testator which determines what shall be the construction of the will, and looking at the clauses containing bequests to the same children, it will be seen that the other bequests are also burdened with a usufruct, and it is only a life interest to the children that is disposed of. I think, looking at the will, and reading this clause critically, there can be very little doubt, that the piece of land, which is not disposed of separately from the other must go, as Greenwood Villa is acknowledged to go by the will, and that the last clause of the paragraph of the will refers to the whole of the property and not to the ground only. Judgment will be in favour of the plaintiffs' contention, as contained in paragraph 12 of the special case. There is another contention in this case, and that has reference as to how, at the death of Matilda Jane Wright, her share of the estate is to go. Now, Mrs. Wright is only one of the three children; it is true she is the eldest of the three, but she is only two years older than her sister, and to ask the Court now to make such a declaration is rather, I won't say invidious, but rather premature, because, supposing that the brother and sister died before Mrs. Wright, such a declaration would have no effect whatever, and it would be providing for a case which has not yet arisen, and giving a declaration upon what are at present only possibilities. Under these circumstances, I think it would be highly improper for the Court to give any further order at the present moment. The costs of this case will come out of the estate. I may add that this order does not interfere with any previous order of the Court authorising sale of the property.

ESTATE TUDHOPE V. SAND. { 1907.
Nov. 5th.

Bond — Co-principal debtors — Release by creditor of part of the security.

Three trustees of certain Church property (F., R. and S.) borrowed £500 on mort- gage for Church purposes from one T., specially hypothecating certain Church land registered in their names as trustees. They all bound themselves as co-principal debtors, renouncing the benefits of excussion and division: and also bound their individual property as security. R. also specially hypothecated certain land of his own as additional security, which was afterwards released by T. After T.'s death, his executors obtained provisional sentence on the bond, and execution was levied on the Church property, which realized about £150. S. now denied that his estate was liable.

Held, that the fact of T. having released a portion of the security did not relieve the sureties from their liability, each in solidum for the balance due under the bond.

This was an action brought by the executors testamentary of the late Francis Tudhope against Friedrich Sand, of East London, to recover judgment upon a certain mortgage bond, upon which defendant was sued as surety and joint principal debtor.

Plaintiffs, in their declaration, said that on the 28th November, 1899, Joseph Fink, Carl Richter, and defendant, in their capacity as trustees for the time being of the Apostolische Kirche, East London, entered into a mortgage bond in favour of the late Mr. Tudhope, for £500 for money lent, under which certain immovable property was hypothecated. They bound themselves in their individual capacities as sureties in solidum and joint principal debtors, for the payment of the said sum of £500, together with interest thereon, and insurance premiums, and renounced the exceptions of excussion and division. Interest became due and payable on the 31st December, 1905, but the said interest had not been paid. On the 17th April, 1906, plaintiffs obtained provisional sentence on the bond against Richter, Fink, and defendant in their capacities as trustees, and also as personal sureties. The property hypothecated under the bond had been sold, and a liquidation account had been framed. Plaintiffs prayed for judgment for £427 12s. 1d., with interest from the 1st May, 1907, plaintiffs tendering cession of action against the other sureties.

Defendant, in his plea, said that by the terms of the bond there was bound specially certain piece of land, with the buildings and erections thereon, being remaining portion of lot 2, block F, near East London, the value of which property had at all times material been far in excess of the amounts claimable under the bond. Thereafter, and prior to the 31st December, 1905, the plaintiff, without the knowledge or consent, and to the prejudice of defendant, released the said property from the operation of the said mortgage, and by reason thereof defendant was not liable to plaintiffs in any sum whatever.

Plaintiffs, in their replication, said that at the time of entering into the said mortgage bond, Richter, together with the defendant, and Joseph Fink, became sureties in solidum and joint principal debtors, renouncing the benefits of the exceptions, and generally binding their persons and property, movable and immovable, for the repayment of the said sum. Richter, further, in his capacity as surety, as part of his surety obligation, and not otherwise, and for the security of the late Francis Tudhope in case either of the said other sureties, or the said Carl Richter, should at any time be unable to discharge their liabilities, specially hypothecated the remaining portion of lot 2, block F, in the division of East London, belonging to him. Thereafter, prior to the 31st December, 1905, with the knowledge and consent of the defendant, the said remaining portion was released from the operation of the said suretyship in so far as it had been specially hypothecated for the security of the said surety obligation, but Richter, Fink, and defendant were not in any way released from their surety obligations, nor had they been in any way prejudiced.

Mr. Sutton for plaintiffs. Mr. Upington for defendant.

Evidence was given by a clerk in the Master's Office, after which counsel read the record of evidence taken on commission at East London.

Mr. Sutton, in argument, said that his clients were suing Sand as one of three sureties and co-principal debtors, who had renounced the benefits of excussion and division. These three parties had placed themselves except as to the benefit of cession of action in the same position as the principal debtor. This was not a suretyship of indemnity and only in that case would a release or pledge release the surety. He cited Maasdorp's Inst., vol. III., pp. 368 and 373, Van der Vyver v. De Waver and Others (4 Searle, 27), Priest v. Stegmann and Others (15 C.T.R., 407), Serrurier v. Langeveld (1 Menzies, 317), Voet, 46, 1, 29 (Swift and Payne's Trans.), and Burge on Suretyship, p. 163.

Mr. Upington said that the defence taken was that there had been a material variance in the contract without the defendant's consent, and there was clear authority for the proposition that where the contract was varied without the surety's consent he ceased to be bound. The creditor had wilfully prejudiced the defendant. He cited Maasdorp's Inst., vol. III., pp. 376 and 377, and Van Oosterzee v. McRae (1 Menzies, 305).

Mr. Sutton having replied,

Buchanan, J.: The executors of Tudhope sue upon a mortgage bond executed in favour of the late Mr. Tudhope for the sum of £500. There were three parties to this mortgage bond. In the first place, Messrs. Fink, Richter and Sand, acting in their capacity as trustees of the Apostolische Kirche, at East London, borrowed £500 for the purpose of building a church on land donated to them for that purpose. The money was borrowed first on the security of the Church property, which was registered in the names of the trustees. Then one of the trustees, Richter, agreed to bind himself as a surety and co-principal debtor, also interposed a piece of land of his own, which was included in the mortgage. Then the three trustees, in their individual capacity, agreed to be security for the due payment of the capital sum. They bound themselves not only as sureties, but as joint principal debtors, and they renounced the benefits of the exceptions of excussion and division, and they bound not only themselves but their property for the due payment of this bond. The executors of Tudhope sued upon this bond, and obtained provisional sentence, and thereafter a writ of execution was taken out against the church property, and the three defendants as trustees, and also against the defendants personally. Under this writ the church property was attached and realised, and about £150 in round figures was realised therefrom. But nothing has been realised from either of the three trustees in their individual capacity. The two trustees, Fink and Richter, abide by the provisional sentence, which was given against them, and, in fact, Richter is said to have tendered to pay his third of the liability to the plaintiffs. But that tender was not accepted, as they were entitled to demand from each defendant payment in full of the amount due. The defendant Sand entered appearance, and the Court allowed him to go into the principal case. The defence set up by him in the principle case is this, that as Richter interposed his own personal property as part security for this debt, and as Tudhope in his lifetime released the landed property so interposed by Richter, therefore Sand (the defendant) is not now liable to pay anything whatever in his personal capacity as a surety. The line of argument, as I understand it, is this, that if Sand paid as surety he would be entitled to demand from plaintiff's cession of the action against all three defendants, and also with that cession of action plaintiff would be obliged to deliver all of the sureties held when the bond was executed, and that by releasing part of the securities the mortgagor prejudiced the right of defendant to recover the amount due by the other sureties. It must be borne in mind in this case, that the original obligation was one of liability for the Church, which was the original principal debtor, and that the three defendants bound themselves as sureties. Being sureties, they would be entitled to have the exoneration of the principal debtor, but they specially renounced that right. But, though they specially renounced the right of exoneration, still, as sureties, they are entitled to demand from the debtor to have a cession of action. Now, the question, I think, narrows itself down to this, are the plaintiffs, the creditors, able to give a cession of action to one surety against his co-sureties? And it is clear as the case stands they are so able to give this cession of action. But the further question is whether the fact that the creditor has released certain property which he obtained from one of the sureties is a good ground for holding that the creditor has thereby released the other two sureties from their liability under the bond. I am of opinion it is not. There has been no release of the surety himself, and the creditor can still give cession of action against him. All the sureties remain liable under the bond. There was no warranty of solvency of any one of the sureties given by the creditor. On this simple ground, I think, provisional sentence ought to be confirmed in the principal action, and the judgment against the defendant must be sustained. The balance which is due after the church property has been realised, is £427 12s. 1d., and judgment will be given against the defendant for this amount, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

SCHWARTZ V. BURGER.	{	1907.
		Nov. 5th.
		" 6th.
		" 7th.
		" 8th.
		" 25th.

This was an action for an interdict and damages. There was a claim in reconvention for damages and for specific performance of contract.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff, Schalk Gerhardus Burger, is a farmer, residing in the district of Worcester, and is and was at all times material the registered owner of a portion of a farm called De Doorns, by deed of transfer, dated August 14, 1902, and diagram thereto attached, to which plaintiff craves leave to refer when produced at the trial.

2. The defendant, Johan George Bosch Schwartz, is a farmer, also in the said district, and is the owner of a part deducted from the said portion of the farm De Doorns, sold by plaintiff to defendant on July 12, 1902, which said part was transferred to defendant on November 25, 1902, and is marked AXWO on the said diagram.

3. In or about February and March, 1907, defendant wrongfully, unlawfully, and maliciously entered upon and trespassed on plaintiff's said property, and did commit certain unlawful acts of trespass thereon, and otherwise caused damage to plaintiff, by digging or causing to be dug through plaintiff's orchard and cultivated ground a certain trench, about 4 feet deep and some 200 yards in length, commencing at or about the point "1" on the said plan, and running thence to the point "2" on the line "XB" on plaintiff's boundary, as shown on the said plan.

4. Defendant has laid certain pipes in the said trench and on plaintiff's said property, in the left bank of the Hex River, which skirts plaintiff's said boundary.

5. Defendant has further erected an iron post on plaintiff's ground, on or near the said left bank of the river.

6. By reason of the said acts of trespass, plaintiff has suffered damage in the sum of £100.

7. Defendant threatens to continue and persist in the said acts.

8. By reason of the premises, plaintiff claims: (a) An order calling upon defendant (1) to remove the said pipes wrongfully and unlawfully laid upon and across plaintiff's said land; (2) to reinstate the said trench or excavation so wrongfully and unlawfully made; (3) to remove the said iron post erected by defendant on plaintiff's property; (b) an interdict restraining defendant from continuing and repeating the said acts of trespass; (c) the sum of £100, as and for damages; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1, 4, and 5 of the plaintiff's declaration.

2. He also admits paragraph 2 thereof, and says that he purchased the said property from the plaintiff, in terms of and subject to the conditions of a certain contract of sale, dated the 12th of July, 1902, which is annexed to and forms part of the defendant's deed of transfer, and to which he craves leave to refer at the trial.

3. By the said contract, it was provided, inter alia, that the defendant, as purchaser, should have the right to make a dam upon a site to be pointed out to him on the plaintiff's ground, and the plaintiff bound himself to supply the defendant with a 2½-inch (pipe of) water, which was to be brought into the said dam from a certain agreed point on the plaintiff's ground, the defendant to have the right of making a cutting or cuttings on the plaintiff's ground from the said dam to his own ground.

4. At the time the said contract was entered into, it was contemplated by the parties that the supply of water for the said dam would be obtained from the neighbouring land of one Wolfardt, but it was subsequently found that the said water could not be obtained therefrom, and an arrangement was thereupon made between the parties whereby the plaintiff was to supply the said stipulated quantity of water from certain points on the side of the railway on the plaintiff's land, this water to be conveyed to a dam on the defendant's land, the latter to get certain monetary compensation for the abandonment of his right to the dam referred to in paragraph 3 hereof, and to cover the cost of constructing the proposed dam on his own ground.

5. In pursuance of the above arrangement, water was obtained from the locality referred to, and taken in pipes from these sources to a dam constructed by the defendant on his own ground, but the supply so obtained, though it has been used for a considerable period, proved insufficient to fill a 2½-inch pipe, and thereafter, as the plaintiff had moreover failed to pay the compensation agreed upon as aforesaid, it was agreed that he should, in lieu of such compensation, allow the defendant to make certain two furrows across the plaintiff's land from the Hex River side, for the purpose of conveying water to the said dam on the defendant's land.

6. The arrangement last referred to was however also found unsatisfactory in practice, and eventually on or about 22nd January, 1907, it was agreed between the parties that the plaintiff should allow the defendant to dig a trench across the plaintiff's land from a point on the bank of the Hex River to lay pipes in the said trench, and by this means to convey a supply of water from that quarter on to his own land. A portion of the said trench extending for a distance of about 200 feet had to be covered in by the defendant. The said trench was constructed in accordance with the above arrangement, and after the pipes had been laid therein, it was duly covered in. The said trench and pipes are those which the plaintiff now seeks to have removed.

7. The erection of the iron post mentioned in paragraph 5 of the declaration, as well as the construction of all the works complained of by the plaintiff as acts of trespass, took place with the plaintiff's consent and in pursuance of the said last mentioned arrangement.

8. The parties never intended by any of the aforesaid arrangements to release the plaintiff, nor was he thereby released, from his obligation to supply the defendant with the full quantity of water stipulated for in the said contract of sale, nor did the defendant at any time waive his right to such full supply; on the contrary, he has throughout and repeatedly claimed the same from the plaintiff, but as yet without success.

9. Subject to the above, the defendant denies paragraph 3 of the declaration and also paragraph 6 thereof.

10. He admits paragraph 7, and says that he is lawfully entitled to the free and undisturbed use of the said trench and pipes.

Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claims may be dismissed with costs.

For a claim in reconvention, the defendant said:

11. The defendant (now plaintiff) craves leave to refer to the pleadings in convention.

12. Through the failure of the plaintiff (now defendant) as aforesaid to deliver to the defendant the full and proper supply of water stipulated for in the said contract of sale, to wit, a full 2½ inch pipe of water, the defendant has already sustained damage to the extent of £500.

Wherefore the defendant (now plaintiff) claims: (a) An order compelling the plaintiff to deliver to him the said full 2½ inch supply of water, or, in the alternative, payment of the sum of £2,000 as damages for breach of contract. (b) The sum of £500 as damages for the plaintiff's failure in the past to deliver the said full and proper supply of water. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

The plaintiff's replication and plea to claim in reconvention was as follows:

For a replication to defendant's plea, plaintiff says:

1. With regard to paragraphs 2 and 3, he admits that the said purchase was subject to the said conditions of sale, and for greater certainty craves leave to refer thereto for the full terms and true intent thereof, and he annexes hereto a true copy of the original, which is in Dutch, and also a true translation thereof.

As to paragraphs 4 and 5, plaintiff says that, in accordance with the said conditions, the stipulated quantity of water was brought from certain points situated on plaintiff's land in certain 3-inch and 2-inch galvanised pipes supplied with defendant's consent by plaintiff in or about February, 1904, in lieu of the iron pipes mentioned in the said conditions, and laid by defendant in accordance with clause 2 of the said conditions; and, further, that the said points were "the certain place" on the plaintiff's ground agreed upon between and in the contemplation of the parties as therein stated.

3. Defendant constructed the said dam in or about November, 1902, to February, 1904, and thereafter fenced the boundary between plaintiff and himself, when it appeared that the said dam, instead of being wholly on plaintiff's ground in terms of the said conditions, was partly upon plaintiff's ground, but for the most part on the ground purchased by defendant, and plaintiff thereupon measured off portion of his (plaintiff's) land adjoining the said dam of the size stipulated for the said dam in the conditions of sale, and gave possession of the same to defendant, who did not thereon construct the dam agreed, but with plaintiff's acquiescence used and still uses and enjoys the said portion for purposes of cultivation.

4. The said pipes were, and are, adequate and sufficient to carry the stipulated quantity of water, of which there is ample supply, to the said dam, and plaintiff says that if they do not at present do so it is owing to the bad workmanship and neglect of the defendant in and about the laying of the said pipes and the cleansing of the said pipes and the intakes thereto from time to time.

5. With further reference to paragraphs 4 and 5, and with reference to paragraphs 6 and 7, plaintiff specially denies that any agreement has at any time been made between him and defendant entitling the latter to make the trenches, lay the pipes, or erect the post complained of upon his land, and says that he has in all respects performed his obligations under the conditions of sale.

6. Save as aforesaid, and save in so far as any of the allegations in the declaration are admitted in the plea, he denies the allegations of fact and conclusions of law therein contained, joins issue thereon with the defendant, and again as before prays for judgment with costs.

As a plea to the claim in reconvention, plaintiff (now defendant) craves leave to refer to the several paragraphs of the replication, and denies that he has failed to deliver the full and proper supply of water stipulated for in the said contract, and that defendant (now plaintiff) has suffered the alleged or any damage. Wherefore plaintiff (defendant in reconvention) prays that defendant's (now plaintiff's) claim in reconvention be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff had withdrawn his claim, and the case had been set down by the defendant on his claim in reconvention.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Struben), for plaintiff. Mr. Burton, K.C. (with him Mr. Pohl), for defendant.

Mr. Burton, in reply to the Court, said that the whole claim in reconvention was for the 2½ inches pipe supply of water, and for £100 damages for past failure to supply this. Defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) claimed specific performance of contract, and there was an alternative claim for damages.

Johan G. B. Schwartz, the defendant in the case and plaintiff in reconvention, gave evidence as to the arrangement entered into in 1902 with Burger, and in regard to the disposal of the water. He described the subsequent efforts made to obtain further water. In March, 1903, witness agreed with Burger that the latter should pay him £150, and that in consideration of this witness should give up the right to have the dam on Burger's ground. It was much more difficult to make a dam on witness's property than to make one on Burger's ground, and Burger agreed to give him £36 on account of the extra expense. After the completion of the dam, Burger did not pay the £36, and witness, instead of that, claimed the piece of ground belonging to Burger, upon which he trespassed in the making of the dam. Burger never admitted this claim. Witness had neither got the £36 nor the £150. The witness gave evidence in detail relative to subsequent work and agreements, and specified the damage which he had suffered on account of not having sufficient water.

Willem Hamilton, farmer, of Worcester, said that in 1903 and 1904 he resided on Burger's farm. On the piece of ground he leased there was a small spring of water which he used for his gardens. He gave up the spring to Mr. Burger in February, 1904. Mr. Burger then told him that he had sold land to Mr. Schwartz with the right to 2½-inch pipe of water. Burger was under the impression that he could get the water from Wolfardt's. The witness indicated the position of the spring on a plan. Burger employed witness to open up the spring, but they got very little more water thereby. Witness tested the flow by means of a hole in a plank. The hole was made by his son-in-law. The water filled about three-quarters of the hole. It was sometimes less, but never more.

In cross-examination, the witness said he was not told to measure the water. He did not know how much water was there. He told his son-in-law to make a 2½-inch hole in the plank. Mr. Burger had asked him whether he would be able to find a 2½-inch pipe of water. He told Burger it was a 2½-inch hole. The hole was a round one.

Further evidence was called for the defendant (plaintiff in reconvention), in the course of which it was stated that Burger had given instructions to measure a 2½ inch pipe of water. In order to ascertain the yield of a certain spring on Burger's property, a plank was used in which a circular hole 2½ inches in diameter was used. A neighbour of the parties named Wolfardt said that at the time of the sale by Burger to Schwartz, Burger approached him with a view to buying a certain spring. Burger said he would measure the water by putting a plank in the furrow and cutting a hole in the plank of $2\frac{1}{2}$ inch breadth.

Evidence was given by Dirk Meiring, farmer, of Worcester, and member of the Worcester Water Board; George Wm. Gie, farmer, and member of the Water Board, and others, on the point of the loss caused through the lack of water and the depreciation of the property thereby, and also with regard to the customary meaning of a $2\frac{1}{2}$ inch supply. It was stated that it was an accepted custom that $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches of water meant a $2\frac{1}{2}$ inch pipe—a pipe with a diameter of $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

In cross-examination, Mr. Meiring said that he did not know of any cases in which water was measured by a rectangular-shaped measure. When water was sold, the idea of the parties was to have a pipe measurement. He had seen divisions made through round holes. Mr. Wright, engineer, said that in his experiences in connection with irrigation works, he had found that it was understood that $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches of water meant a supply through a pipe with a diameter of $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

For the plaintiff (defendant in reconvention), a former tenant of Schwartz, named Van der Merwe, was called. He said that on one occasion, after the visit of an engineer, Schwartz said to him, "I have enough water, but I want to see what I can get." Mrs. Van der Merwe gave corroborative evidence.

John Brown Ellis, an engineer, residing at Worcester, stated he was instructed by Mr. Burger to go to De Doorns and go over the property of plaintiff and take particular note of the water he was supplying to Mr. Schwartz. He returned and made a survey of the place, and put in plans of some. He accurately surveyed the fountains and the pipe lines. There was no construction to prevent waste. The water was not properly kept nor saved. He found about 8 gallons of water per minute at the outflow. There was a continuous flow of water.

Stephanus Klopper, a retired farmer, who had farmed for many years in the Over Hex, said: By $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches of water, farmers understood that it meant the quantity of water that would pass through two single inch pipes and a half-inch pipe, and not through a pipe of $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches' diameter, as that would mean nearly five inches of water. He measured the water in dispute on November 1, and found about three inches of water.

Witness, in cross-examination, thought Schwartz had paid a good price for the farm, with a five inches supply of water, as he measured it. He always measured the water with round inch holes.

In reply to the Court, the witness said many farmers in the district had more than five inches of water. Two-and-a-half inches of water would not be of much use to a farmer.

Schalk Johannes Rabie gave corroborative evidence.

An appraiser named Ländenberg gave evidence in support of Burger, to the effect that he presumed the parties themselves would understand what was meant by $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches. They would have a definite understanding on it.

In cross-examination, the witness said he never knew farmers to sell water by the inch for irrigation purposes.

In re-examination, he said farmers usually sold by time.

Schalk G. Burger, the defendant in reconvention, said he had lived for 22 years at the place in question. He became owner of the farm in 1901, shortly before he sold the piece to Mr. Schwartz. Vermullen was negotiating to hire the portion of the farm purchased by Schwartz from witness, before it was sold. There was a man named Smitten farming there, before witness became owner. He wanted to hire the ground in question. Witness tried to get water from Wolfaard, but was unsuccessful. Mr. Wolfaard was mistaken when he said witness said he wanted the water for Schwartz. Witness showed Schwartz where the water was to come from. He did so before the contract was signed. The contract was drawn up on the authorisation of witness and Schwartz by Mr. Bland. Witness showed Schwartz where the dam was to be constructed. Witness never agreed that the dam should be erected where Schwartz said it was. Witness denied that he promised Schwartz £150 to change the site of the dam. Witness used to allow Schwartz to draw water from his dam for almost a year, until his own was completed. When Schwartz erected his dam, the ground was not fenced. Witness denied that he agreed to pay Schwartz £36 in consideration of his having built the dam on his own ground. He gave him a piece of ground equivalent in extent to the piece used for the dam. Witness had no idea that the water should pass between a $2\frac{1}{2}$ -inch pipe, he thought it should pass between two single-inch pipes and a half-inch pipe.

In the course of cross-examination, Mr. Burger said he did not know what Schwartz thought of the means of measuring. Witness had often seen water measured in the way he suggested. He saw it at Robertson on his father's farm. Witness could not say what the dispute was on that occasion, but he saw the water measured by a rectangular hole. He did not remember any other cases. In witness's part of the country they conveyed water by pipes. The water was measured in a square hole.

Witness denied that the arrangement was for water coming through a 2½-inch diameter pipe. The stream of water through a 2½-inch rectangular hole would be very small. The ground Schwartz purchased would require a lot of irrigation. Witness could not say how much of the ground Schwartz had irrigated. Witness denied having asked Hamilton to give up the spring. He did not ask either of them to open up the spring, to see if they could get enough water to fill a 2½-inch hole. He just asked them to open up the fountain. He could not say how it was that the water was measured through a 2½-inch hole. He did not place the board in the furrow. Hamilton took him the plank, and he threw it away. The evidence that he went to see the water running through the plank was incorrect. Witness and a young man named De Vos, now resident in the Transvaal, measured the water with a plank he made himself. It was measured at the intake, and the two supplies together were measured. Witness could not say if Hamilton knew about this. Soon after the pipes were laid, Schwartz began to complain that he was not getting the proper quantity of water. It would be about a year. Witness did not remember having told Schwartz that he had measured the water. Schwartz had a zinc plate, with a 2½-inch hole in it, across the furrow. Witness did not speak about it when he saw it. Witness took an engineer out to measure the water. The engineer was now in America. Schwartz made his dam about the beginning of 1904. Witness agreed to have the intake cemented, but not on the understanding that he would get a supply from Wolfaardt. Up to the time the springs were opened, Schwartz got water from witness's dam. He gave it whenever Schwartz asked for it. He did not do it only when he could spare it. Witness had not a large supply of water, but he did not irrigate very much land. The water given to Schwartz was led through a 5-inch pipe. That was in 1904, but since then he had cultivated largely, and could not spare any water now. Witness contended that he had fulfilled the terms of the contract.

In re-examination, witness said he made the agreement with Smeeten, and not with Hamilton. He never agreed with Schwartz that the water was to be through a 2½-inch pipe. When the engineer went to the farm it was shortly after witness heard that Schwartz was claiming the 2½-inch pipe supply. Witness took up the position that he had done all he should do, after he received the report from Lewis. Witness never refused water when it was required. The bond passed by Schwartz in favour of witness for £1,900 had the condition that the capital should not be called up before 1906; £1,100 was written off in September. Witness could not say how it was that Schwartz paid before the money was due.

Further cross-examined by Mr. Burton, witness said he did not ask Schwartz to advance him money.

Postea (November 25th).

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff sold to the defendant on the 12th day of July, 1902, the lower portion of his farm, De Doorns, and further agreed that the buyer should have the right to construct a dam in the seller's ground and in a spot indicated by him within a superficial area of 22,500 square feet. The next clause I shall give in the original Dutch, because some question might be raised as to its exact equivalent in English: "De verkoper verbindt zich hierbij den koper te verschaffen met een twee on een half duim water." The translation of this annexed to the plea is: "The seller binds himself to provide the buyer with two and a half inches of water." If this were the true translation there might be little difficulty in construing its meaning, but it seems to me to be a rendering somewhat too free. Mr. Landenberg, one of the witnesses, who is a sworn translator, gave it as "a two and a half-inch water," and "a two and a half-inch supply of water." This appears to be more accurate. The first rendering would bear the meaning that the quantity of water supplied should be measured by a flow through three orifices, two of an inch diameter, or an inch square, and one of half an inch diameter, or half an inch square; these orifices forming cross sections perpendicular to the level flow of the water. The latter rendering creates the difficulty of construction in this case, upon which the main issue between the parties rests. The defendant states in his plea that under the above stipulation the plaintiff bound himself to supply the defendant with a two and a half-inch (pipe of) water, but the supply furnished, though it has been used for a considerable period, proved insufficient to fill a two and a half-inch pipe. The defendant, upon the ground that the words in the contract are uncertain in their meaning, and require explanation from extrinsic evidence, tendered in the first place evidence to prove that by custom and usage the words in the contract had acquired amongst farmers a special and peculiar meaning, and that the contract was to be construed by the light of such usage. This evidence was objected to on behalf of the plaintiff, but upon my suggestion, when it appeared that both parties were prepared with evidence upon the point, the evidence was admitted. Strictly taken, it seems to me, where a party intends to raise such a contention as the defendant relies upon, the existence of the alleged usage or custom should be pleaded. Whether the words in a contract are ambiguous or not, it is open to a party to show that in a certain business, trade, or locality they have acquired in dealings a special or peculiar meaning different from their ordinary or popular signification. Now, upon the evidence there appears to me to be little difficulty in disposing of this part of the case. The variety of opinion expressed by the witnesses goes to prove that no general or universal custom or usage exists in the district in question, or anywhere, which has given a definite and peculiar meaning to the words in question. The evidence of the engineer is of the most meagre character, consisting of casual conversations with farmers. The evidence of the farmers only proves that in disputes between farmers certain means are employed in measuring the water, and no particular words or terms of agreement have come up constantly in dispute for decision so as to have given by usage a peculiar or local signification to those words. And the mode of measurement spoken to by the witnesses vary greatly. Under the circumstances the words in question, if capable of construction, must be construed irrespective of any custom or usage. There is no proof that "a two and a half inch supply of water" has come by usage to mean a supply of water that will flow through a perpendicular circular orifice of two and a half inches diameter, with a sufficient head of water to give a full flow through the orifice. But then the defendant tendered evidence of another character to prove that the parties actually intended that the supply of water should be measured in that manner. This evidence consisted of conversations, declarations, and acts of the parties at the time of the agreement and thereafter. Objection was also raised to the admissibility of this evidence, and here again upon my suggestion the legal point was reserved and the evidence admitted. The evidence upon this point is mainly the statement of defendant that at the time of the agreement it was arranged that he was to get a two and a half inch pipe of water; that of Wolfardt, who says the plaintiff told him in conversation that the water was to be measured through a two and a half inch pipe; and the evidence of Hamilton, that at the request of the plaintiff he had a round hole of two and a half inches diameter made in a plank to measure the flow of the water. It was contended that this evidence was admissible under the principle of law that parol evidence may, in all cases of doubt, be adduced, explain the written instrument, or, in other words, to enable the Court to discover the meaning of the terms employed, and to apply them to the facts; as it is expressed in Taylor on Evidence, section 1,168. Now, assuming that this is a case in which extrinsic evidence is admissible to explain the document, then it remains to consider what kind of evidence is admissible for this purpose. Powell, in his work on Evidence, 8th edition, page 383, says: "In almost all cases where extrinsic evidence has been received to explain written evidence, it will appear that it had been received, not in form of declarations of intention by the parties, but in the form of collateral and surrounding facts, which, like every other species of presumptive evidence, may reasonably be connected with the substantial issue, and so form data to aid the Court or jury. They must be related to the written evidence, and yet independent of it. They must not be personal declarations of a party, but distinct incidents, which may be presumed to have been present to the mind of the party, without wearing the suspicious form of oral statements." We find the following passage in Taylor, section 1,193: "It, further, almost seems that when a written agreement is expressed in short and incomplete terms, or contains words of indeterminate signification, witnesses present at the time of its being made, may be called to explain that which is per se unintelligible; such explanation not being inconsistent with the written terms. Even conversations between the parties when the contract was being made, have, on one or two occasions, been received, in proof of the sense which they attached to the ambiguous expressions. The principle of these cases is, however, not very clear, and no great weight should be attached to them." The cases here referred to by Taylor are chiefly American cases, and we have the view of an American writer upon this point, written after the cases were decided. Parsons, in his work on Contracts, in section 564, says: "If the meaning of the instrument, by itself, is affected with uncertainty, the intention of the parties may be ascertained by 'extrinsic testimony.' Then he adds in a note upon the passage: "This intention, of course, is to be ascertained, in all cases, except that of latent ambiguity proper, by a development of the circumstances under which the instrument was made. It cannot be ascertained by bringing forward proof of declarations or conversations which took place at the time the instrument was made, or before, or afterwards. After considerable confusion caused by some anomalous early cases, the law upon this point, especially in reference to wills, is clearly settled in England." It is quite clear from these authorities that evidence of statements made by the plaintiff at the time of making the contract or thereafter is not admissible to explain the meaning of words used in the written agreement, or the intention of the parties. But it may be said in this case we have more than mere declarations, we have the conduct of the parties in the employment by them subsequently of boards with round holes of $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter to measure the water. But the incidents and circumstances of which proof is admitted according to the authorities are such as existed at the time the agreement was made, and thus influenced the parties, not matters which occurred after the contract was concluded. The Court must therefore construe this contract without the aid of custom or usage, or the declarations of parties. Now, although the words used in the contract give rise to some difficulty of construction, it cannot be said that they are incapable of having a distinct and definite meaning annexed to them. The document speaks of water as being measured by inches. In estimating the volume of water passing in a stream, when not possessed of the means of ascertaining the quantity produced in any given time, one would naturally think of the dimensions of the stream and the rate at which it is flowing. The dimensions would naturally be taken as the depth and breadth of the stream, and as from time to time this primitive way is employed to measure streams of no large volume, but varying in size, some unit of measurement would suggest itself. Considering the usual size of the streams in this country, this unit would not be a large one, and accordingly the unit of one inch would be taken, as it actually has been taken. Now, to my mind, the Court is entitled to look to such extrinsic circumstances as these to aid it in ascertaining the intention of the parties. Having once adopted the unit of one inch, it would follow that in speaking of a number of inches in a contract the parties must be taken to intend a multiple of this unit. The language cannot be construed in the sense contended for by the defendant; that is, to take the number of inches mentioned as signifying the diameter of a pipe carrying the water. We must bear in mind that the inch unit of measurement was in use long before pipes came into common use. I take the words, "The seller binds himself to provide the buyer with a two and a half-inch supply of water" to mean the quantity of water which will flow through three orifices, two of an inch diameter or square, and one of half an inch diameter or square. These orifices being taken separately and in one, and sufficient head being allowed to give a free flow. The parties seem themselves to understand clearly the operation of this necessary head of water. It might have been a question whether square or round orifices should be used, but the plaintiff being willing to give the defendant the benefit of a single rectangular orifice one inch in height and $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches in length, it is not now necessary to discuss that point. That quantity of water has in the past been supplied by the plaintiff to the defendant, and no breach of contract has been proved. Judgment must be given for the defendant in reconvention upon the claim in reconvention, with costs.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C. K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSION.

{ 1907.
{ Nov. 5th.

Mr. Roux moved for the admission of Rubin Hermann Brande as an attorney and notary. Counsel explained that the applicant was articulated as Hermann Brande, but his real name was Rubin Herman Brande.

The application was granted.

MALONY V. MALONY.

In this action the plaintiff, Ann Elizabeth Malony, of Wynberg, sought an order for the restitution of conjugal rights against her husband, failing which a decree of divorce.

The plaintiff's declaration stated she was married in Bradford in 1901, after which she came to South Africa. In 1904, respondent deserted her, and had failed to provide for her.

Mr. W. Douglas Buchanan appeared for applicant.

The plaintiff, Ann Elizabeth Malony, stated she was married to defendant at St. Clement's Church, Bradford, England, in July, 1901. She produced a copy of her marriage certificate. The original had been mislaid. Witness's husband came to South Africa in May, 1902, to work with her brothers, who were in business in Cape Town. Witness followed him in the following September. She resided in Cape Town for a time, and then went to reside at Wynberg, where there was a branch business. She came back to reside in Cape Town, but subsequently returned to Wynberg. Her husband was unsatisfactory at his work, and her brother could not keep him.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did he drink?]

Witness: Not much.

Mr. Buchanan: No, my lord, they complained of the way he carried out the duties entrusted to him in a laundry business.

Witness, continuing, said her husband went to England in September, 1904, and she had only heard from him three times since.

In reply to the Court, the witness stated that she had not written to her husband, asking him to return to her. There was one child of the marriage, of which she asked charge. There was no property in the estate.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have you written to him?]

Witness: I wrote in reply to all his letters.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I see he complains in one letter here that you have not written for over a month.]

An order for the restitution of conjugal rights on or before January 12, was granted. The return day was fixed for February 1, when proper proof will have to be given of service of the summons, and the original marriage certificate produced.

HILL V. HILL.

In this action Lucy Hill sought a decree of divorce against her husband, James Hill, on the grounds of adultery.

The plaintiff's declaration stated she was married to defendant on June 29, 1898, in community of property, at St. Oswald's, Cornwall. There was no issue of the marriage. Defendant had committed adultery in 1905, 1906, and 1907 with one Annie Lambe.

Mr. Toms appeared for applicant.

The applicant stated that two days after her marriage, her husband left her to come to South Africa. For some time he allowed her £2 a month, but when this stopped she wrote out to his employer, and found that he was living with a woman by whom there was one child.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you know when he married you that he was going to leave you in two days?]-Yes.

[Why did you not come with him?]-I had no money.

[Did you know he had no money when you married him?]-Yes.

Doctor Wood stated he attended the reputed wife of James Hill during her confinement.

James Christie, an attorney, stated he served the declaration on defendant, who admitted that applicant was his wife, and that he had committed adultery with Annie Lambe, and that he had been living with her as Mrs. Hill.

The order was granted, with costs, the defendant to supply the plaintiff with £3 per month, the first payment to be made on December 1.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte VAN DE VENTER. { 1907.
 { Nov. 5th.

Mr. Payne moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Granted.

Ex parte SWART.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for applicant, and Mr. Alexander appeared for respondent.

Mr. De Villiers explained that a rule nisi had been granted, calling on the respondent to show cause why the executor of the estate of Daniel Swart should not be interdicted from paying over any portion of the inheritance to the respondent, and why Abelkop and Bailowitz should not be restrained from paying over to the respondent any money due by them.

There was no proof that the rule had been served on the executor and on Abelkop and Bailowitz.

Counsel read further affidavits made by applicant against respondent, alleging adultery and prodigality, and alleging that if this money was placed in his hands he would spend it all. She was bringing an action against him for judicial separation.

In replying affidavits, the respondent denied the allegations of adultery and prodigality, and stated he had asked the applicant to return to him, and he would maintain her.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: I understand applicant, in an action, claims not only the division of the joint estate, but also the maintenance of herself and children, and it is quite clear, therefore, that full justice might not be done if the Court merely prohibited payment of the half of the proceeds of the sale. It may be that the applicant may show in the action she is instituting that she is entitled to more than one-half. Moreover, if the respondent did sell this property at a gross undervalue, it may be a question whether that would not be sufficient ground for her claiming more than half the price realised. The respondents Abelkop and Bailowitz have received notice of this application, and have not appeared, and therefore do not seem interested in the passing of the transfer. My own view is that at the trial we may learn all the circumstances of that sale, and I do not see that any injustice will be done if the transfer is delayed until the action is decided. The Court will therefore make the rule absolute, and the interdict to continue pending the result of an action by applicant against respondent for a judicial separation, the costs to go by result.

KRAITZICK V. ARLOSOROFF.

Partners—Good faith—Interdict.

It is not the practice of the Court to interfere between partners by interdict, unless it is proved that there has been want of good faith, or conduct contrary to agreement between the partners.

This was the return day of a rule nisi interdicting one Arthur Ettlinger from parting with certain funds in his possession, pending an action to be brought. The present application was to make the rule nisi absolute.

The applicant's declaration set forth that he had advanced the respondent £20 to purchase a certain quantity of iron. The iron was purchased by Ettlinger for £26 15s., and applicant applied for the return of his £20 and half-share of the profits, and statement of accounts, which he had not received. Therefore this application was made to restrain Ettlinger from parting with certain moneys in his possession, pending an action. It was further alleged that the respondent intended leaving the Colony, and that he was not solvent.

The respondent's plea stated that he did not intend to leave the Colony, and he was perfectly solvent, and that he intended defending the action that might be brought.

Mr. Howse appeared for applicant, and Mr. Toms for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: I had considerable doubts whether this order should be granted, but there was a statement on the original affidavit that the £20 had not been returned to the applicant. There was a statement that the applicant asked repeatedly for a statement of account, and that the respondent had failed to render it. There was a definite statement that as soon as he had received payment from Ettlinger he was going to Johannesburg, or about to leave the country; and, further, there was the definite statement that Ettlinger had bought the iron from the respondent. The affidavits now put in place an entirely different complexion on the matter. There is no proof that he is going to hurry away out of the country. In the first transaction it was agreed that there should be further transactions. It also appears that Ettlinger has not bought this iron, as there is a dispute about the purchase, and if that is so, I am not prepared to make the rule absolute. It is not the practice of the Court to interfere by interdict between partners, unless the Court is satisfied that the partner against whom the interdict is sought has acted in a manner contrary to good faith or to the agreement between the partners.

Ex parte RUDMAN.

Mr. Lewis moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property in which minors were interested. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE BASSON.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the appointment of a commission in insolvency.

Order granted, the Resident Magistrate of the Paarl to be commissioner.

Ex parte ESTATE BOYES.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for leave, on behalf of the executors of the estate of the late Cornelius Boyes, to mortgage certain property.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte BEHR.

Mr. De Waal moved, on behalf of Johannes Behr, to assume the death of Amos Behr, his father, 27 years ago.

Counsel read affidavits, stating that Amos Behr left Bredasdorp in 1880 to work on the railway between Worcester and Beaufort West, and was reported by a friend to have died of hemorrhage.

Order granted.

DE CLERK V. DU TOIT.

Dr. Greer appeared for applicant, and Mr. Stowe watched the case.

Dr. Greer moved to have an arbitration award made a rule of Court. Granted.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE { 1907.
DU PLESSIS. { Nov. 6th.

Mr. Roux moved as a matter of urgency on behalf of certain creditors in the insolvent estate of David Johannes du Plessis for the appointment of a provisional trustee. The crops in the estate were ripening, and if they were not gathered without delay the creditors would suffer great loss. It was suggested that Jacob Isaac de Villiers, A.P., son, of Paarl, should be appointed as provisional trustee, with power, if necessary, to engage labourers to gather the crops.

Order granted.

THOMSON V. ZUID AFRIKAANSCH RIJ-TUIGEN BOUW MAATSCHAPPIJ, LTD.

This was an action brought by Wm. Charles Thomson, an importer and manufacturers' representative of Cape Town, to recover from the defendants £92 13s. 11d., £10, £1 16s., and 18s., in respect of certain goods supplied.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. Plaintiff is William Charles Thomson, an importer and manufacturers' representative carrying on business at Cape Town; defendant is a company with limited liability duly registered under the Company's Act (25 of 1892), and carrying on business at Huguenot, in the division of Paarl.

2. Plaintiff is the representative within this colony of several English firms, for manufacture builders' requisites, and samples of whose wares he keeps in stock.

3. During and between the months of January and July, 1907, plaintiff supplied to the defendant company on the order of their duly authorized agent, one Laurysen, goods to the value of £394 10s. 3d. sterling, in respect of which the defendant company has paid £271 17s. 8d. sterling, and received various allowances and discounts amounting in all to £29 18s. 8d. sterling, leaving a balance of £92 13s. 11d., due and payable by defendant company to plaintiff.

4. Certain locks supplied by plaintiff to defendant company among the aforesaid goods proved not to be in accordance with the order, and plaintiff undertook to replace the said locks by others of the required type, and did actually so replace them. Prior, however, to the arrival of the locks of the required type, the defendant company without the knowledge or permission of the plaintiff placed the locks first supplied temporarily in a building which they were constructing; there the said locks remained until replaced by the new locks. The locks first supplied were returned to plaintiff by defendant company in such a condition owing to incompetent handling, bad treatment, and improper packing by the defendant company, that plaintiff has suffered loss and damage thereby in the sum of £10 sterling, for which he says that the defendant company is liable.

5. Certain two of the locks replaced as aforesaid were not returned by defendant company to plaintiff, and plaintiff claims in respect thereof the sum of £1 16s. sterling.

6. Plaintiff also, at the request of the defendant company, sent certain fanlight cords to replace cords that had been originally sent, and defendant company has failed to return twelve of the fanlight cords so replaced, the value whereof plaintiff says is 18s., for which plaintiff says that defendant company are liable.

7. Plaintiff says that the defendant company has refused or neglected, and still refuses or neglects, to pay the aforesaid sums of £92 13s. 11d. sterling, £10 sterling, £1 16s. sterling, and 18s., though frequently requested so to do.

Wherefore plaintiff claims: (a) Judgment against defendant company in the sums of £92 13s. 11d. sterling, £10 sterling, £1 16s. sterling, and 18s. (b) Interest a tempore morae. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

The defendants' plea was as follows: (1) The defendants admit paragraphs 1 and 2 of the plaintiff's declaration. (2) As to paragraph 3 thereof, they say that between the said months the plaintiff sold and supplied to the defendants goods amounting to the total price of £304 10s. 3d. and no more. The plaintiff also forwarded to the defendants certain coat and hat hooks priced at £90 in the plaintiff's accounts but the defendants not having ordered or purchased the same, returned the same to the plaintiff. Defendants deny that the said Laurysen has ever ordered or ever had authority to order any goods on defendants' behalf. (3) The defendants say further that the item of £4 15s. in the account annexed to the declaration is incorrect, and should be £7, and that the plaintiff has omitted to credit the defendants with an item of 8s. 9d., being an allowance of 10 per cent. on £4 7s., the difference in price of 116 fanlight cords, by reason whereof it will appear that there is no balance due to the plaintiff in respect of the transactions referred to in paragraph 3 of the declaration. (4) As to paragraph 4, defendants say that the locks as supplied were placed in the said building with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, and by the instructions of the architect Hesse, who had authority to give such instructions on behalf of the plaintiff and binding on the plaintiff. The defendants deny the allegations of incompetent handling, bad treatment, and improper packing, and deny plaintiff's alleged damages. (5) Defendants admit paragraph 5, and say that before the declaration was filed they tendered the said sum of £1 16s., with costs, and hereby repeat the said tender, with costs to date hereof. (6) As to paragraph 6, they say they returned all the said fan-light cords, but nevertheless hereby tender the said sum of 18s., with costs. (7) The defendants admit paragraph 7, save as to the tenders hereinbefore pleaded. Wherefore, subject to the said tenders, the defendants pray that the plaintiff's claims be dismissed with costs.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Upington (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) was for the defendants.

Wm. Chas. Thomson, the plaintiff, stated that he kept a certain amount of goods in stock, and a number of samples from which he took orders. He remembered on December 31 having had a transaction with Mr. Laurysen, on behalf of the defendant company, for locks and hat and coat hooks. Witness produced a copy of the order which Laurysen gave for the defendant company. The articles had been approved of by Mr. Hesse. Laurysen knew that the articles were not in stock. Some time after the 31st December a letter was received from the defendant company referring to the price as a quotation, although witness was positive it was a definite order. At the same time Mr. Laurysen ordered other goods for the defendant company, which were accepted. The locks had been left in heaps of dirt and dust by the defendants, and some of them would not answer to the key. They could only be disposed of as scrap iron. He thought the defendants, having had permission to put on these locks, extra care should have been taken with them. If they had been put on by an ordinary tradesman and taken off by an ordinary tradesman there would have been no marks of damage.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He was the agent for the persons who supplied the coat and hat hooks. He considered he received an out-and-out order from Laurysen. When he received the letter from the manager of the defendant company he did not take any steps to cancel the order by cable, which he could have done. Witness took up the position that the locks originally supplied by him were according to order, and in supplying locks with rollers instead of springs he was doing an act of grace. His explanation of paragraph 4 of the declaration was that there was nothing special said when this order was given whether the locks were to be spring bolts or roller bolts. In another building at Stellenbosch there were roller bolts supplied previously, and Mr. Hesse said he would like to have them all the same, but in giving the order Mr. Laurysen said nothing about the kind of locks, and witness took it ordinary spring bolts were required. Mr. Roux did not previously explain to witness the class of locks required.

Dr. Greer closed his case.

Francois Gerhardus Roux, manager of the defendant company, stated the company contracted for the erection of the Bloemhof Girls' School at Stellenbosch. They disputed the claim for £90 for certain coat and hat hooks. Mr. Hesse had in his office samples of the coat and hat hooks required. In December witness gave no one instructions to order coat and hat hooks. Witness saw the plaintiffs' manager in December at Stellenbosch. On 20th December witness wrote to the plaintiff whether he could not submit a cheaper set of locks. Witness, with Mr. Heddle, went to Mr. Hesse's office to see samples of the locks. It was suggested by Mr. Hesse that Heddle should proceed to Stellenbosch and interview the foreman carpenter to get all the particulars in regard to the right and left locks and the different sizes of the keys. The letter of 31st December reached witness on 14th January, after his usual holiday. Then he came to see Mr. Hesse for the purpose of making inquiries with regard to the hat and coat hooks. On reading the letter of 31st December, he did not consider an absolute order had been given for hat and coat hooks. The only order he had given was with regard to locks. As soon as he saw the locks, he repudiated them as not being according to contract. The course of dealing between witness and the plaintiff would be that witness would give verbal orders, and these would be confirmed in writing by the plaintiff. The foreman carpenter had no right to order material without special authority.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: It was necessary for Heddle to go to Stellenbosch to get particulars from the foreman carpenter as to the locks. The flush-bolts were ordered, together with the locks, in the office of Mr. Hesse. When witness was away, his bookkeeper did not deal any letters with penny stamps on them. He took the letter of the 31st December of the plaintiff to be a quotation. Thomson might have regarded the letter as an order, but witness looked upon it as a quotation. The locks were not put in before they were actually required. If the locks were only packed in shavings and paper, he could not explain how they became clogged with dirt.

Lambertus Laurysen, foreman carpenter at the Girls' School, Stellenbosch, last December, stated that he was not at present in the employment of the defendant. Mr. Roux gave him instructions to get the sizes of the locks for the building, and gave particulars to the plaintiff Thomson. He had no instructions at all to order coat and hat hooks on behalf of the company. Witness simply handed in the particulars to Mr. Thomson. Witness never at any time even discussed the subject of coat and hat hooks at all. The first set of locks upon arrival were not to Mr. Hesse's satisfaction. The manager later on told witness to put the locks in. Twelve working days were occupied in removing the old locks and putting in the new ones. Proper care was taken in the packing of the locks.

The witness Laurysen, under cross-examination by Dr. Greer, said he left the defendant company about ten weeks ago. When he saw the plaintiff on December 31, he mentioned only the locks. Mr. Heddle came down to Stellenbosch to get particulars of the locks, which witness was not able to supply. Witness never spoke a word about the 600 hat hooks. On the day when he visited Mr. Hesse's office, he could not say whether he went there for the purpose of looking at the plans, to find out which were right-hand and which were left-hand locks. Witness superintended the whole of the work of replacing the locks, and he saw that three men did an honest day's work during the time they were there. He did not believe the statement that some of the locks had been taken to pieces to make them work.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: He tried every lock before packing. He never gave any order for flush bolts, cords for fanlight openers, or hat and coat hooks.

Walter Hesse, who was architect for both the Boys and Girls' High Schools at Stellenbosch, said that the original specifications provided for 480 coat and hat pegs of one sort, and 120 hat pegs of a different pattern. Some time after the job was started, there was an alteration to 600 of the same pattern. Prior to December he had in his office a sample of the coat and hat peg which would be required, and this was furnished to him by another firm. On the occasion when Messrs. Roux and Heddle came to witness's office, witness said he wanted the same locks as those at the Boys' School, and as to particulars, witness referred Mr. Heddle to the foreman carpenter. Mr. Heddle was well aware that the class of lock was a roller bolt, and not a spring bolt. When witness saw the locks at Stellenbosch, he disapproved of them.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: He could not fix the date when Mr. Roux and Mr. Heddle came to his office. No order was given by Mr. Roux to Mr. Heddle in witness's office. He thought that 2s. 6d. a lock would well repay these people for the refitting.

Alfred John Wall, clerk of works at the Girls' High School, Stellenbosch, stated the foreman carpenter was a highly efficient man. The temporary locks were put on carefully, and they were replaced under witness's supervision. The foreman carpenter packed the old locks, and in witness's opinion, they were carefully packed. Mr. Heddle used to visit the works to get information with a view to orders.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: The dirt was not in the box when the locks were packed at Stellenbosch.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: This action is brought by an importer and manufacturers' representative, carrying on business in Cape Town. As such agent, he enters into contracts on his own behalf to supply goods to those who give him orders. The defendants are a building company, carrying on business at the Paarl, and at the beginning of this year a number of orders were given by the defendants to the plaintiff for goods to be imported from abroad. The declaration alleges that these orders were given by one Laurysen. Laurysen was the foreman carpenter of the defendant company. Mr. Hesse was engaged as the architect to supervise a building which was being erected at Stellenbosch by the defendants, and for which building the plaintiff was to supply the goods. Prior to December 31, Mr. Roux, manager for the defendant company, had discussed with plaintiff what goods would be required for the building then in progress. The samples of the different articles had been approved by the architect, and after considerable negotiations the architect seems to have approved of the quality and quantity of the different articles which the plaintiff could supply. Mr. Roux says that he gave the plaintiff an order for a number of things including certain locks, but said he would send definite information by his foreman, Mr. Laurysen. A considerable conflict of evidence as to what took place appears from the verbal evidence. Fortunately, in this case we have written documents, and these documents written at the time show what actually did occur. I accept the plaintiff's statement, and that of his manager, that prior to the placing of any order there was a discussion between Mr. Roux and the architect, Mr. Hesse, and the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was anxious to obtain the order, and Mr. Roux gave him to understand that he gave him the order, but would send his foreman to him to give details. On the 31st December the foreman came and placed the order with the plaintiff, and gave details. In accordance with the practice which had grown up between the parties where an order was given verbally, the plaintiff had to confirm it in writing. The plaintiff on the same day wrote to the defendants: "I beg to confirm the order given by your foreman of works, Mr. Laurysen, for locks and fittings for the school as per enclosed list." I must hold that this order was closed on that day by Laurysen. The defendants say that Laurysen had no authority to settle only for the locks, but he also ordered the other articles mentioned in the list sent to defendant's manager. He ordered the locks. These further articles were approved of by Mr. Hesso, and the fact that they had been ordered was communicated to the defendant at once. The defendants did not at any time repudiate the correctness of the statements of this letter. When the other goods so ordered arrived, they did not dispute their liability for them, but objected only to the coat and hat hooks. It is true the letter confirming Laurysen's order was sent to defendants on the 31st December, and holidays intervened. Mr. Roux says that he did not receive the letter until about the 14th January, and on the 18th January he wrote: "Please note we can purchase hat and coat-hooks approved by the architect for 2½d. less than your quotation." Now, why should he write "your quotation" in this letter, which says it was "an order given by your foreman of works as per list annexed"? There is no quotation given in this letter of any kind. What seems to be the case is that Mr. Roux, after receiving the letter of 31st December, came to Cape Town. He did not see the plaintiff or repudiate Laurysen's authority, but he then for the first time found that another firm was able to supply the 600 coat and hat hooks at 2½d. each lower than the price at which it had been ordered by Laurysen from the plaintiff. If Mr. Roux had not discovered this 2½d., I have not the slightest doubt there never would have been any question about this order which had been placed by his foreman. He gave the most lame excuse in the box for not writing to the plaintiff or going to see the plaintiff, and saying, "What business have you to send an indent to me for these goods? Laurysen had no right to order them." On the contrary, he said something about not liking to go to see the plaintiff because the plaintiff might take advantage of his visit. He did not while in Cape Town at any time repudiate the action of his foreman. I think the plaintiff had a perfect right to insist upon the contract which had been entered into, and which I think was previously authorised, or at least ratified, by the defendants when they received the intimation of December 31st, which they did not at once repudiate. I think the plaintiff is entitled to say: "Here are the goods which you ordered. They have now arrived, and now you must take them." I think the defendants cannot now say they never ordered these goods. There are several other small amounts in the account, but they have been agreed to between the parties, and if the defendant is obliged to take these hat and coat hooks, the amount due to plaintiff is the sum of £94 19s. There are two other items in dispute, and both arise out of the locks which were ordered. It appears that locks of a particular kind—locks with roller bolts instead of ordinary spring bolts, were required for these school buildings. The locks sent out had spring bolts, and when they arrived they were not approved of by the architect, as they were not what he wanted for the building. There was some correspondence about these things, and there is no doubt that the plaintiff afterwards authorised the architect to use these spring-bolt locks on the building temporarily, until he obtained locks with roller bolts. The locks were so used, and, unfortunately, the foreman carpenter was not told they were only there for a temporary purpose, and in some instances he seems to have filed a part of the striking plate, and fitted them to the doors in a way in which he would not have done had he known that the locks were to be used only temporarily. When the proper locks came out, the old locks were removed from the doors, and sent back to the plaintiff. There is no doubt that the locks have depreciated in value by their use, but this was a use permitted by the plaintiff, and probably with the express purpose of keeping on good terms with the defendants. I think the plaintiff, having permitted such use, unless there was a gross depreciation or wilful destruction, is not entitled to damages. One of the witnesses for the defendants said he could restore these locks to a saleable condition at a trifling cost. There is another question which arises out of the locks, and that is the expense incurred in taking off the one set of locks and putting on the new locks. The defendants say that this alteration of the locks cost them £7. Well, one might argue that as the defendants had been given the benefit of the use of these locks, they should set the use against the cost of changing the locks, but the plaintiff says he is quite willing to allow a reasonable sum for replacing the locks, and he allows 2s. 6d. each lock. After hearing Mr. Howard, the contractor, I must say that the tender of 2s. 6d. per lock is a very fair amount to allow in this case. Mr. Howard says it was not necessary to make any alteration in the woodwork of most of the doors, and he thinks 2s. to 2s. 6d. per lock a very fair charge. The defendant will be allowed £3 5s., and this will leave the amount still due to the plaintiff £94 19s., for which judgment will be given with costs.

PRIEST V. NESER. { 1907.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £500, with interest from the 6th November, 1906, and costs.

Order granted.

SCHULTZE V. THE MASTER { 1907.
AND ANOTHER. { Nov. 6th.
" 29th.

Claim to inheritance—Prima facie evidence of parentage—Proof of marriage—Register of marriage—British Kaffraria—Rule nisi.

On an application for an order directing the Master of the Supreme Court to pay to the executor of Martins certain sums in the Guardians' Fund, and for a further order directing the executor to pay the sums to the applicant as being the sole surviving child of Martins, it appeared that there was no register of the marriage of Martins to the applicant's mother and no register of the applicant's baptism, but there was evidence that the registers of births and marriages in British Kaffraria, where the parties resided, were very defective, more especially the registers kept by the minister who was alleged to have performed the marriage ceremony.

Witnesses deposed to the minister arriving to perform the ceremony, to the friends of the parties meeting at the residence of the bride, to the bride, who was a widow, telling her children that they should in future call Martins "father," to Martins and applicant's mother living together as husband and wife, and to the applicant being afterwards born of the union.

Held, that there was prima facie evidence that the applicant was the lawful child of Martins, but, in order to give any other possible claimants to the money an opportunity of asserting their claims, a rule returnable at a long date, to be extensively advertised, was granted, calling on all persons claiming to be heirs of Martins, to shew cause why the orders should not be made.

This was an application upon notice calling upon the first-named respondent to show cause why he should not be authorised to pay over to the second-named respondent, as executor of the estate of the late Leopold Martins (or Martens) two sums, amounting to £2,974, paid into the Guardians' Fund on the 28th October, 1887, and the 7th June, 1903, to the credit of the said Martins, and why Charlotte P. Schultz (wife of the applicant) should not be declared to be the sole heir of the said Martins.

The affidavits showed that applicant resides at Potsdam, in the district of East London. His wife was the daughter of the late Leopold Martins, and as such entitled to payment of the money standing in the name of Leopold Martins. It transpired that Martins came out to this colony as a member of the German Legion in 1857, and that the chief part of the funds had been derived from the sale, under the Derelict Lands Act, of a piece of ground in the "village of East London," which Martins had been granted a considerable number of years ago, and in which no one appeared to have taken any particular interest for some time. Martins was believed to have died in 1878 at King William's Town.

The Master had declined to pay over the money, in consequence of the evidence as to the identity of Mrs. Schultz being unsatisfactory. She had not produced either her own birth or baptismal certificate, or a marriage certificate of Leopold Martins.

Mr. McGregor, K.C., was for applicant. The Master was present. The second respondent did not appear.

Mr. McGregor read a number of affidavits and correspondence which had passed between the Master and the applicant's agent. This showed that there had been a good deal of confusion owing to the variety of names by which Martins had been known, and also owing to the fact that the death notice described Leopold Martins as unmarried.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The great difficulty seems to be that there is no certificate of the marriage of Martins.]

Mr. McGregor said that that was so.

De Villiers, C.J., raised the question of presumption of marriage where parties had lived together for some years.

Mr. McGregor cited Potter v. Potter (7 E.D.C., 143), Hoffman v. Hoffman (1 Menzies, 281), and Kemball v. Kembell (1 Menzies, 281). Counsel said that there did not appear to have been any registration laws in force in Kaffraria at the birth of applicant's wife. The only Ordinance he had been able to procure began in 1862, and this lady was born in 1860.

The Master (in answer to the Court) said that there were no other claimants to this money. The principal evidence was wanting in this case, seeing that there was no proof of marriage and no baptismal certificate of applicant's wife.

De Villiers, C.J., asked if counsel had authority with regard to the rights of an illegitimate child where there was a failure of claim by legitimate issue.

Mr. McGregor quoted Tennant, but said that there did not appear to be any authority for the propositions which Tennant laid down.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am not sure that the old Roman law was not more just than our law. If there is an illegitimate child and there is no claim by legitimate issue, I should think sooner than the Crown should take the money the illegitimate child should have it.]

Having heard counsel further,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 29).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application for an order authorising and directing the Master of the Supreme Court to pay over to the executor dative of the late Leopold Martins certain sums in the Guardians' Fund and, in effect, for a further order directing the executor to pay the money over to the applicant's wife as being the sole surviving child of the late Leopold Martins. The application was necessary owing to the Master having very properly refused to recognise the applicant's wife as the child of Martins upon such evidence as was submitted to him. That evidence has subsequently been supplemented by further evidence in support of the applicant's claim and, after carefully considering the matter, I am satisfied that there is prima facie evidence that Mrs. Schultz, the applicant's wife, was the only lawful child of the late Leopold Martins. The alleged marriage of Martins to the widow of one Liesenbergs took place about the year 1860, at Hanover, in the district of King William's Town. At that time British Kaffraria had not yet been annexed to the Colony, and the registers of births and marriages seem to have been very faulty indeed. The marriage is said to have been solemnised by the Rev. Mr. Opperman, who appears to have been particularly careless in the preparation of his registers of marriage and baptism. Several witnesses depose to such a marriage having taken place, and I attach some weight to the affidavit of Liesenbergs' son August, who at the time of Martins's alleged marriage to his (August's) mother, was about 9 years of age. He remembers a number of people assembling at the house of Martins, and his mother, after that, telling him to call Martins "father." Subsequently his mother gave birth to a female child, and died a few days after. A Mrs. Richter took charge of the child, and there can be no doubt that the child thus taken charge of by Mrs. Richter married the applicant in the present case. There is no register of the baptism of the child, but the child may never have been baptised, and even if she was baptised, the register may have shared the same fate as that of the marriage of the parents. Martins appears to have taken no notice of the child after he had entrusted her to the charge of Mrs. Richter, and at the time of his death in 1877, he and his daughter had been completely estranged. After his death, some property, at East London, registered in his name, was sold in order to pay the rates thereon, and realised about £3,000, which was paid into the Guardians' Fund. An executor had been appointed before this payment in to the Guardians' Fund, and the executor now consents to the application being granted. The applicant has a large family by his wife, and is anxious that the money should be paid over at once for their support, but as the case made out by him is, as I have said, only prima facie, some time must elapse before such payment can be made. Every opportunity must be given to any other next-of-kin of Martins to become acquainted with the applicant's claim, and, if need be, resist the same. The Court will therefore grant a rule nisi calling upon all persons claiming to be the heirs ab intestato of the late Leopold Martins or Martens, who died on the 29th of March, 1877, to show cause on the 14th of May, 1908, why the sums of £21 1s. 11d. and £2,952 19s. 2d., standing to the credit of the said estate in the Guardians' Fund, with the interest due thereon shall not be paid to the executor dative James Wellbeloved, and by him paid to the wife of the applicant, as being the only surviving child of the said Leopold Martins or Martens. This rule to be published once every month in English and in German in an English East London newspaper and an English King William's Town newspaper, as well as in a German newspaper, if any, circulating in King William's Town or in East London, and in such other manner as may be directed by the Master of the Supreme Court. The expenses of such publications to be paid by the Master out of the assets of the estate in the Guardians' Fund.

Ex parte ESTATE WATSON.

Mr. P. T. Lewis moved, on behalf of the widow of Francis Harold Watson, in whose estate she is one of the executors, for leave to cancel certain mortgage bond for £2,000 by paying the balance due thereunder, and to pass a fresh bond of £1,500.

Order granted as prayed.

Es parte INSOLVENT ESTATE DE WET.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, K.C., moved on the petition of the trustees in the insolvent estate of P. J. de Wet, a speculator, of Dordrecht, for the appointment of a commissioner to examine certain witnesses as to their dealings with insolvent.

Order granted appointing the R. V. of Dordrecht, or the officer acting as such, to be commissioner to examine the persons named in the petition, and such other witnesses as the applicants may think desirable.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

SCHOEMAN V. OLIVIER. { 1907.
Nov. 7th.

This was an action in which the plaintiff complained that the defendant constructed certain "schanzes," more especially "schanze" No. 6, in the bed of the Grobbelaars River, Oudtshoorn. The effect of these "schanzes" was to divert the flow of the river on to the plaintiff's property, which lay below that of the defendant. The plaintiff further complained that alongside the "schanze" No. 6 certain excavations had been made, which further tended to divert the flow of the river in the direction of the plaintiff's property, and plaintiff complained that these works had already done damage to his property, and as long as they continued to remain, they would threaten his property with further damage. He prayed for an order compelling the defendant to remove the obstruction and other works, and for an interdict restraining the defendant from continuing to make further obstructions of this sort, and for £1,000 damages.

Mr. Van Zyl (with him Mr. Louwrens) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. M. Bisset (with him Mr. Howes) was for the defendant.

The evidence had been heard at the Oudtshoorn Circuit Court.

Mr. Van Zyl, in the course of his argument for the plaintiff, cited McGregor v. Clanwilliam Divisional Council (15 S.C., 350), Kohne v. Harris (16 S.C., 144), Dickens v. Lake (Juta's Water Rights, p. 176), Jansen v. Van der Merwe (17 C.T.R., 449), Angell on Watercourses (p. 334), Menzies v. Breadalbane (3 Bligh's New Reports, 414), Rez v. Trafford (1 B. and Ad., 874), Fairham (Vol. 2), Brickett v. Morris (14 L.T., No. 835), Ewing v. Colquhoun (L.R., 2, Ap. Cases, 839), Withers v. Purchase (60 L.T.N.S., 819), Voet (1, 8, 9, 43, 15), and sec. 14, Act 32 of 1906.

Counsel having been heard further in argument,

Buchanan, J.: The Grobbelaars River takes its course through Oudtshoorn. The locus in quo of the present dispute is on the banks of the river between one of the streets called Bridge-street and a street lower down called Albert-street. The defendant has property on the west bank from Bridge-street to Albert-street, and the plaintiff has property from Bloem-street to Albert-street on the east bank. So the defendant's property is partly above and partly opposite the plaintiff's. The old course of the Grobbelaars River was to the west of its present flow. The diagrams and surveys on the east side show that what is the present flow is what was called by Ford in his diagram the branch of the Grobbelaars River. In 1847 there was apparently water flowing down this branch which passed outside or on the east of plaintiff's property, and crossed Bloem-street near the corner of Lot J. Ford's diagram pointed out the course and showed that the water entered exactly as indicated on Morkel's diagram. On the plaintiff's lots 293 and 294 there was some high ground, and Ford's old diagram showed water on both sides of this, but to the east of the old course. In 1869 there was a flood, and after that the old course was abandoned, and the water took the course of the branch. Morkel in 1874 surveyed the land between the then course of the old course, and cut it up into lots G, H, I, and J, extending from the bridge to Bloom-street, and all of it above the plaintiff's ground became the property of the defendant. Before 1905 the river entered the plaintiff's land across Bloom-street, where it enters it now, but perhaps a little to the east, and evidence has been given that at that time there was no flow to the west of the high ground on the plaintiff's land. The evidence also shows that the tendency of the flow was to cut into the land on the east. Before 1905 the plaintiff's father attempted to divert the stream to cause the water to flow to the west, so as to pass on the west instead of on the east of his high ground. In 1906 a flood took place, and the river took the new course intended by Schoeman, but after the flood subsided, the water again flowed to the east of the high ground. The effect of this was to change the course of the river a little above Bloom-street and to make it encroach on the defendant's land. The flood also washed away the high land on the island. The defendant has now put a number of "schanzes" on his own ground, numbered on the plan 5, 6, and 7. The declaration makes particular mention of 5, but it has been amended to apply to 6; 5 does not affect the defendant, and during the trial it was admitted that 7 did not either. Number 6 was made the boundary of the defendant's land; before it was placed there, J was high ground, higher than the "schanz" is at present, so the ordinary flow of the river was to the east of 6 before 1905. The plaintiffs contend that as the flood washed away the high ground of J, the defendant was not entitled to put up a "schanz" to reclaim that ground, and on that the argument was built up that as lot J was now the bed of the river the defendant had no right to erect anything there. Now, the Court is not prepared to hold that because the high ground was washed away the defendant could not go there and erect a "schanz"; the Court cannot hold that J is now the channel of the river. It is said that the river when in flood flowed over J, but in order to do that it would have had to rise much higher than to go over the "schanz." The river, as is common on the Karoo, has a very wide channel, and the water flowing in it is but a trickle. A freshet came down while the Court was at Oudtshoorn, and even then the whole channel was not covered with water, and it was only in cases of extraordinary floods that the water went beyond the ordinary channel. The only legal point in the case is, if the effect of the flood is to wash away, has the defendant any right to protect it by erecting a "schanz"? In this case the extension of the channel at high water does not prevent the defendant from protecting his bank. The "schanz" is not more than half the height of the old ground, and it cannot, therefore, deflect the water more than the old high ground did. The defendant has not followed the line of his diagram, but has built the "schanz" altogether on his own land, and has not infringed any right of the plaintiff's. The doctrine relied on by the plaintiff has been sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, which means: Use your own property so as not to infringe any other person's rights, and in this case none of the plaintiff's rights have been infringed. It is more the action of nature which has caused the river to gradually eat away more and more of the east bank than any act of the defendant's. Since 1874 it is doubtful if any water flowed to the west of the high ground, and the Court does not think that the action of the defendant caused any injury which would not have been caused if the "schanz" had not been built. The present flow of the river is not caused by the "schanz," and there has been no acquiescence by the defendant in the flow of the river created by the flood. Judgment will accordingly be for the defendant, with costs, including the costs of both the plans.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. CROOKE AND ASHBY.

Mr. Philipson Stow moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £120 2s. 3d., balance of account, due by defendants for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

LINDSAY V. LINDSAY.

This was an action brought by Anne Elizabeth Lindsay (born Wessels), of Ceres, against her husband, Harmon Wm. Lindsay, late of Boston, U.S.A., for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Marais was for plaintiff; Mr. Howes was for defendant.

It appeared that Mrs. Lindsay instituted an action against her husband for restitution of conjugal rights on the ground of alleged desertion. In her declaration, she said that defendant, in 1905, went to America, and had made no provision for her and the family.

Defendant filed a plea in which he denied that he had deserted the plaintiff, and said that he went away with her knowledge and consent. He further said that he had returned to this country, and had offered to live with the plaintiff as her husband, but that she declined to return to or receive him. He tendered to make irrevocable certain power of attorney granted by him to Mr. Muirhead in regard to property of his wife registered in his name, and to have at any time any person nominated by the plaintiff substituted instead of Mr. Muirhead. In re-convention, he claimed a decree of restitution against the plaintiff (now defendant), failing which a decree of divorce. He tendered custody of the children to his wife, subject to access being given to him at all reasonable times and places, and to leave being given to him to apply further hereunder should defendant's circumstances or condition be materially altered.

Plaintiff, in her plea to the claim in re-convention, denied the allegations of desertion, and prayed that her husband's claim may be dismissed, save in so far as it referred to custody of the children.

Mr. Marais for plaintiff. Mr. Howes for defendant.

Mr. Marais (in answer to the Court) said that he did not propose to call any evidence, the claim in convention by Mrs. Lindsay having been abandoned.

Mr. Howes said that the claim in re-convention was practically undefended.

Harman Wm. Lindsay (plaintiff in re-convention) was called. He said that he was married to the defendant at Kenilworth, in November, 1893, without community of property. They subsequently lived together at Claremont and Ceres. While they were living at a farm in the district of Ceres, owned by Mrs. Lindsay, witness's goods were put out of his room, and he was practically ejected. Mrs. Lindsay then went to reside at a boarding-house in Ceres. In 1906, witness left for America. When he heard that the action was being brought against him by Mrs. Lindsay, he at once came back to this colony. He had seen Mrs. Lindsay, and had endeavoured to effect a reconciliation, but she refused to live with him. There were four children of the marriage, all girls, their ages being 13, 11, 9, and 7 years. He was willing that the children should remain in the custody of his wife, provided that right of access was reserved to him. He had been employed as a teacher in America during the last two years, and had had to resign his appointment in order to come to the colony.

(By the Court: The only cause of disagreement, as far as he was aware, was that Mrs. Lindsay did not care to live with him.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant in re-convention to return to or receive the plaintiff in re-convention on or before the 8th November, failing which rule to issue calling upon defendant in re-convention to show cause on the 19th November why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and why plaintiff in re-convention should not have reasonable access to the children at all reasonable times and places, with leave reserved to him to apply to the Court for custody of the children. By consent, the Court also directed that an irrevocable power of attorney be granted by the defendant in convention, in terms of the 8th paragraph of his plea.

STELLENBOSCH UNDENOMINATIONAL COLLEGE AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS V. HOWARD.

This was an application upon notice to Thomas Howard, builder, Cape Town, to show cause why he should not be ordered to forthwith deliver up to applicants the Boys High School, Stellenbosch, erected by him in pursuance of a contract, upon payment of £2,994 7s. 1d. by applicants, in accordance with the architect's certificate, and why he should not pay costs of this application.

Applicants said that under the contract respondent bound himself, under penalties at the discretion of the architect, to complete and hand over the premises on or before the 1st March, 1907, that he had not yet given applicants possession of the premises, that they had tendered to him the sum of £2,994 7s. 1d. in accordance with the final certificate of the architect (Mr. Hesse), and that, in consequence of the delay of respondent in giving delivery to applicants, were suffering loss and damage in the hire of other premises, and so forth.

From the respondent's affidavits, it appeared that his attorney had made a proposal with a view to the abandonment of the present proceedings, respondent to deliver up the keys on payment of the amount certified by the architect, without prejudice to respondent's right to recover a further sum under the contract. The negotiations, however, broke down on the question as to who should pay the costs of the proceedings on motion, respondent refusing to make himself responsible for such costs. In his affidavit, respondent said he had good grounds for assailing the architect's certificate as invalid and not binding upon him, and that the defence must needs involve serious imputations against the architect, which it would be impossible to go into on affidavit. He said he was entitled to £1,250 over and above the figure certified by the architect.

Mr. McGregor, K.C., was for applicants; Mr. Watermeyer was for respondent.

Having heard Mr. Watermeyer,

De Villiers, C.J.: Prima facie the applicants are entitled to possession of the keys. The terms of contract state that payments are to be made on the architect's certificate, and the architect has certified that a certain sum of money, and that sum only, is due. The applicants have tendered that amount. The respondent refuses to accept it and hand over the key, because he has a claim of more than is certified by the architect, and he alleges practically that there was a want of bona fides on the part of the architect in not awarding to him the sums due. But at this stage the Court can only deal with the contract as it stands, and I consider that the respondent ought to hand over the keys upon payment of the amount, less the sum of £25, to meet the applicants' costs of this motion, in case they should be awarded in applicants' favour. The Court will, therefore, order that the respondent deliver to the applicants the keys of the building upon payment by the applicants to respondent of the sum of £2,994 7s. 1d., less £25 to meet the applicants' costs of this motion, in case they should be awarded in their favour, payment of the same not to prejudice the respondent in any action he may institute against applicants for further payments, costs of this application to be costs in such an action.

Ex parte HILLSDON AND HILLSDON.

Mr. Alexander moved, on the petition of William Ewan and Frederick Bethel D. Smith, carrying on business in Cape Town, as Hillsdon and Hillsdon, gun and ammunition makers and dealers, for leave to sue one Herbert William Hillsdon, believed to be residing in Birmingham, England, by edictal citation, and to attach ad fundandam jurisdictionem a certain sum of £12 10s. in petitioners' hands, instalment due by them to the respondent, under an agreement. Petitioners allege that they acquired the business of Hillsdon and Hillsdon, in Cape Town, and that respondent had undertaken in terms of an agreement not to trade in South Africa in gun and ammunition making and dealing. In breach of the agreement, they said, respondent had, under the style of Hillsdon and Hillsdon, Ltd., of Birmingham, been endeavouring to trade in South Africa in the said business. Petitioners proposed to institute an action against him for damages for breach of contract, and for an interdict restraining him from being interested, directly or indirectly, in gun and ammunition making and selling in South Africa.

Order granted as prayed, costs to be costs in the cause, citation returnable on the 12th January, 1908, with leave to serve intendit and notice of trial with citation, personal service to be effected, failing which service to be effected upon the secretary of Hillsdon and Hillsdon, Ltd., of Birmingham.

De Villiers intimated that on the return day there must be a clear proof, if personal service had not been made on respondent, that it could not be effected.

Order granted as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

WARD V. WARD.

{ 1907.
{ Nov. 8th

This was an action brought by George Ward, of Cofimvaba, against his wife Elizabeth Russell Ward, of Kimberley, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce.

The plaintiff in his declaration alleged that the defendant refused to live with him.

Defendant pleaded cruelty, and claimed in reconvention a judicial separation.

Mr. Long was for plaintiff; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, K.C. (with him Mr. Wallach), was for defendant.

Plaintiff, in his evidence, said that he was married to defendant in 1883. Prior to the marriage he lived at Willowmore, subsequently in Griqualand West. His son was born in December, 1885. They were then living at Hope Town, where they carried on business. His wife mismanaged the business, and unpleasantness took place as a consequence. In 1893 witness was appointed a sheep inspector at Umzimkulu. His life with his wife had never been happy. She had a violent temper. Owing to defendant's refusal, they had never lived together as man and wife since the birth of the child. In 1896 he went to see his wife; a reconciliation took place, and he took her to Kimberley. He had had a house built at Cofimvaba, but his wife refused to come and live with him. He again saw her in March, 1907, but she refused to have anything to do with him. He had endeavoured by kindness and everything else he could think of to induce defendant to live with him, but it was all in vain. He was prepared to take her back, provided she would live with him. She was very religious. The business at Hope Town had been purchased with his money, and witness had never had anything out of it.

Cross-examined: His wife was a delicate woman; he had been told about it before he married her. In 1890 his wife went to a hospital at Graham's Town. He had not struck her with a ledger when she came back from the hospital. In 1901 the defendant was in a violent temper; he put his hands on her shoulders to keep her quiet, but he had not struck her or assaulted her. He had always mended his own clothes: one day she had pulled an old "kapje" belonging to a Griqua woman out from under the bed, and asked him what it meant. He got angry with her then, and shook her, and turned her out of the room. He never swore at her.

For the defence, Mr. Buchanan called Elizabeth Russell Ward (the defendant), who said that when she married the plaintiff she had £85. The plaintiff had no farm when she married him. He left her soon after they were married. He did not come back to her till her son was born. He never gave her £600 to start business. He only gave her £20. Subsequently she got some money from her father, and she enlarged her business. She supported her husband out of the business. She was very ill for some time after that, and had to go to hospital. In 1890, when she returned from hospital, the plaintiff struck her with a ledger. On another occasion there was a quarrel about his swearing before her son, and then he took her and forced her backwards over the bed. On another occasion there was a quarrel because he was selling her goods under cost price, and then he put his knee into her side and struck her. She had to go to bed for a fortnight in consequence. She would never go back to live with him.

Cross-examined: She refused to live with the plaintiff because of the doctor's orders. Defendant ill-treated her in 1892 and he left her in 1892.

By the Court: She admitted having written letters to the plaintiff during the three following years. These were all couched in friendly terms. He had shown that he did not want to have her back.

Mr. Long (in answer to the Court) said that his client desired to obtain a divorce.

Buchanan, J., asked counsel to ascertain if his client would consent to a separation.

Mr. Long said that the plaintiff would leave himself in the hands of the Court.

John S. Ward (son of the parties) said that in Hope Town he saw his father push his mother across the foot of the bed, and heard her cry out. He remembered an occasion when plaintiff tried to push his mother out into the street. His father used to be very violent. Witness was very young when these incidents occurred. He had supported his mother more or less since he was 12 years of age.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. Long, in argument, cited Gibbon v. Gibbon (2 E.D.C.), and Heathershaw v. Heathershaw (1 Roscoe, 186).

Buchanan, J.: This is an action brought by the plaintiff (the husband) for an order of restitution of conjugal rights on the ground of malicious desertion, and, failing compliance with such order, a decree of divorce. He candidly admits that his ultimate object is to obtain a divorce, but he states that he is willing, if his wife will come back and conduct herself in a wifely manner towards him, to take her back and live together. There would be nothing in this statement of the husband which would justify the Court in refusing a decree, provided that malicious desertion was proved. But that is a point on which the plaintiff's case fails. The parties were married in 1885, and there is one son issue of the marriage. Since the birth of that child plaintiff's statement, which however the defendant does not corroborate, is that there has been no matrimonial intercourse. It is clear that soon after the marriage disputes did arise between the parties, and it is alleged that there was some cruelty shown by the husband to the wife. I think this cruelty has not been so excessive, or of such a nature as would alone justify the wife in refusing to return to her husband. As far back as 1892 the husband left the wife and went to live elsewhere. In 1893-4-5 affectionate letters were written by the wife to her husband, and in one of those letters she states that there is a home for him when he chooses to come. He did pay a very casual visit in between to the wife, but went away again, and afterwards, in 1896 and 1897, he wrote such letters as showed that his affection for his wife had completely gone; he talked about asking her to get a divorce, and made other statements, which justified her in concluding that he had no longer any feeling of affection for her, and she would not go and live with a man who has no feeling of affection for her. Under all the circumstances I do not think the Court is justified in holding that there has been malicious desertion on the part of the wife. I think it would be stretching the law too far, and that it would be an improper thing after the plaintiff's behaviour to grant him a decree of restitution. The defendant has asked for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty. I am not prepared to grant her prayer. She says that she would not have made this application but for having been brought into court. As there are no minor children in the case, I think it would have been judicious for the parties to agree to a separation. The defendant wishes a separation, and the plaintiff now states through counsel that he is willing to leave the matter in the hands of the Court. While, therefore, being unable to grant a restitution of conjugal rights, or on the evidence a decree of separation, by consent of parties. I will grant a decree of judicial separation. As the parties were married by ante-nuptial contract, and as each will retain his or her property, the decree will be limited to one of judicial separation. As to the matter of costs, the plaintiff has failed on the main issue, and, under the circumstances, although I make a decree of separation, the plaintiff will

should be amended to read: "the said children remaining in the meanwhile in the custody of the defendant in reconviction." Counsel said there was a power of attorney already in existence, and it would save expense if the present power of attorney were merely endorsed instead of a new one issuing.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What would it cost to have a new power?]

Mr. Howes: A sovereign stamp.

De Villiers, C.J.: The cost of this application is a good deal more than a guinea. I really think the power should be granted in proper form, and attached to the irrevocable power. To make assurance doubly sure, I shall make the other condition.

Ex parte FOURIE.

Dr. Greer moved, on behalf of the petitioner, for a rule nisi to act as an interdict calling on the respondent, Carl F. W. Grant, to show cause why he should not be restrained from interfering with the petitioner in his lawful use and enjoyment of a farm which he had purchased from the respondent.

Application granted, rule returnable on Tuesday next.

Ex parte TRUTER.

Mr. Swift moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of a curator bonis to administer the estate of Daniel Gerhardus Truter, of Hopefield. There was a solemn declaration by the wife of the petitioner that her husband was incapable of administering his property, and there was a consent by the respondent to the appointment of his wife as curator. There was a declaration by the Rev. Mr. Neethling, the D.R. Minister, of Hopefield, to the effect that the respondent was frequently drunk, and was not perfectly sound in mind when under the influence of liquor. In this state he recklessly squandered his money. Unless a curator was appointed he would in a short time squander his estate. In his proper senses he signified himself willing to his wife acting as curator bonis. Counsel cited the case of In re Chisholm (9 Juta), where there was a similar application. In that case a rule nisi was granted, and on the return day the respondent appeared in person.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I don't think the Court has ever appointed a curator except in a case of unsound mind or prodigality or some cause of that kind.]

Mr. Swift: Would your lordship follow the procedure in the case of Chisholm?

[Yes. Is there no one but the wife whom the Court could appoint?]

Mr. Swift: That I am not instructed upon. Apparently Mr. Neethling considers the wife the most suitable person, and the respondent has consented to the wife acting as curator.

De Villiers, C.J.: He has consented, but if he knew upon what ground he might not consent. That is why I think there should be a rule. You can take a rule in the same terms as in the case of Chisholm, the petitioner, Mrs. Truter, to act as curator bonis in the meantime, the rule returnable on December 12.

Ex parte DRAKE.

Mr. P. T. Lewis moved for the appointment of a curator bonis to manage an hotel in the insolvent estate of W. F. and J. F. Meyer and Jessio Bruce Meyer.

Mr. H. J. R. Pope, of the Board of Executors, East London, was a suitable person to act as curator. The petitioner Drake and other creditors would suffer if the hotel were closed.

The Master was authorised to appoint as curator bonis Mr. H. J. R. Pope, in his capacity as secretary of the East London Board of Executors.

MELCK V. LOUW. { 1907.
 { Nov. 8th.

Grazing of cattle—Letting of rights of grazing—Death of cattle.

The plaintiff, being the owner of a large and enclosed farm, allowed the defendant and other owners of cattle to send their cattle to the farm and charged a certain monthly rental per head. The custom was for the defendant to turn his cattle on to the land, and when he wanted them to send a servant, who collected them with the assistance of the plaintiff's servants. A cow thus sent by the defendant was lost, and there were indications of her having died a natural death, but there was no evidence of the plaintiff having done anything which contributed to her death.

Held, that the plaintiff was not liable to the defendant for the loss of the cow.

This was an action brought by Johannes Albertus Melck, a farmer, of Darling, to recover from the defendant, Johannes G. Louw, a farmer, of Durbanville, the sum of £41 19s. 6d., less £2 10s., in respect of money due for grazing certain stock.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. Plaintiff is a farmer residing in the district of Darling; defendant is a farmer residing at Phesente Kraal, Durbanville.

2. In the month of July, 1906, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff undertook to allow certain cattle, the property of the defendant, to graze on his (plaintiff's) farm at a uniform charge of two shillings per head per month, and on or about July 29, 1906, in pursuance of this agreement, defendant placed such cattle on the farm.

3. There is due and owing to the plaintiff in respect thereof the sum of £29 14s.

4. Defendant is likewise indebted to plaintiff in the sum of £1, being the reasonable cost of hand rearing a certain calf left by defendant or his servants on plaintiff's farm when removing inter alia the mother thereof on the day on which it was born, and for which hand-rearing plaintiff is entitled to make such reasonable charge.

5. Defendant is further indebted to plaintiff in the sum of 15s. 6d., being in respect of food supplied to his cattle herds, and for services rendered in gathering in his cattle at his request in the month of November, 1906.

6. Plaintiff is indebted to defendant in the sum of £2 10s., being in respect of the purchase of certain two bull calves bought by him, which such he has tendered and herein tenders to set off against the claim made herein. Wherefore plaintiff prays for judgment for the sum of £29 14s., £1. and 15s. 6d., making a total of £31 9s. 6d., less the sum of £2 10s., with interest and costs.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The plaintiff admits paragraph 1 of the declaration.

2. He admits paragraph 2 thereof, save that he says the said agreement was an old one of some three years standing.

3. As to paragraph 3, the defendant says that he was indebted to the plaintiff in respect of the grazing of the cattle in the sum of £27 19s. 3d. but the plaintiff still has in his possession one cow, which the defendant sent with his other cattle for grazing, and the plaintiff neglects and refuses to restore or return the said cow to the defendant, though frequently requested to do so. The defendant values the said cow at £20, and he claims that he is entitled to retain that sum as against the plaintiff's claim until the said cow is returned to him. There are also some minor sums which the defendant claims to set off against the plaintiff's claim, and which are set forth in the contra account. The balance shown as due to the plaintiff upon deduction of the said sums is £5 18s. 2d., which the defendant duly tendered to the plaintiff before action was brought, and which he is still willing to pay. Save as above, he denies paragraph 3.

4. As to paragraph 4, the defendant is willing to pay the £1 as a reasonable sum for maintenance of the calf, and he says he tendered before action was brought to pay such reasonable maintenance, but the plaintiff never rendered any account thereof until the filing of his declaration.

5. The defendant admits the item of 15s. 6d. mentioned in paragraph 5 of the declaration, but says that the same is included in the sum of £27 19s. 3d. figuring in his account.

6. He admits that the plaintiff owes him £2 10s. as alleged in paragraph 6, and says he has allowed for the said debt in arriving at the said sum of £27 19s. 3d.

7. The defendant therefore admits his liability for the said sum of £5 18s. 2d., and the said sum of £1, and hereby tenders the same, amounting together to £6 18s. 2d., in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim. Subject to the said tender, the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

8. For a claim in reconvention, the defendant (now plaintiff) craves leave to refer to the pleadings in convention.

9. Among the cattle sent to the plaintiff (now defendant), as aforesaid, for grazing, was a certain Canadian heifer, the property of the defendant, which is still in the plaintiff's possession, and which the plaintiff neglects and refuses to return to the defendant.

10. The plaintiff has also in his possession the hand-reared calf belonging to the defendant, and referred to in the declaration, which the defendant is entitled to have delivered to him.

11. On or about September 15, 1904, the defendant sent seven young oxen to graze on the plaintiff's farm, on the understanding that the plaintiff could use the same until the defendant required them, and that in consideration of the plaintiff so using them, the defendant need not pay plaintiff for the grazing thereof.

12. The defendant has frequently requested the plaintiff to return the said young oxen to him, but the plaintiff neglects and refuses to do so. The defendant (now plaintiff) claims (a) the return of the said Canadian heifer, the said hand-reared calf, and the said seven young oxen, or, in the alternative, payment of their value in the sum of £10, £5, and £77 respectively, with costs of suit.

For a replication, the plaintiff says: (1) That with regard to the cow referred to in paragraph 3 of the plea, he says that she is dead or has strayed, and her whereabouts is not known to him. He says, further, that by arrangement with defendant he (plaintiff) was not responsible for the safekeeping of his (defendant's) cattle or other loss by death or straying. He denies that the value of the cow was £20. (2) Same as is herein stated, and save in so far as the plea admits the allegations in the declaration, he joins issue thereon, and says that the tender in the plea is wholly insufficient, and again prays for judgment, with costs. And for a plea in reconvention, plaintiff (now defendant) says (3) he craves leave to refer to his allegations in convention. (4) He says that on or about November 9, 1906, when the plaintiff in reconvention sent for certain of his cattle, there was a heifer on his (defendant in reconvention) farm which was not marked with the mark of plaintiff in reconvention. That the plaintiff in reconvention had promised to send a cattle-herd who was familiar with his cattle, but the cattle-herd sent was not familiar with them, and failed to identify the heifer in question. That defendant in reconvention was also unable to identify the heifer as the property of the plaintiff in reconvention, and it was accordingly left behind. That from descriptions subsequently given by the plaintiff in reconvention, the defendant verily believes this heifer to be the Canadian heifer referred to in paragraph 9 of the claim in reconvention. That he has always been ready and willing to allow plaintiff in reconvention to remove this heifer upon identification by the plaintiff in reconvention, and upon payment of the amount due in respect of the grazing thereof, which sum is included in the amount of £29 14s. referred to in the declaration. (5) He says that he is ready and willing to deliver the calf referred to in paragraph 10 of the claim in reconvention, upon payment of the sum of £1, in respect of the charge for hand-rearing of the same. (6) As to the allegations in paragraphs 10 and 11, he says that he admits the seven young oxen were sent to his farm on or about September 15, and he says they were sent in poor condition, and upon the understanding that they should be left on the farm until they were fit as slaughter-oxen, and until such time he be entitled to use and work them, no charge being made for grazing. He says, further, that they are not yet fit as slaughter-oxen, and that he has refused to return them, as he is at present entitled to do.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C. (with him Mr. Inchbold) for plaintiff. Mr. Upington (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) for defendant.

Mr. Benjamin said there was certain correspondence between the parties, which showed that practically the account referred to by the defendant had been accepted by the plaintiff, and plaintiff was prepared to accept that amount, which he said was owing in respect of grazing. That would be £25 18s. 2d. In the annexure to the plea, there was brought up a balance of £5 18s. 2d., and that was arrived at by deducting one cow valued at £20. Mr. Melck said he was not liable for the loss of the cow, and the defendant in reconvention set up a claim for the loss at £20, and the £5 8s. 2d. made £25 8s. 2d. That was the amount Mr. Melck was prepared to accept together with the sum of £1 for hand-rearing the calf, which made £26 18s. 2d. In addition, there was 16s. in respect of the grazing of the Canadian heifer, but Mr. Melck did not care about pressing that, so that he was prepared to accept the sum of £26 18s. 2d. The only matters which would come before the Court would be in respect of the liability for the loss of this cow, which was set up in reconvention, the amount claimed in respect of that being £20, and in respect of the seven young oxen. Mr. Melck's contention in regard to that was that the seven young oxen were to be left grazing on the farm until they were of the age fit for the butcher, and there was to be no charge for grazing them in the meantime. It seemed to counsel that the onus was on his learned friend to establish his case. He would have to prove that the plaintiff was liable for the lost cow.

De Villiers, C.J., ruled that the plaintiff should proceed.

Evidence having been called, and counsel heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The amount which is admittedly due to the plaintiff for the grazing of the defendant's cattle is £26 18s. 2d., and for that amount plaintiff is entitled to judgment. The only question now is what is the position of the defendant: Whether the defendant has a counter claim in respect of the cow, the heifer, and the oxen? As to the cow, it is quite clear that the red and white cow formed part of the cattle which were delivered to the plaintiff. The custom seems to have been that people who sent cattle to graze on the plaintiff's land simply turned them into the land, and then afterwards sent their own man to collect the cattle again upon the plaintiff's farm, in the presence of a servant of the plaintiff, and then take them back to their master. There seems to be no definite contract in the nature of what the English law has called agistment, or of what is known in our law as the letting of the right of grazing upon a man's land. Certainly, if we look at the custom in this particular case, it was simply for the owners of cattle to send them there and then to fetch them back again when they wanted their cattle back. The farm was fenced, and was known to all parties to be fenced. If any cattle had strayed from the farm by reason of the fence not being kept in order an important question might have arisen as to the guarantee of the plaintiff. At all events, the farm is properly fenced, so that no cattle got out of the property, but there is no question in the present case of the cow having strayed, and if the cow is not on the farm at the present moment, one can only suppose that the cow has died there. If the cow died there under such circumstances as the present, I do not think that there is any presumption in law that the death took place from the neglect of the plaintiff. If, however, it were clearly proved that the defendant had asked for the cow, and the plaintiff had refused to deliver it, there is great force in the reasoning of Mr. Upington that the plaintiff should be held liable if from whatever cause the cow afterwards perished. It is not necessary now to decide the point, nor is it necessary to consider whether the authorities cited in Momson v. Mostert (1 Juta, 185) which apply to a depositary refusing to deliver up the thing deposited also apply to a case like the present, because I am not satisfied that there was ever a refusal on the part of the plaintiff to deliver this particular cow. Unfortunately, Barend is not supported by Stephanus, who accompanied him, and he is also a witness for the defendant. According to Stephanus there was the red and white cow, and the heifer, and according to him, Mr. Melck, the plaintiff, refused to deliver both. Mr. Melck, on the other hand, says that the only animal in regard to which there was a question was in regard to the black and white heifer, and it is that animal that he wished for proof of ownership. I am not satisfied from the evidence that there was any refusal on the part of plaintiff to deliver this red and white cow. I am not satisfied that the cow perished from any cause for which the plaintiff is to blame. There seems to be no proof of neglect on the part of the plaintiff, and in the absence of a demand for this cow, and a refusal of the plaintiff to deliver it, I am not prepared to say that the defendant is entitled to recover the cow or its value. In regard to the black and white heifer, clearly he is entitled to recover that, and the plaintiff is willing to deliver it up. The only other point in dispute is in regard to the seven oxen. I am entirely with the contention of Mr. Upington that these oxen were delivered upon an arrangement that if at any time the plaintiff wished to use them he might do so, but I do not consider that there is any contract by which the defendant is bound to leave these oxen with the plaintiff until they were of a fit age for slaughtering purposes. Supposing cattle had risen very much in value, and supposing a great demand for cattle had arisen and the defendant wished to sell his oxen, surely at any time he could have gone to the plaintiff and demanded these seven oxen, which he wished to deliver to the purchaser. I do not think there is any binding contract upon him to prevent him from claiming delivery of those oxen at any time, and the correspondence so far as it goes appears to me rather to support the version given by the defendant than the version given by the plaintiff. The plaintiff is entitled to succeed in his claim in re-convention to this extent, the defendant in re-convention must return to the plaintiff in re-convention the Canadian heifer, and the seven oxen, and, failing such return, to pay to the plaintiff in re-convention the sums of £10 and £77. Well, now comes the question of costs, which raises the most difficult question it seems to me. It is a pity gentlemen who seem good friends should come to law in this matter, and I fear the result will mean a considerable payment of costs. The Court will have to give judgment for the plaintiff for £27 18s. 2d., with costs on the claim in convention, and there will be judgment for the plaintiff in re-convention for a return of the Canadian heifer, seven oxen, and the calf, or payment of £10, £77, and £5, with costs in re-convention.

SOUTHERN LIFE ASSOCIATION V. TROLLIP. 1907.
Nov. 11th.
Dec. 3rd.

Accident policy of insurance—
Condition precedent—Written demand for arbitration—Waiver.

In an action for £500 on an accident policy, the defendant Company pleaded that the plaintiff had failed to make a written demand for arbitration in terms of one of the conditions of the policy which provided that, if no written demand for arbitration be made by the insured within six months from the date of the accident, the insured shall be held to have waived and abandoned all claim against the Company, whose liability to the insured shall thereupon absolutely cease and determine. The action was tried before a jury, which awarded the sum of £500 to the plaintiff. An objection was taken on behalf of the Company that, as the plaintiff admitted that no written demand for arbitration had been sent, the judgment should be entered for the Company; but the presiding judge decided, as matter of law, that the condition did not apply, and judgment was entered for the plaintiff.

Held, on application to the full Court, that judgment should be entered for the defendant Company.

This was an application upon notice to respondent, Roland James Wm. Trollip, farmer, Bedford district, to show cause why a judgment given by Mr. Justice Hopley in a recent jury trial should not be set aside.

It will be remembered that the respondent recently sued the applicants for a sum of £500, to which he claimed to be entitled under certain policy of accident insurance. Respondent said that, in consequence of an accident on his farm, in July, 1906, he had sustained "complete and irrecoverable loss of sight," in one eye, within the meaning of the policy. The jury found for plaintiff for £500, and Mr. Justice Hopley entered judgment accordingly with costs (17 C.T.R., 940).

The present application was brought on the ground of non-compliance with clause 8 of the conditions of the policy, and also on the ground that the verdict of the jury was in conflict with the weight of evidence. Clause 8 stipulates that, in the event of a dispute, the claimant must, within a period of six months from the occurrence, make a demand for arbitration. At the trial this question was raised by the plea in bar, on which the learned judge ruled against the defendant association. Applicants further submitted that the finding of the jury that the respondent had sustained "complete and irrecoverable loss of sight," in one eye was against the weight of evidence and, in the event of the legal objection failing, they claimed that on this other question they were entitled to a new trial.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, K.C., and Mr. P. S. T. Jones), was for applicants; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Sutton) was for respondent.

Mr. Schreiner said that the question between the parties was whether plaintiff was entitled to compensation for permanent partial disablement or temporary partial disablement. If the former, he was entitled to payment of £500, and if the latter, £6 per week for six weeks, and £2 per week for the remaining period of 14 weeks, or a total of £64. This latter amount was the absolute maximum that the association said plaintiff could have recovered if he were not barred, as they said he was barred. Continuing, counsel quoted section 39 of Act 23, 1891, order 40 of the English Rule of Court. No. 10 (Annual Practice, 1905, p. 563), Bobbett v. South Eastern Railway Co. 9 Q.B.D., 424, Bryant v. North Metropolitan Tramway Co. (6 Times Reports, 383).

Mr. Upington intimated that he did not propose to take any objection to the form of the procedure, so far as the legal point was concerned.

Mr. Schreiner (proceeding) quoted the 8th clause of the conditions attached to the policy, dealing with the question of arbitration, and submitted that that was a perfectly binding and valid stipulation, perfectly fair and reasonable; and it was, he observed, inconceivable why, when that was specifically pleaded and when on the pleadings an admission was definitely made that no demand was made for arbitration, and on the evidence before the Court, there was no trace of any kind of a demand having been made for arbitration, and no attempt had been made on the part of the association to abandon that condition, the plea in bar had not been upheld. He cited Castle v. Southern Life Association (16 C.T.R., 562).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did the jury find that there had been a waiver of the condition?]

Mr. Schreiner: The only waiver they found was in regard to the notice being given within 21 days of the occurrence.

[When was the action commenced?]

Mr. Schreiner: Within the 12 months. Counsel cited Kannemeyer v. Sun Insurance Co. (13 S.C., 461) and Hollander v. Royal Insurance Co. (4 Juta, 66).

[Was the plaintiff's attention called by the association to the fact that, according to the conditions of the policy, he must demand arbitration within six months?]

Mr. Schreiner: No; because they radiated altogether, and they simply left him to his own devices. He cited Gamble v. Accident Insurance Co. (Irish Reports, 4 C.L., 204), Estate Vink v. New Zealand Insurance Co. (22 S.C., 470), Van der Spuy v. Directors Paarl Bank (7 Juta, 245), Davies v. South British Assurance Co. (3 Juta, 416, and Scott v. Arery (5 House of Lords, 811). Counsel also quoted Act 29, 1896 (section 6) and Myburgh v. Protecteur Fire Insurance Co. (1878, Buchanan, 152). Coming to the second branch of the case, counsel pointed out that the words of the policy were: "Complete and irrecoverable loss of the sight in one eye." These were words, he submitted which were to bear their ordinary meaning. It was not sufficient that the loss of sight should be "irrecoverable." The jury appeared to have left out of mind the necessity of the loss of sight being "complete." Could a man who said that he could not see so well, but who did not say that he had completely lost the sight of his eye, be said to have suffered "complete and irrecoverable loss" of sight? Counsel proceeded to read the evidence given at the trial, from which he contended that there was no evidence to prove that the sight was irrecoverable. The medical adviser to the company stated in his evidence that Trollin's eye must have improved after it had been operated on. One of the plaintiff's witnesses stated he would not operate on the eye, as he might totally lose the sight. "How could he lose the sight of an eye when there is no sight?" queried counsel.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Your contention is that irrecoverable loss of sight means total blindness?]

Mr. Schreiner: Yes, my lord.

[I do not find any provision for permanent partial disablement of one eye. That is what has occurred in this case. If this is not a case of total disablement, then he has no redress.]

Mr. Schreiner: Except to the extent of 20 weeks' pay.

[Buchanan, J.: If he lost one of his fingers he could not recover.]

Mr. Schreiner: There was a case tried in Natal the other day, where a man lost two fingers, and the Court gave judgment in favour of the company, although it was proved that his hand was stiffened.

[Buchanan, J.: Unless it appears that the loss interferes with his business then, he can get no compensation?]

Mr. Schreiner: Quite so. Your lordship must remember the big risks undertaken.

[Counsel (continuing) quoted from the evidence of Dr. Wood, whom he called the "high water-mark," and which stated that to all practical purposes the sight was irrecoverable.]

[De Villiers, C.J.: What did he claim for on the previous occasion when he was pricked with a prickly pear in the right eye?]

Mr. Schreiner: I do not think the documents in connection with that claim have been put in, but he accepted £5 in settlement of it, so it cannot have been very serious.

Mr. Upington contended that the first point to be decided was the wording and validity of clause 8. Counsel contended that the insertion of a clause in the policy to the effect that the matter shall be referred to an arbitration at the instance of one party only was not valid. Counsel quoted the cases of Scott v. Mercantile Insurance Company (66 Law Times Reports, 111), Collins v. Locke (4 Appeal Cases, 674), in support of his contention. The effect of the clause in question, he contended, was to refer everything to arbitration, and that it went very much further than the English cases. In the case of Alexander v. Campbell (27 Law Times, 25) it was held that all points were not to be referred to arbitration. Then there came the further question whether even if this clause was valid, the company could lie by and wait until the period for sending in a demand for arbitration had expired, and then said: "You have abandoned your claim." The position the company had taken up to that stage was different altogether. Considering the circumstances, was the company entitled to rely on a purely technical omission. The real object of the arbitration clause, he submitted, was to give the Insurance Company option of going to arbitration. The question to be determined, whether or not there had been such a breach of the condition requiring a demand for arbitration, as to disentitle the plaintiff to any relief or to claim under the policy, must be taken in that sense. The company had not made any demand for arbitration. They were relying upon a purely technical breach of the conditions, which had not damaged them in any way. Non-compliance with the condition could not be relied upon by the company merely because there had been an informal breach of it. This was not a condition precedent. A stipulation of this kind should be construed strictly in favour of the insured and of public trade. The clause was somewhat ambiguously worded. "Demand" in clause 8 could fairly be construed as meaning a demand for payment of compensation. There would be in essence no prejudice to the company in reading the clause in that way. The earlier part of the clause was distinctly obscure and misleading. Counsel quoted Porter on Laws of Insurance (3rd edition, pp. 30 and 31). If there was any ambiguity in the clause, surely the company and not the insured should suffer. This clause was in a way repugnant to the other clause of the policy which said that the association shall not be liable in any sum until the termination of the disablement upon which the claim was based. His client's disablement was not finished yet. On the contrary, all the evidence in the case went to show it was permanent. Touching the question of fact, counsel submitted that his client had, as the jury had found, totally and irrecoverably lost the sight of one eye. When the medical men talked of vision they referred to the sensibility of the eye, and they all agreed that for all practical purposes the plaintiff's eye was useless to him. The verdict was a perfectly fair one, and in accordance with the medical testimony. Counsel referred to Hunter's case (17 S.C.R., 80); there was a loss of sight which was complete, and counsel submitted that the policy must be read throughout from a practical point of view.

Mr. Schreiner, in reply, said it was not open to his learned friend to contend that this eighth clause could be capable of any other construction than that the written demand was a demand for arbitration, and the provision was beyond question. The question of loss of sight was considered in Boardman v. London, Edinburgh and Glasgow Insurance Company (1892, 2, Queen's Bench, p. 384). On the question of referring the matters to arbitration, counsel quoted the case of Fookes v. New Zealand Insurance Co. (4 Official Reports of the High Court of Justice of the S.A. Republic, p. 302, 1897), Cook v. Southern Life Insurance Co. (Digest of Natal Reports, part 2).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 3rd).

De Villiers, C.J.: It is with extreme regret that I have arrived at the conclusion that the judgment of the Court ought to have been entered for the defendant company. The action was on an accident policy issued by the defendant company in favour of the plaintiff, and there can be no doubt that the plaintiff did sustain serious bodily injury, resulting in a permanent deterioration of the sight of his right eye. He claimed £500, on the ground that the loss of sight was, in the terms of the policy, "complete and irrecoverable," and one of the defences raised in the action was that, as the plaintiff retained some degree of vision which enabled him to read letters of about 4 inches in length, to count the fingers of a man against a black coat at a distance of about 3 yards, and to see, although not to distinguish, people at a few yards distance, the loss of sight was not complete and irrecoverable. The jury, however, before which the case was tried found that the loss was complete and irrecoverable, and awarded to him the sum of £500, which is the amount that under the policy of the company had undertaken, subject to certain conditions, to pay him in case of the complete and irrecoverable loss of sight in one eye caused by violent, accidental, external, and visible means. The learned judge who presided at the trial entered judgment for the plaintiff for £500, and the defendant company now applies that judgment may be entered in its favour, under the 39th section of Act 23 of 1891, on the ground that the admitted facts in the case prove that the loss of sight sustained by the plaintiff was only partial, and not complete. In the view, however, which I take of the case, it becomes unnecessary to determine this question, for upon another ground, which is also raised in the present application, the liability of the company under the policy had ceased before the present action was brought. The third paragraph of the plea raises the defence that the plaintiff had failed to make a written demand for arbitration within six months from the date of the accident, and the replication admits that no such written demand for arbitration had been made. The learned judge held, as a matter of law, that, notwithstanding the plaintiff's failure to make such a written demand for arbitration, he was not debarred, under the 8th condition of the policy, from enforcing his claim against the company. The condition reads as follows: "In case of any difference between the association and the insured regarding any claim under this policy, it shall be in the option of the association to have the said difference decided by arbitration or by action in the ordinary manner, and the association shall declare within fourteen days after written demand has been received at the chief office from the insured whether the same shall be decided by arbitrators to be mutually chosen, and in case the arbitrators shall not agree, by an umpire chosen by them prior to commencing arbitration, whose award in writing shall then be conclusive and binding on both parties . . . and in case the association shall decline to refer the said difference to arbitration or shall give no answer to the demand therefor within the aforesaid fourteen days the insured may proceed by action in the ordinary manner. . . . Provided, however, that if no written demand for arbitration as abovementioned be made by the insured within six months from the date of the accident in respect of which the claim is made, the insured shall be held to have waived and abandoned, and he hereby agrees to waive and abandon, all claims against the association, whose liability, if any, to the insured shall thereupon absolutely cease and determine." This condition is very prolix and involved in its terms; it is extremely one-sided, but its meaning is reasonably clear. The "written demand" mentioned in the first part of the conditions manifestly refers to the "written demand for arbitration" mentioned in the proviso. Within six months after the accident the insured must send in a written demand for arbitration. Within fourteen days after receipt of such demand the company must declare whether it accedes to the demand, and if it declines or gives no answer, the plaintiff may proceed by action. But if the plaintiff fails within six months after the accident to send in his written demand for arbitration, he agrees to waive and abandon all claims against the company. He agrees, in other words, that if it should be found six months after the accident that he had not by that time sent in a written demand for arbitration the liability of the company under the policy shall be held to have absolutely ceased and determined. It being admitted that the plaintiff did not within six months after his accident send in a written demand for arbitration, it would follow that he has no claim under his policy. It has been urged on behalf of the plaintiff in the argument on appeal that as the company had repudiated its liability before the expiry of the six months it could not take advantage of the condition, but the replication, while admitting that a written demand had not been made, does not plead a waiver by the company of this condition, although it specially pleads a waiver of another condition. Even if waiver had been pleaded it would have been impossible to hold that because the company repudiated liability it dispensed with the obligation resting on the plaintiff to send in a written demand for arbitration. If such a written demand had been sent the company could have exercised its option whether to have the difference decided by arbitration or in a court of law, but until the demand was sent the company cannot be held to have refused to go to arbitration. This is not a case, therefore, like that of Myburgh v. Protector Fire Assurance Company (Buch. Rep., 1878, p. 152), where the accomplishment of the condition was prevented by the conduct of the defendant himself. The repudiation of liability would not necessarily lead the plaintiff to believe that the company would not consent to arbitration upon a written demand being sent to it. In the case of Daries v. South British Insurance Company (3 Juta, 415), I took occasion to point out that there was no reason, on principle or on authority, why persons shall not be at liberty to agree that any disputes arising out of a contract between them should in the first instance be referred to arbitration. In that case, the dispute was as to the amount of loss sustained by the plaintiff, but the Court did not decide that other disputes arising out of the policy could not be referred to arbitration. Since that date, the Act 29 of 1898 has been passed, which makes it clear, whatever doubts might previously have existed, that with the exception of criminal cases, matters relating to status, matrimonial causes, and matters in which minors or other persons under legal disability are concerned, all differences may, without leave of the Court be referred to arbitration. The interpretation clause defines "submission" as meaning "a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration whether an arbitrator is therein named or not," and the third section enacts "that a submission, unless a contrary intention is expressed therein shall be irrevocable except by leave of a court or a judge or by consent of all the parties thereto." To assist arbitrators in the decision of questions of law arising in the course of the reference, the 27th section enacts that such arbitrators may at any stage of the proceedings, and shall, if so directed by the court or a judge, state any question of law so arising for the opinion of the court. In the present case, the policy contained no such "submission" as is defined by the Act, and I only cite the Act as showing that the differences which arose between the parties were legally capable of being decided by arbitration. If, then, there was no reason in law why those differences should not be so decided, I cannot follow the contention of the plaintiff's counsel that the 8th condition was against public policy or otherwise illegal. In case of a reference the arbitrators would have had none of the matters excluded by the Act to try, and they would have been entitled to the assistance of the Court upon any question of law that might have arisen. To speak of ousting the jurisdiction of the courts in such a connection appears to me to be a complete misnomer. The condition is a hard one, it might almost be called an unreasonable one, but it is not on that account illegal. But for the circumstance that insurance companies must be presumed to know their own business best, I should have thought that it was against their own ultimate interest to make a one-sided agreement by which they have the option of going to arbitration or not, whilst the insured is not only bound to propose arbitration, but loses his right to any claim under the policy if he fails within six months after the accident to make a written demand for arbitration. If, however, the insured is satisfied to accept such a condition, he must be prepared to act upon it before seeking to recover on the very policy in which the condition is incorporated. He, probably, like so many other people doing business with insurance companies, never carefully read the policy with its cumbersome conditions, but that is his fault, for which the company is not responsible. If he had carefully read it, he would certainly have taken care that six months did not pass by after his accident without a written demand for arbitration being made to the company. He has failed in doing so, and the company, acting on the strict letter of its agreement, says that before action was brought its liability had "absolutely ceased and determined." It is for the company to judge whether it should take advantage of the informality, but if it insists, the Court, however much it may sympathise with the plaintiff, must give effect to the terms of the agreement. The result is that, notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, the judgment must be set aside as wrong in law upon the facts admitted in the pleadings. It is to be regretted that the opinion of the Court upon the point was not taken before the expense of a trial by jury was incurred. The plaintiff might have obtained such opinion by excepting to the third paragraph of the plea, and possibly the defendant company could have done so by excepting to the replication. After verdict and before judgment the defendant company's counsel again took the objection that the plaintiff's failure to comply with the proviso to the 8th condition disentitled him to relief, but the learned Judge decided, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff was not so disentitled. The Court, sitting as a Court of Appeal, will now enter judgment for the defendant company, and as the company is not specially to blame for the unnecessary expense, the judgment must be with costs in this court as well as in the court below.

SIVERTSEN AND OTHERS v. f 1907.
ESTATE SIVERTSEN. { Nov. 12th.

Will—Informal execution—Witnesses—Ordinance 15 of 1845.

This was an action brought by Anthon L. Sivertsen, Sivert C. Sivertsen, Peter Nelson (married in community to Maria

E. Sivertsen), and Johanna D. Sutherland (born Sivertsen, married out of community to George Sutherland), against John Edwin Paul Close, as executor datave in the estate of Maria Elizabeth Sivertsen (born Behr), to have certain will declared null and void.

The ground of the action was that the mutual will of the late Hans Sivertsen and Elizabeth Maria Sivertsen was informally signed and executed. It was alleged that the document purported to have been signed and executed in the presence of two witnesses, Albert Gerard Anning and E. Barry, while, in truth and in fact, it was not so signed and executed. Mrs. E. M. Sivertsen did not acknowledge her signature in the presence of the said witnesses. Plaintiffs prayed for a declaration that the said document was null and void in so far as it purported to be the last will and testament of the late Elizabeth Maria Sivertsen, and for an order setting aside the appointment of Mr. J. E. P. Close as executor datave.

Defendant, in his plea, did not admit the allegations in the declaration as to the alleged irregularities, and put plaintiff to proof thereof.

Mr. McGregor said that the plaintiffs did not press the second part of the prayer, but simply prayed that the will be set aside as invalid as not being in conformity with the requirements of Ordinance 15, 1845. Counsel added that the will had already been set aside in so far as it purported to be the last will and testament of Hans Sivertsen.

Mr. McGregor, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton), was for plaintiff; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for defendant.

Evidence was led by Mr. McGregor.

John Commaille, a clerk in the Master's Office, produced a document purporting to be the joint will of Elizabeth Maria and Hans Sivertsen.

Albert Gerard Anning, a commercial traveller, of Observatory, said that he entered the employ of Mr. Sivertsen, chemist, Observatory (a son of the late Hans Sivertsen), in the latter part of 1903. Some time afterwards Hans Sivertsen called him into the office and asked him to sign a will as a witness. Witness went into the office and signed the will, and went out again. The signature on the document produced was witness's. The document was dated 12th January, 1904. After that, Mr. Barry (another assistant of Mr. Sivertsen's) was called in to sign the will. Witness did not see Mr. Barry sign the will, but when he had returned from the office he told witness what he had done. Mrs. Elizabeth Maria Sivertsen was not present that day. She had never on any occasion mentioned the matter to witness.

Cross-examined: Witness did not read the document when he signed it. He could not say whether it bore the date when he appended his signature. Old

Mr. Sivertsen asked him to witness his will. He did not understand that he was witnessing Mr. Sivertsen's signature simply. Mr. Barry was an assistant in Mr. Sivertsen's shop at the time. He did not know where Mr. Barry was. Witness had never signed any other document as a witness.

Maasdorp, J., asked counsel what would be the net result if the wills were set aside?

Mr. De Villiers: The net result would be that the property would be inherited in exactly the same way, but that it would be free from a fidei commissum.

Further cross-examined, witness said he was sure that he had not signed any document in Mrs. Sivertsen's presence.

Mr. McGregor (in answer to the Court) said that they had been unable to trace Barry.

Sivert Christian Sivertsen, chemist, Observatory (son of the late Hans Sivertsen), also gave evidence as to his two assistants going into the office at the request of his father to witness his will. Mrs. Sivertsen was an invalid at that time, and was not present when the two assistants went into the office. Barry left witness's service about a month afterwards, and his present whereabouts were unknown to him.

Cross-examined: The signatures on the document produced were, he believed, those of his father and mother. Witness was not aware at the time that it was informal to have the witnesses to attest the signature at different times.

Mrs. Johanna D. Sutherland (daughter of the testator and testatrix) and George G. Gie (of Herold and Gie, attorneys) also gave evidence.

Mr. De Villiers said that he did not propose to take up the time of the Court. The executor felt in duty bound to put the plaintiffs to proof of the allegations contained in the declaration.

Maasdorp, J.: The executor in this case was entitled to require the best proof that the will had not been properly executed, and the only proof that could be satisfactory would be the proof that would be expected to be given in this Court. It is quite clear now that the will was not executed properly in terms of section 3 of Ordinance 15, 1845, and it is consequently invalid. The will is declared invalid, costs to come out of the estate.

MULDER AND OTHERS V. { 1907.
ESTATE GRUNDLING AND { Nov. 12th.
ANOTHER. " 19th.

Will—Fidei commissum.

G. and his wife made a mutual will, bequeathing their joint immovable property "to their children till the third generation, that no one shall be entitled to sell or mortgage it, but the will shall remain in force and cannot be broken until in the third generation." No heir was to claim his inheritance until after the death of the survivor. G. predeceased his wife, who adiated under the will. There are four daughters of the marriage, who now contend that, subject to the life interest of their mother, they are entitled to receive their respective shares of the inheritance free and unencumbered. The mother (defendant) contends that such shares are subject to fidei commissum in favour of her grandchildren and great grandchildren.

Held, that as the will contains a prohibition against alienation until the third generation and an indication of the persons in whose favour the prohibition was made, the defendant's contention must be upheld.

This was a special case for determination of the construction of certain clause in the will of the late Andries Everhardus Grundling.

The special case was set out in the following terms:

1. The plaintiffs are: (a) Frederick Swerus Mulder, married with community of goods to Magdalena Cornelia Grundling; (b) Pieter Wouter Steyn, married with community of goods to Susanna Johanna Susara Grundling; (c) Pieter Jacobus Redelinghuyse, married with community of goods to Anna Wilhelmina Maria Grundling; (d) Christian George Frederick Rheeder, married with community of goods to Wilhelmina Johanna Grundling.

The defendants are: (1) Magdalena Cornelia Olivier, a widow, who is sued both personally and in her capacity as executrix testamentary of the estate of the late Andries Everhardus Grundling, who was her first husband, to whom she was married with community of goods; (b) Jean Etienne Reenen de Villiers, who was appointed curator ad litem to the minor children of the second and third generations referred to in the will of the late Andries Everhardus Grundling, by order of this Honourable Court, dated October 15, 1907, and who is sued in his said capacity of curator ad litem.

2. On or about February 23, 1889, the late Andries Everhardus Grundling and his wife Magdalena Cornelia Grundling, the defendant—hereinafter called the testators—executed a joint will, of which a copy and a sworn translation are hereto annexed, marked "A." and "B." respectively, to the terms of which the parties crave leave to refer.

3. On or about February 7, 1892, the said Andries Everhardus Grundling died, leaving the said will of full force and effect, and the said Magdalena Cornelia Grundling adiated and accepted benefits under the said will.

4. By the said will the testators appointed the survivor of them executor or executrix of their joint estate and guardian of the minor heirs, and made certain specific bequests. Among the said bequests a one-fifth share in the farm Welbedacht was bequeathed to each of the plaintiffs. In regard to the said bequests the will provides, in Dutch, as follows: "Daar de testateuren over een zyn gekomen om huone vaste gronden hun eigendom te vermaken aan hunne kinderen tot in het derde lid dat niemand de regt zal hebben om het te verkoopen of te verbinden maar dat de testament zyn kracht zal houden en niet verbroken kan worden tot in het derde lid." ("Whereas the testators have agreed to bequeath their immovable lands, their property, to their children till in the third generation, now, therefore, nobody shall be entitled to sell or to mortgage, and the testament shall remain in force, and cannot be broken until in the third generation.")

5. The plaintiffs contend that according to the true intent of the said will they are entitled to their respective shares in the said farm free from any restraint or fidei commissum, and, further, that they are entitled to free and unencumbered transfer of their said shares, subject only to the life interest in favour of the defendant.

6. The first defendant says that in her personal capacity she is ready and willing to consent to transfer being passed to plaintiffs subject only to the life interest in her favour, but in her capacity as executrix she contends, and the second defendant likewise contends, that under a true construction of the said will, the bequest of the said landed property is subject to a fidei commissum extending to and in favour of the second and third generations, i.e., in favour of the grandchildren and great-grandchildren of the testators; or, alternatively, in favour of the grandchildren of the testators; and she contends that plaintiffs are only entitled to transfer of their shares subject to such fidei commissum.

Wherefore, the parties pray for judgment on their respective contentions, and for such order as to costs as to this Honourable Court may seem fit.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr.

Watermeyer) was for plaintiffs; Mr. M. Bisset was for the first defendant; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared as curator ad litem of the minors.

Mr. Schreiner cited Lind v. Calitz (9 Juta, 268), Rahl v. De Jager (1 S.C., 38), Kruse v. Pretorius's Executors (1879, Buchanan), *Drew v. Mr. Bisset cited In re Beck (1 Menzies, 332), Pretorius v. Pretorius (2 Juta, 293), Vermaak v. Vermaak (21 S.C., 463), Voet, 36, 1, 22 (McGregor's Trans., p. 50), Spengler v. Higg (1 Roscoe, 227), In re Bergh (7 Juta, 306), Voet, 36, 1, 27, and 36, 1, 33, and Rykklief v. Rykklief (13 S.C., 67).

Mr. De Villiers said it was the desire of the minors that the Court should, if possible, decide the question whether the fidei commissum should extend to the great grandchildren, or the great-great-grandchildren.

Mr. Schreiner having been heard in reply,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 19th).

Maasdoorp, J.: Amongst other dispositions in the last will of Grundling and his wife Magdalena appears the following: "Whereas the testators have agreed to bequeath their immovable lands, their property, to their children till in the third generation, that no one shall be entitled to sell or mortgage it, but the will shall remain in force and cannot be broken until in the third generation. These are the names—." Then follow the names of the testators' children, with the specific portion of land bequeathed to each. Then follows the passage: "The testators declare by these that no heir shall lay claim to his inheritance until after the death of the survivor." Magdalena, who survived her husband, and adiated under the will, is desirous of passing transfer to the plaintiffs of the land bequeathed to them respectively, subject to her life interest, but she contends that under a true construction of the will, the bequest to the plaintiffs of the land is subject to a fidei commissum in favour of the second and third generations, i.e., in favour of the grandchildren and great-grandchildren of the testators. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, contend that under the will they are entitled to their respective shares of the farm free from any fidei commissum, and they are entitled to the unencumbered transfer of their shares, subject only to the life interest of the widow. Considering the nature of the sub-divisions of the farms mentioned in the will, it is quite conceivable that if the property should ultimately pass to the great-grandchildren, a very awkward state of affairs may arise through the smallness of the shares coming to each. But that consideration cannot weigh with the Court in endeavouring to ascertain the intention of the testators. It is certainly true that burdens imposed through the creation of a fidei commissum are regarded with such disfavour by the law that the rule has been established, in the interpretation of wills, to reject a construction which admits such a burden, where serious doubt occurs upon the subject. But here, again, the Court will not disregard the intention of the testator, merely because it is not expressed with absolute clearness. It seems to me that in this case, although the will is awkwardly worded, both the chief elements are present which go to constitute a fidei commissum. There is a prohibition against the alienation of the property, and an indication of the persons in whose favour the prohibition is made. If we had only the words: "bequeath their lands to their children till in the third generation," there might have been a question, whether this gives rise to a direct substitution or to a fidei-commissary substitution. But this difficulty is cleared up by the succeeding words, that no one shall dispose of the land until the third generation. Neither the children nor the grandchildren can dispose of the property, because it must pass to the great-grandchildren. If the prohibition had stood alone until the third generation, it might have allowed of a doubt as to whom it was intended to benefit. But the preceding words remove this doubt, because the prohibition must operate in favour of those to whom the bequest is made, and they are the grandchildren and great-grandchildren. It was further contended, as negating a fidei commissum, that the prohibition is directed only against the selling and burdening of the property, which might, therefore, be freely disposed of by last will. It seems to me, however, that the testators guarded against that by providing that the will shall remain in force and cannot be broken until in the third generation. Clearly indicating thereby that their desire to benefit the different generations in succession must not be defeated by tampering in any way with the provisions of the will. In my opinion, the contention that the land is subject to a fidei-commissum in favour of the grandchildren and great-grandchildren must succeed. A declaration is made accordingly. Costs to come out of the estate.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, F.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

CORDEROY V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1907.
Nov. 12th.
" 15th.

This was an action in which John Matthews Corderoy, lately on the Fixed Establishment of the Civil Service, sued the Treasurer-General for £750 damages and his re-instatement in the Service, or, in the alternative, £4,000 damages, by reason of his wrongfully enforced retirement or dismissal.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is John (Matthews) Corderoy, who resides at Sea Point.

2. The defendant is Edgar Harris Walton, who is sued in his capacity as the Treasurer-General of the Cape Colony, and as such representing the Colonial Government.

3. The plaintiff entered the Civil Service of the Cape Colony on the 1st day of July, 1897, when he was appointed a clerk in the Department of Agriculture, in which department he remained for a period of six months, after which he was appointed a clerk in the Public Works Department of the Cape Colony.

4. Plaintiff was placed on the fixed establishment of the Civil Service on the 1st July, 1903, pursuant to the provisions of Act No. 32 of 1895, when he was transferred from the Public Works Department to the Control and Audit Office, in which office he held the post of Travelling Inspector until his enforced retirement on the 7th October, 1906.

5. On the 7th day of October, 1906, without any lawful cause or excuse, the services of plaintiff were dispensed with.

6. The plaintiff has always been physically and mentally fit to discharge efficiently his official duties, and has always discharged his duties efficiently and well, and is ready and willing to continue to do so at an adequate salary as compensation for his services, but the defendant has refused, and continues to refuse, to employ him.

7. The plaintiff has suffered considerably through being dismissed from the Government Service; he has lost his prospect of preferment, with its accompanying increase of salary; has lost prestige by reason of his dismissal, and by reason of the prevailing depression he is unable to obtain another appointment.

Wherefore plaintiff claims: (1) His reinstatement at a salary of not less than £600, on the Fixed Establishment of the Civil Service of the Government of Cape Colony; (2) the sum of £750, as and for damage sustained by reason of his wrongfully enforced retirement or dismissal from the Civil Service; (3) costs of suit, or, in the alternative, (a) the sum of £4,000 as and for damages sustained by reason of his aforesaid wrongfully enforced retirement or dismissal from the Civil Service of the Cape Colony, (b) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the declaration.

2. He denies paragraph 5, and says that it was found necessary to remove the plaintiff in order to facilitate improvements in the organisation of the department to which he belonged, by which greater efficiency and economy could be effected, and that the Governor accordingly on the 7th October, 1906, dispensed with his services under and by virtue of the 35th section of Act No. 32 of 1895, both Houses of Parliament having previously, to wit, on the 13th and 16th August, 1906, respectively, concurred in the said removal.

3. The plaintiff was, in terms of the said Act, entitled, in consequence of his removal as aforesaid, to a gratuity of the value of £325, but with the approval of Parliament a gratuity of £385 12s. 6d. was tendered to him before the institution of this action, which gratuity the plaintiff refused to accept. The defendant has always been willing to pay him, and hereby again tenders to pay him the said sum of £385 12s. 6d.

4. He admits that the plaintiff has always been mentally and physically fit to discharge his official duties, and has discharged them efficiently and well, but save as aforesaid denies paragraphs 6 and 7.

Wherefore, save as to the sum of £385 12s. 6d. tendered, he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff appeared in person, and Mr. Howel Jones, K.C. (with him Mr. Nightingale), was for the Government.

The plaintiff said that the position was a very strange one. He was detached from another department, in which, although he was only a temporary man he was practically fixed; in fact, more fixed than he ultimately proved to be on the fixed establishment by reason of the work he had done for the department. When he went to the Public Works Department the accounts were in a dire condition, and he was getting a free hand as a commercial man to get the work up and keep it up. In 1901, after some three and a half years of arduous services, and finding he was practically blocked, he wrote private notes to a few of the heads of departments, amongst others Mr. Gurney. In May, 1901, Mr. Gurney got into communication with him, and wanted to know whether he would come and take up the position of travelling inspector.

The plaintiff was proceeding to read a lengthy document, when De Villiers, C.J., suggested that as he was making statements of fact it would be as well, in order to save repetition, to give his evidence at once.

The plaintiff, in the course of his evidence, said he entered the Civil Service in July, 1897, on a temporary appointment with the Agricultural Department in connection with the rinderpest. After that he became a clerk in the Public Works Department, from the 1st December, 1897. On the 1st July, 1903, he was placed on the fixed establishment. Then he was transferred from the Public Works to the Audit Office. Primarily his duty was understood to be that of travelling inspector in connection with the Harbour Boards.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How long did you retain that office?—Until the time of my summary retrenchment, October 7, 1906.

The plaintiff (continuing) said it was admitted he was an efficient officer.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I see you claim damages?—Yes, because when I was detached from the Public Works I went under the sincere belief that the promises made me would be fulfilled. That would have given me very substantial increase of salary. Had I remained at the Public Works the increase would have been even more satisfactory, as the letter from Mr. Gurney will show. Early in May Mr. Gurney was anxious to bring things to a head, and to get this post, which was standing vacant for two and a quarter years, on the estimates filled up. He telephoned me, and I went to his office, when he said he had authority to pay £450.

[You claim damages for enforced retirement?—Yes, and for loss of promotion.

[What is the amount?—I claim £750. I have had to break up my home, and have gone through all sorts of hardships ever since October 7, 1906.

[In addition to that you claim £4,000?—That is only if they want to get rid of me finally.

[You claim reinstatement and £750, or £4,000?—Yes.

[I may tell you at once that, as a judge of this Court, I cannot reinstate you. Under the circumstances, that is impossible. The only question is: Can I award damages? Therefore you must confine your claim to the second count. The Court has not the power to reinstate any man in the service. Of course, if you were illegally dismissed, then the Court will give you damages.]

In the event of section 35 having been illegally traversed, would the Court not have the power?

[No, the Court has no power. It is not part of the power of the Supreme Court to reinstate you. That is a matter for the Executive, but, of course, the Court can give you damages.]

Cross-examined, the plaintiff said that he relied upon Mr. Gurney's promises in May, 1903, although Mr. Gurney was not then Auditor-General, and perhaps had no authority to promise to better his (plaintiff's) position by promotion. Otherwise, plaintiff would never have left the Public Works Office. Mr. Gurney asked him to leave.

Mr. Jones: There is a conflict of evidence on that point.

Plaintiff admitted that he had made £170 out of a motor-car trip. On another trip he lost.

De Villiers, C.J., said he did not see how this affected the case.

Plaintiff further admitted that he became dissatisfied with affairs in the office, and he wrote a letter asking for a transfer. There was no room elsewhere, and Mr. Gurney sent for him. He did not say he could not have a man who made complaints. Plaintiff held that he had hopelessly been duped. Certainly Mr. Gurney asked him to reconsider his position in regard to his request for a transfer. Witness made a written statement of his case. He maintained throughout that Mr. Gurney had failed in his explicit promises. In February, 1906, he did not apply to Mr. Gurney to go on a trip to the Transkei, and say at the same time that he would only be remaining in the office four and a half months.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the law did not allow of his enforced retirement upon gratuity, can a resolution of Parliament make it legal? The Government can only act by Act of Parliament, not by resolution.]

Mr. Jones: With regard to the additional gratuity to add £40, that is the object of the resolution, not to make it illegal to give a gratuity, instead of a pension. Under section 35, he is only entitled to a gratuity, not a pension, because he has under ten years' service, but it was suggested to give him an increased gratuity, and the resolution of the Select Committee of the House of Parliament was that this increased gratuity be allowed him.

[I am referring to the proviso: "No person shall be removed from the service in order to facilitate improvements in the department to which he belongs, without the previous concurrence of both Houses of Parliament." Where is that concurrence?]

Mr. Jones: It is implied, I submit. Counsel then proceeded to read from the Votes and Proceedings of the Select Committee on Pensions.

[It is important that I should have the terms of that resolution.]

Mr. Jones: I will put them in. That is the report of the Select Committee on Pensions and Gratuities, which had power to take evidence and call for papers. They report they concur in the proposal contained in the paper submitted, and recommend the additional gratuity of £40 12s. 6d. to James Matthews Corderoy.

[Is that a concurrence that he shall be removed from the service?—Impliedly it is, but it is a resolution formed upon the consideration of the whole case. All the papers, as I understand, were before the Select Committee.]

[The object of that is to obtain a gratuity for him, but it would not decide whether he might be removed from the service. That was not the question raised?—The object of putting all the papers before the Select Committee was to obtain their concurrence to his removal.]

[Was it brought before Parliament that he was compulsorily retired?—All the papers were put before the Select Committee on Pensions, and then there was this resolution. I quite admit it is rather a bald resolution to pass, but the fact of passing it shows they concurred in his removal, as they had all the facts of the case before them. There is the further adoption of their report by both Houses of Parliament.]

The plaintiff, continuing under cross-examination, said he sent a petition to Parliament, and he did so because the members of the Pensions Committee assured him they had no idea at all of the facts of the case. He was willing to abide by the decision of the committee, because he was given to understand they would give him a hearing. The Pensions Committee refused to hear him even when he appealed to the House of Parliament. In each instance his ministerial chief was chairman of the Select Committee. He circulated practically every member of Parliament, but in the circular did not set out all the material facts. Mr. Jagger persuaded him not to petition for a Select Committee.

[Were you not before the Select Committee?—No.]

[Where was the hearing, Mr. Jones?]

—By a circular to the members.

The witness (proceeding) said if he had been a criminal he would have had a hearing.

Mr. Jones: He put a statement of facts before every member of Parliament, so that it would hardly be necessary to call him. (To the Witness): Upon what do you base your damages.

Have you attempted to get other employment?—I have had temporary employment at the South African College for four and a half months.

Why did you leave it?—I was only there temporarily.

Surely you could get another billet?—If I were to take employment that was infra dig., I would leave the Colony.

What do you mean by that?—I would not take a position at £200 or £300 a year in the Colony.

What is the least you would expect?—It would depend entirely on the circumstances of the position offered.

Would you accept £500 outside the service?—Yes.

Have you tried to get employment?—Yes.

Proceeding, the witness said he had tried to get employment in Johannesburg, but failed to find anything suitable. After he read Mr. Gurney's note about his retirement, he wrote and told him he would appeal to "Caesar."

Walter E. Gurney, Auditor-General, stated that owing to Parliament not meeting the position of Harbour Board Inspectors which was on the Estimates remained vacant for something like 18 months. The plaintiff seemed very anxious to go to the audit office.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If Parliament authorised the removal, the Court cannot interfere.]

Plaintiff: I understand the first part of that section 35 really does not ascertains to my case at all—whether I was efficient or not.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If Mr. Gurney says it was found necessary to remove you in order to facilitate improvements in the organisation of the department, then, of course, I cannot go into the question whether it was necessary or not. If Mr. Gurney thought it was necessary, I am not the Executive.]

[To the Witness: Was it found necessary to remove the plaintiff in order to facilitate improvements in the organisation of the department?]

Witness: It has been found necessary in the last two years to remove twenty men from the audit office in consequence of the abolition of departmental audit, whereby £6,000 per annum has been saved, and it was found necessary to remove Mr. Corderoy as one of these.

[And greater efficiency and economy were thereby effected?—Undoubtedly, in the organisation of the department.]

Plaintiff: In the organisation of the travelling inspector branch?

The witness, proceeding, said there was nothing special in his previous career which would not make it necessary to remove him. There was nothing said against the plaintiff's efficiency, but he had by his attitude in the office shown that he was not a settled down officer ready to take up any responsibilities which were thrown upon him.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was it necessary to remove him in order to facilitate the improvement?—Yes.]

Continuing, the witness said the papers in which the proposal was made included a minute from the Governor in Council proposing to retire him under this section. These papers were laid by the Treasurer before the House, and referred by the House to the Committee on Pensions, and the Pensions Committee did not see fit to call Mr. Corderoy, but they passed a resolution to the House approving of an increased gratuity of £40 12s. 6d.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The minute was before the committee. Was it before Parliament itself?—Yes, and that resolution was adopted as shown by the minutes of the House.]

[In what manner was it brought to the notice of the House that Mr. Corderoy was removed compulsorily from the service?—The papers in Mr. Corderoy's case were all laid on the table of the House.]

[I would like to see some papers that he was removed from the service compulsorily.]—The Treasury probably can produce them.

In reply to plaintiff, witness absolutely denied that a personal matter was the cause of his first thought of retrenchment.

George Alexander Perrain was called by the plaintiff.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is your position?—Inspector in the Audit Office.]

[I understand the question the plaintiff wants to put to you is whether it was necessary to remove him in order to facilitate the improvements in the organisation of the department?—That is a question for the head of my department.]

Plaintiff: What was your previous training prior to—

Mr. Jones: I object to that question. He did not take Mr. Corderoy's place.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you take his place?—No.]

Ernest Fuller Kilpin, the Clerk of the House of Assembly, produced the papers placed before the House in regard to the plaintiff's case in 1906.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Were these papers placed direct before the Select Committee, or were they placed before the House, and then by the House referred to the Select Committee?—Yes; they were laid on the table by the Government, and referred to the Select Committee.]

[I should like to put a few questions to Mr. Gurney.]

Mr. Gurney was recalled.

[The first of these papers purports to be an application by Mr. Corderoy for gratuity?—That is the usual form that is used in cases of retirement, in order to give the necessary details.]

[It was not, I think, signed by Mr. Corderoy?]-That is the usual form filled in in order to get the details.

[Yes; but then Parliament was led to suppose that Mr. Corderoy had applied to be—?]-I do not think so, in view of the memorandum addressed to the Treasury on the subject.

[Because here it is—name of applicant in full, "John Matthews Corderoy?"]

--Yes.

[He is not an applicant?]-It is the usual form but the memorandum practically explains that.

[Which memorandum?]-The memorandum addressed to the Treasury.

[That is the one of the 26th July?]-Yes, that sets forth his previous circumstances, and it closes by saying he has written it in order that the committee may know all the facts of the case, and that he will loyally accept the decision of the committee, whatever it may be.

[Under the 35th section of the Act, provision is made for a temporary pension?]-A temporary pension in the case of an officer who has had over ten years' service.

[What is the section which refers to under ten years?]-The same section goes on to say, but if the service be less than ten years, he shall be retired exactly as though he were not on the fixed establishment, and that is provided for under section 29, where it provides for a gratuity of one month's salary for each year's service. On that basis, he would have got the smaller sum, but the £40 was added.

After hearing the plaintiff and Mr. Jones,

De Villiers, C.J.: The main object of the evidence which is produced by the plaintiff in this case was to show that his removal from the position which he held in the Auditor's Office was not necessary, because it did not facilitate improvements in the organisation of the department, and that by reason of his removal there was no greater efficiency or economy effected. I said at the outset, and I repeat, that these are not questions which a Court of Law can enter into. It is a question entirely for the heads of the department to deal with. They are in the best position to judge as to whether improvements in the organisation of the department would be facilitated by the removal, or as to whether there would be greater efficiency and economy. The Courts of Law cannot enter into the question of efficiency of the service of any department. Now, this case itself is an illustration. One of the witnesses called by the plaintiff is a Mr. Perrain, who is his successor, and the object of the plaintiff in calling him was to show that Mr. Perrain was not equally efficient. How is the Court to judge of that efficiency? It is a matter upon which the head of the department can form an opinion, but no one else is in a position to form an opinion as to such efficiency. Parliament has seen fit to protect the servants by this proviso: "That no person shall be removed from the service in order to facilitate improvements in the department to which he belongs, without the previous concurrence of both Houses of Parliament." That is one protection, but, of course, I do not say that is the only protection, because the Court must see that the head of the department is doing his duty in the matter, and acting in perfect bona fides, and that he has satisfied himself that these improvements would be facilitated by the removal. But the proviso which I have just read gives a further protection, and the point which I have to decide is whether that protection has been furnished in the present case. The difficulty which I at first experienced was that the application which was placed before Parliament purported to come from the plaintiff himself, and if that were the only document before Parliament I should say at once that Parliament has not concurred in his removal by granting the gratuity. But it is not the only document which was before Parliament, because there were other documents before Parliament which were afterwards submitted to the Select Committee, which makes it quite clear that it was not a case of voluntary retirement on the part of Mr. Corderoy, but a case of compulsory retirement. Amongst the papers laid before the Parliament was a memorandum by Mr. Walter Gurney, the Auditor-General, in which he speaks of this gratuity being required, because Mr. Corderoy was being retired, and he strongly recommends the favourable consideration of Parliament, as Mr. Corderoy was only two months short of ten years' service, and that he should be granted an additional £40 12s. 6d., to which he would have been entitled. Then there is a further memorandum by Mr. Walter Gurney, from which it would also clearly appear that it was a case of compulsory retirement, because he says: "I feel bound to mention that the proposal that he should be retired did not come upon him as a surprise upon his return from the Transkei. I had written to him on the 12th ult., telling him what was going to happen on his return." That is laid before Parliament. In addition to that there is a letter from Mr. Corderoy to the Treasurer of the Colony, dated July 25, 1906, in which he says that he has the honour to refer to my conversation with the Assistant-Treasurer, and, in conformity with his suggestion, to place on record some special features relating to my case. May I ask that this memorandum be attached to the papers to be placed before the Select Committee on Pensions, of which you are the chairman, so that the matter may be considered from all points of view, and I shall cheerfully accept the ruling whatever that may be"; and then he goes into the full statement of what he had done during his service. There is an appeal here, therefore, to Parliament to deal leniently with him, and so on. He had begun by saying he would cheerfully accept the ruling of Parliament on the question. It is upon this proviso that I fear that there will be great difficulty for the plaintiff to make out his case, but before I finally decide the point I should like further inquiries to be made as to what the practice has been hitherto in regard to these cases. Mr. Kilpin has stated that this is the usual form in which Parliament approves of the removal from the service by simply approving of the gratuity, but, of course, he did not come prepared to answer this question sprung upon him, and perhaps, if he has time to look up the records, he may find cases in which there has been special concurrence with the removal. Before I gave judgment I should like to know what the practice has been in the past in that respect. I will postpone the final judgment until I have further information on the point. If there is a practice to concur in the removal, I do not think the Court can take the mere granting of a gratuity under the circumstances as a concurrence of the removal.

Postea (November 15th).

De Villiers, C.J., said that amongst the papers in the case was a consent by Corderoy to which the Court's attention had not been called at the trial. In this consent plaintiff admitted that his removal from the Civil Service was concurred in by both Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Jones said that he had not desired in any way to prejudice the plaintiff's case.

Plaintiff said that he signed the admission at Messrs. Reid and Nephew's office on the assurance of Mr. Reid that it would not prejudice him in any way. He added that he was prepared to go behind the consent.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Government must then have an opportunity of giving further evidence.]

Plaintiff said that he could produce evidence to show that neither the members of the Pensions Committee nor the members of the House knew what they were doing when his case was before them. His was not an ordinary case. As an extraordinary case, it demanded exceptional treatment, which it did not get. If the hearing could be adjourned for a few days, he could get the necessary evidence to show that.

De Villiers, C.J., said that such evidence would not be admissible.

Plaintiff: Of course, your lordship is the best authority in the Colony on this matter of the practice of the Houses of Parliament in relation to the Service.

[I can only speak as to the Legislative Council. I cannot speak as to the Assembly.]

Plaintiff: Yes, quite so, but, after all, the Council have to put the finishing touch on.

De Villiers, C.J.: The House subsequently next session, when your petition was before it, refused to grant relief. If I thought there was any possibility by postponing of throwing a different complexion on the case I should grant it. His Lordship then proceeded to deliver judgment as follows: On looking over the documents produced in this case I find the following admission paper signed by the plaintiff on the 11th of November, 1907: "I do hereby admit that my removal from the Civil Service on the 7th of October, 1906, was concurred in by both Houses of Parliament, to wit, on the 13th and 16th August, 1906, respectively." If my attention had been called to this admission, I would have given final judgment immediately after the hearing. I am bound, however, to say that the practice of treating the mere award of a pension or gratuity by Parliament to a Civil Servant removed under the 35th section of Act 32 of 1895 as a concurrence by both Houses of Parliament in such removal is open to grave objection. The Act was manifestly intended for the benefit and protection of officers in the Civil Service, and where such an officer is dismissed from the service without due observance of the requirements of the Act, he is clearly entitled to the protection of this Court. In the case of Faure v. Colonial Secretary (Foord's Rep., p. 82), it was held that the Governor had the power summarily to dismiss a public servant, who held office during the pleasure of the Crown, but there are several points of difference between that case and the present. It was a condition of Mr. Faure's appointment that he should not thereby be admitted into the Civil Service, he was held to be an officer of this Court, holding office during the pleasure of the Crown, and his case was decided before the passing of Act 32 of 1895. That Act is the charter of every officer in the Civil Service of this colony, and no blame can attach to any such officer who invokes the aid of this Court against an infringement of his rights thereunder by the Governor or by a Minister of the Crown. It should be clearly understood, however, that whilst protecting officers of the service against illegality, this Court will not interfere with the executive duties of the Government, nor will it undertake inquiries into such question as whether a particular office ought to have been abolished under the 24th section of the Act, or whether greater efficiency and economy would or would not be effected by the reorganisation of any department under the 35th section. As I remarked at the trial, the plaintiff in the present case concentrated all his efforts on an attempt to prove that the reorganisation which led to his removal did not conduce to greater efficiency or economy in the administration of the Audit Office. This is an inquiry upon a purely executive matter upon which this Court could not possibly enter. If the plaintiff could have proved that it was a case of abolition of office to which the more liberal provisions of the 34th section of the Act would apply, the Court would have had the power to direct that the scale of compensation should be in terms of that section, but he admitted that his office of inspector had not been abolished, his only complaint being that a less efficient officer had been employed in his place. By entertaining such a complaint the Court would usurp functions which do not belong to it, but are vested in the Responsible Government of the country. The safeguard against an improper removal under the 35th section is that "no person shall be removed from the service in order to facilitate improvements in the department to which he belongs without the previous concurrence of both Houses of Parliament." It is an extraordinary circumstance that the plaintiff's case was first brought before Parliament by means of an application purporting to be made by him, but to which he was really no party. If both Houses of Parliament had authorised the gratuity in the belief that the plaintiff was the applicant for a gratuity, I would have had no hesitation in holding that the mere grant of the gratuity did not amount to a concurrence in his removal. Unfortunately for the plaintiff he wrote a letter to the Treasurer in which he asked that the letter should be laid before the Select Committee on Pensions, and he added that he would cheerfully accept the ruling, whatever that might be. After Parliament had given its ruling by which it awarded to him a gratuity £40 in excess of what he could claim under the 29th section of the Act, he submitted a statement of facts to individual members of the Legislature in which he said: "The House of Assembly has just adopted the report of the Select Committee on Pensions, whereby I am to be retrenched from the 30th September next upon payment by Government of a gratuity of a sum of £360. . . . This decision has been arrived at by the committee through their non-acquaintance with the real facts of the case." Clearly, then, the plaintiff understood that Parliament had concurred in his enforced retirement. If Parliament so concurred the Court must accept its concurrence as a compliance with the proviso of the Act, and cannot sit as a Court of Review of proceedings in Parliament. In the following session a petition from the plaintiff was laid before the House of Assembly, praying the House to consider the circumstances of his case and to grant him relief, but the committee reported that it was unable to recommend that the prayer be entertained. As regards the concurrence of Parliament in removals under the 35th section of the Act, the Clerk of the House has taken considerable pains to ascertain the general practice in obtaining such concurrence. The conclusion at which he has arrived is that the consent of Parliament has, with one exception, always been obtained, in the form of a resolution recommending the grant of a pension or gratuity, without any reference to the section or the Act. The exception is that of Mr. Powtress, in whose case the resolution adopted by both Houses reads thus: "This House recommends the retirement from the public service of J. B. Powtress, Inspector in the Control and Audit Office, and that he be awarded a gratuity in accordance with the regulations." I cannot conceive why the Government does not, in every case where it asks for concurrence in the removal of an officer under the 35th section, obtain a resolution expressing such concurrence, instead of leaving it to be inferred from the fact of a gratuity or pension being concurred in. In the present case, it was only the additional gratuity of £40 that was concurred in, for the balance of the gratuity could be granted by the Government, assuming that the 35th section was complied with, without the sanction of Parliament. The practice actually adopted by the Government leaves it open to the dismissed officer in every case to raise the objection that the requisite concurrence had not been given. It so happens that the plaintiff has irretrievably committed himself, but it would have been difficult for the Government to escape liability, if the plaintiff had not, before the question of a gratuity was submitted to Parliament, consented to accept the ruling of Parliament on the matter. If instead of so consenting he had raised the question that the concurrence of Parliament was required before he could be removed, the Government would have been able to obtain such concurrence in express terms. That such concurrence would have been given may fairly be gathered from the fact that when in the subsequent session the plaintiff applied for relief, Parliament, with the facts stated in his petition before it, refused to assist him. Whatever doubts, however, might have been entertained by me are removed by the plaintiff's admission filed of record in this case to the effect that his removal from the Civil Service had been concurred in by both Houses of Parliament. The judgment of the Court must therefore be for the defendant.

De Villiers, C.J., asked Mr. Jones if he had anything to say in regard to the question of costs.

Mr. Jones said that he left that matter entirely in the hands of the Court.

[Of course, the plaintiff himself has incurred no costs; he would not be liable to any costs himself; but in many respects it is a case of hardship, and it is impossible to conceal the fact that the whole matter was practically arranged while the plaintiff was absent on his inspection, and an attempt was made to get him to sign this application for a retirement allowance, and he refused to sign it, and yet, originally, the first application purported to come before Parliament from him. The papers which accompanied the application would have called the attention of Parliament to the fact that he was not really the applicant, and that it was a case of enforced hardship.]

Mr. Jones: I did not quite understand that he refused to sign it.

[Oh, yes, that appears from the correspondence. He refused to send in the application.]

Plaintiff: That is so.

De Villiers, C.J.: Parliament has the power to relieve the plaintiff still, but, as far as his strict legal rights are concerned, the Court is bound to hold that he has failed, and as defendant's counsel does not press for costs, there will be no order as to costs.

Plaintiff: With apologies, may I add a word as to the consent?

[No; I think I have heard you sufficiently. I have given your case all the consideration possible.]

Mr. Howse appeared for the temporary curator to oppose the application.

Mr. Marais appeared for the curator ad litem.

Dr. Dodds, medical superintendent of Valkenberg Asylum, stated that Burger was at present an inmate, being detained by a Judge's order. He was still of un-sound mind, but it was probable that he would recover within the next couple of months. At present he was not fit to take charge of his affairs. Eleven years ago he was an inmate of the asylum.

Mr. Howse: It was stated in September that he would probably recover in from three to six months?—Yes.

Is that probable?—Yes.

Mr. Roux moved for an order declaring him of unsound mind, and appointing Mr. W. S. P. Burger curator.

Mr. Howse said Burger had been appointed with full powers.

[Buchanan, J.: But he did not avail himself of them.]

Mr. Howse: He could not at the time obtain security, and nothing could have been done in the estate up to the end of the present month.

Buchanan, J.: The Court must declare Burger of unsound mind, and Mr. W. P. Burger as permanent curator.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

HILL V. GUNDRY. { 1907.
Nov. 13th.

Survey — Plan — Variation of written contract—Burden of proof.

It is no part of the duty of a land surveyor to furnish his client with a plan of the land surveyed without extra remuneration unless he has specially agreed to do so.

The burden of proving a variation of a written contract lies on him who alleges such variation.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, Harry Lewis Hill, a land surveyor, of Caledon, to recover from the defendant, Henry Gundry, storekeeper, of Caledon, £41 14s., being expenses incurred in the survey of the defendant's farm.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows: (1) Plaintiff is Harry Lewis Hill, a land surveyor, practising at Caledon. Defendant is Henry Gundry, a storekeeper, and landowner, residing at Caledon. (2) On or about the 7th June, 1907, it was agreed between the plaintiff and defendant that plaintiff should survey the farm Uitkyk, the property of the defendant, and erect regulation beacons at all necessary points thereon, and defendant agreed to pay to plaintiff in consideration of the work the sum of £25, and to provide accommodation, and also conveyance to and from the said farm for plaintiff and his assistant. (3) Thereafter the said survey and erection of beacons were duly carried out by plaintiff in terms of the said agreement, and defendant thereupon became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of £25, together with certain disbursements, for which defendant is liable in a sum amounting to £11 9s. (4) In or about the month of August, 1907, plaintiff, at the special instance and request of the defendant, made a plan of the said farm Uitkyk, and supplied the same to the defendant, and defendant thereupon became indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £5 5s., which plaintiff says is a fair and reasonable charge for preparing and supplying the plan. (5) Defendant has neglected or refused, and still neglects and refuses, to pay to plaintiff the sum of £25, £11 9s., and £5 5s., amounting in all to £41 14s., though frequently requested to do so. Wherefore plaintiff claims judgment in the sum of £41, with interest and costs.

The defendant's plea was as follows: (1) Defendant admits paragraph 1 of the plaintiff's declaration. (2) The defendant admits paragraph 2, save that he craves leave for greater certainty to refer to a certain letter written by plaintiff to defendant, dated June 7, 1907, and referring to the said agreement. (3) As to paragraphs 3 and 4, he says that at the time of entering into the agreement the plaintiff was well aware, and had been informed by the defendant, that defendant's said farm was registered and held under five separate diagrams, and that defendant desired to have a single diagram or plan embracing the whole of the farm. (4) The defendant says further that, according to the true intention of both parties at the time of entering into the agreement, and according to the proper construction of the said agreement, it was the duty of the plaintiff, under the agreement, to prepare and furnish the plan for the remuneration therein stipulated, and the plaintiff is not entitled to claim any additional remuneration in respect of the plan. (5) As to paragraph 5, the defendant says that he has before action brought tendered, and hereby again tenders, to the plaintiff the sum of £36 9s., consisting of the sums of £25 and £11 9s. He admits he refuses to pay the sum of £5 5s. Wherefore, subject to the said tender, the defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiff's replication was as follows: (1) As to paragraph 3 of the plea, plaintiff denies that at the time when the agreement was made defendant said anything about requiring a single plan of the whole farm, or that he (plaintiff) agreed to supply such a plan. Plaintiff says that in or about the month of May, 1902, during a conversation between plaintiff and defendant, plaintiff offered to survey the farm and prepare a plan for the sum of £35, exclusive of disbursements, but the said offer was not accepted by the defendant. (2) Plaintiff admits that tender contained in para. 5 of the plea, but says that the said tender is insufficient, and he refuses to accept the same. (3) Save as above, and save per admissions in the plea contained, plaintiff denies all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the said plea contained, joins issue thereon, and again prays for judgment as before, with costs.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the defendant.

Harry Lewis Hill, plaintiff, stated that in May last he was present at the attempted sale of the defendant's farm. Mr. Gundry sent for him, and said he did not know where some of the beacons were, and those he did not know of he wanted tested. He further mentioned he wanted to sell the farm, and asked witness what he would charge for a survey of the farm, to erect the beacons, and verify the existing beacons, and witness said it would cost about £35. The defendant hesitated, and finally seemed to think it was too much. After witness mentioned the fee, defendant produced a rough plan, and witness suggested he would give him a decent plan. Some time after, in June, witness offered to survey his farm and erect beacons for £25, but the defendant had to provide two boys to bring witness and his assistant to and from the farm, and provide them with accommodation. The defendant accepted that offer, and asked witness to put it in writing, which was done. Witness had not the slightest idea of supplying a plan in that sum. When the work was finished witness sent in a detailed account to the plaintiff. Witness's assistant made the plan, and it was handed along with the account to the defendant. When witness handed the plan to the defendant the latter did not say a word. When the defendant asked for his documents, he asked plaintiff if he did not think it unreasonable on his part to expect the plan for nothing. Witness said that he might expect an amended title for nothing. At an interview the defendant said if he did not get the £5 5s. knocked off, he reckoned to be able to knock off £8 for provisions, etc. The defendant then made a tender for £36 8s. in full settlement, which was refused. The making of a plan was absolutely distinct from a survey and fixing of beacons.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: The main object of the defendant in having the survey was not to have one instead of five little diagrams. Witness did not say to the defendant that he would prepare a plan in the offer of £35. The offer of £35 was exclusive of disbursements.

Further evidence having been given for the plaintiff,

Dr. Greer closed his case.

Henry Gundry, the defendant, stated that on the occasion of the sale he had a conversation with the plaintiff. Witness asked plaintiff to survey the farm, and he thought it would be more convenient to sell it under one instead of five diagrams. The plaintiff was asked for a price to survey the farm, with the object of putting it under one plan and readjusting the beacons. The plaintiff agreed to do this for £35, provided witness gave him boys and conveyance to and from the farm. Plaintiff was to fix the beacons and give witness a diagram and survey the farm as a whole. Witness said he would leave the matter in abeyance and think the matter over. Later the plaintiff said he could do the same job for £25, on the same conditions as before. Witness then instructed the plaintiff to proceed. When the plaintiff mentioned the diagram witness reminded him it was part and parcel of the contract arranged between them. On that occasion witness told him that he would not pay for the diagram.

Mr. De Villiers having been heard for the defendant,

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff claims five guineas for a plan of the defendant's farm with which the plaintiff had furnished the defendant. The defendant says in defence that the plaintiff had agreed to survey his farm and to supply the plan for the remuneration stipulated in the contract, which remuneration he has tendered to pay. A letter has been put in which is said on the part of the plaintiff to contain the terms of the contract. Now, upon the face of this letter it does not constitute a complete contract purporting to contain all the terms of the agreement which had been entered into by the parties. It is quite possible that in the negotiations which took place and which culminated in a contract, there may be either oral or written conditions which would go to constitute the concluded contract. It is therefore upon the defendant to show that other conditions and terms were attached to this contract, upon which he is now entitled to rely for his defence. The question the Court has to decide is whether it has been proved that the condition relied upon by the defendant does form a part of this contract. The letter in question is the following, which the plaintiff writes: "I am willing to survey your property and erect regulation beacons at all corners not at present occupied by a well-defined and undisturbed beacon. This I will do for the sum of £25, provided you supply me with two boys and take myself and assistant to and from the farm, and give us accommodation." Now, there is nothing expressly here which makes it an obligation on the part of the plaintiff to supply the defendant with a plan of the property, but it is quite possible that in his duties as a surveyor may be that of furnishing his employer with the plan of the property surveyed. The Court had therefore to ascertain whether in the practice of surveyors the obligation of supplying a plan forms part of the service which the surveyor has to render to the employer. Now, I am satisfied that the evidence goes to show most clearly that it is not a duty of the surveyor unless there is an express stipulation of furnishing such a plan. The question now arises whether there was an express agreement outside this letter that such a plan should be supplied. There is a direct conflict of evidence between the parties as to what took place between them on occasions prior to the writing of this letter. The defendant states that the main object he had in view was to obtain a general plan of the property, which would make it convenient for him to exhibit at a sale. Now, if that was his object, it is clearly not stated in this letter, and before the letter was written he requested the plaintiff to put the terms that they had agreed upon in writing, the plaintiff thereupon wrote this note, and the defendant approved of it, and so one may take it as pretty accurately setting forth the main terms of the agreement. I am therefore not inclined to accept it that the main object of the defendant was to get a general plan representing the whole of the property, and besides if this was his object, it was a most expensive manner of setting about obtaining it. A general plan, a picture representing the property to people at sale, could have been constructed pretty clearly and accurately from the diagrams in the shape of a compilation, and that compilation would have served all the purposes which the defendant had in view. It was not necessary for that purpose to ascertain the correctness of the beacons, and to have regulation beacons erected. I am, therefore, inclined to think that the main object was to have a survey, and have the beacons erected as is stated they were. All the same though, it may not have been the main object, it may have been still one of the stipulations, but I am quite sure that the defendant is a man of great intelligence in matters of this kind, and he would have seen that the omission was corrected. Now, I do not say that perhaps, independently of the terms of the contract, the defendant did not expect that he might not get the plan, and had some idea he would obtain it. He requested the plaintiff to supply him with one, and it is admitted on all sides that the plaintiff said he must pay for it. Then, on the other hand, the defendant said he thought he should not be liable. There the matter ended as far as the plaintiff was concerned. If the plaintiff had thereupon made his plan, I would have said he accepted the terms of the defendant to do it for nothing, because the defendant had objected to paying. But the plaintiff did not thereupon go and make a plan. After this difference, the defendant goes to the plaintiff's assistant, and obtains a plan from him. That leaves the question open; whether the plaintiff is entitled to receive remuneration or not, and it is not affected in the least degree by the second conversation of the parties. According to the written document there is no duty upon the plaintiff as a surveyor to supply this plan, and there is no evidence that he expressly agreed to supply a plan, and he is now entitled to the remuneration for the extra work which he did in giving the defendant this plan, when the defendant requested him to do so, and he is entitled to what is characterised by the surveyors as a very fair remuneration of five guineas. Judgment will, therefore, be for the plaintiff for £41 14s., with costs, the plaintiff declared a necessary witness.

Mr. W. P. Schreiner, K.C., appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. Benjamin, K.C., for the defendant.

Mr. Schreiner said he wished to consent to judgment in terms of a consent paper put in.

Mr. Benjamin also agreed.
Order granted.

STIGANT AND WILSON V. LOUDEN.

This was an action in which Arthur Stigant, trading as Stigant and Wilson, of Woodstock, sought to recover from Henry Louden the sum of £172 10s. 4d., for goods sold and delivered.

The plaintiff in his declaration claimed £172 10s., amount due for drapery goods purchased by defendant's wife and daughter on his account.

The defendant admitted the claim, but urged that it was in the form of a contra account, which existed between him and plaintiff.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C. (with him Mr. Swift), appeared for plaintiff. The defendant appeared personally.

Arthur Stigant, the plaintiff, stated he carried on business at Cape Town and Woodstock as a draper. Stigant and Wilson passed a second bond on their property for £1,000, in favour of Louden and the builder Munroe. The partnership was dissolved in November, 1904. The agreement was that Wilson was to take the immovable property, and witness the movable. Witness saw Louden with a view to Wilson taking over the property and the liability for the bond. Witness was to have a power of attorney made to him to collect the rents, and pay Louden and Munroe £50 a month off the bond. As a result of the arrangement, the bond to Louden and Munroe was cancelled, and a new bond passed by Wilson. There was a life policy on Wilson's life ceded to Louden, as additional security. At the time of the dissolution of partnership, there were a few items appearing against defendant, which were taken over by witness. Those few items were admitted by defendant in his plea. All the other items in the account were incurred subsequent to the partnership.

In cross-examination by defendant, witness stated that relations between him and defendant were always good.

Did we not treat you generously in giving you a second bond?—It was a business contract, and I do not know if business is generous.

Witness (continuing) said that at the time the dissolution took place, defendant had started a fresh account. The value of the property witness took over would be about £4,000.

Behind the bond we released you from there was £4,000 of security, and we released you from that, instead of foreclosing?—What about the other creditors?

Do you wish to put to the Court that I released you, when I had £4,000 worth of security? Did I do that without any promise or consideration from you?

—Yes. The only condition was that Wilson was to find additional security for the bond, and as a result, he gave you his life policy.

Did you not tell me that you would assist me financially?—No.

Do you have many retail accounts amounting to £172?—A few, but we have reduced them.

Witness (continuing) said he knew that defendant was away at Carnarvon last year, but he did not advise him of the extent of the account.

Can you give the Court any reason for me taking Wilson on?—You had security.

You were anxious to be released?—Yes.

Another month or two and your creditors might have had the business?—I won't say that, but I was glad to get out of it.

If we had closed down on our bond there would have been sufficient in the estate to meet our claim?—Yes.

From June, 1904, to June of the present year, you never asked me for money?—No.

Did you not treat this as giving the goods to me and debiting Wilson with it?—No.

Witness could not say why he should have been asked to hold the power of attorney. Witness may have said that his creditors would stop operations if he guaranteed anyone. Witness saw Mrs. and Miss Loudon at a sale he had after a fire, when they purchased a quantity of goods. At that time defendant owed over £100, but he supplied Mrs. Loudon with over £40 worth of goods.

Is it fair to me to allow an account to accumulate to the extent of £172 without advising me?—Certainly, if I think you are good for it.

I put it to you that you only sent in this account after you had lost the administration of the estate?—It was sent in periodically.

To whom?—To your address.

Witness did not know if it was customary for drapers to all give credit to the extent of £170 to retail customers.

By the Court: Loudon and Munroe never held a first bond. The amount realised on the first bond was to pay Loudon off the instalments due for building. At the time of the dissolution of partnership, witness did not like the way his partner was carrying on, so he approached him to dissolve. Witness took the business, and Wilson the immovable property. It was agreed that Loudon's second bond should be paid off in monthly instalments of £50 each. This was not always paid up to date. Witness denied that he gave Loudon any promise, if he would cancel the bond. Witness denied that he was to pay £50 per month if the rents did not realise that amount.

A partner of Mr. Boyd, the first bond-holder, stated since February last he had collected the rents of the property. Witness informed Loudon as to what he had done. There was not sufficient in rents to pay the interest and taxes now.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What did Loudon say to that?]

Witness: He took it as a matter of course. I informed him that if he would not agree that we would have to call up the first bond, and take over the possession of the property.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

For the defence, Mrs. Catherine Loudon admitted she bought the goods, and that even at the sale Mr. Stigant said that they were selling for cash, but that as Mrs. Loudon was one of their biggest customers they had better let her have goods on credit, as they had the money all right.

Miss Mary Loudon, daughter of defendant, gave corroborative evidence, stating that all goods were bought on a contra account. The accounts were always paid monthly.

Mr. Bungey, a one-time manager of plaintiff's shop, stated he knew nothing definite of a contra account. Unless there was an arrangement witness would not allow an account to run to £172 for two and a half years without applying for payment. When defendant's account stood at £70, the attention of one of the partners was drawn to it. Witness understood there was some arrangement about the account.

The defendant elected to give evidence, and said he had not heard of the dissolution until February, 1905. Witness consented to the cancellation of the bond, and took over one from Wilson. Stigant gave witness his word that he would assist financially to liquidate the debt by financial assistance, and a contra account. The arrangement was that Stigant was to collect the rents, and pay £50 a month in instalments, but he did not press him too hard, and many months received less. Witness considered that they had treated Stigant very well, by releasing the money in the way they had. Witness had tried to raise money on the £1,000 bond before the cancellation, but could not raise £100 on it. His whole desire was to treat Stigant well and help him on.

In cross-examination, witness said Munroe owed Stigant an account, and paid it before he left Cape Colony, but the amount was so small that he did not think it worth while waiting here while the case was being thrashed out. Witness denied that he had offered to pay the account by instalments.

Mr. Benjamin having been heard in argument, and the defendant having addressed the Court,

De Villiers, C.J.: It is quite clear from the documents put in before the Court that the bond for £1,000 was cancelled. That was a bond which had been passed by Stigant, the plaintiff, and Wilson in favour of the defendant and Munroe. There is a consent to the cancellation of the bond endorsed upon by the defendant and Munroe, and then the bond was passed by Wilson alone in favour of Loudon, the defendant, and the property which had been formerly the joint property of Wilson and Stigant, was transferred to Wilson alone. It is quite clear that the plaintiff, Stigant, would not have consented to this transfer unless he had been released from liability in respect of the bond. The bond was completely cancelled, and there was therefore a complete release of liability of the plaintiff, Stigant, and the consequent transfer by Stigant of his half-share of the property to Wilson alone. The defendant was aware of this arrangement, because he consented to the cancellation of the previous bond, and consented also to the arrangement by which the plaintiff had the power of attorney to collect the rents, and pay off on the mortgage out of the rents collected, and the amount was fixed at £50. The defendant in his plea says that £50 was the definite amount, but he admits to-day that he would not have been dissatisfied with less if the full amount could not have been obtained. I am of opinion that the agreement between the parties was that the plaintiff was to collect the rents and to pay out the balance after paying rates and taxes, and the sum of £50 was only mentioned because it was considered that that would be the outside amount. Well, when once it is clear that there was a release, it lies on the defendant if he now wishes to set off any claim as against another claim. It is for him to prove that there was some other arrangement by which the plaintiff was still to retain liability to him. He says it was arranged that he could buy goods at the shop and it would go off by payment in this way, but I cannot understand such an arrangement, as there was nothing owing by the plaintiff to the defendant, so there must have been a misunderstanding between Mrs. and Miss Loudon as to what took place. I am quite satisfied that there is some misunderstanding, and that the plaintiff never could have undertaken to allow defendant to buy goods at the shop because he owed the defendant something, as there was no liability. I cannot understand the possibility of an arrangement, that the plaintiff would allow the defendants enough to buy goods as against the contra account. It is impossible for the Court to sustain the defence. The plaintiff has proved that these goods were bought by the defendant or on his behalf. There is no proof that there was any contra account. The defendant says: Is it likely he would have entered into such an arrangement if there was no liability on the part of the plaintiff to him? But the Court must remember that at that time everybody thought the property was worth the money. The defendant had built the property, he had been paid for building it, he knew what it cost, and he may well have thought that a second bond for £1,000 secured by a life policy was sufficient security for the £797 owing to him. I am of opinion, for these reasons, that the judgment of the Court must be for the plaintiff as prayed, with costs.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

PLASTIC DECORATION CO. v. { 1907.
CROOKE AND ASHBY. { Nov. 13th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £386 5s. 10d., liability taken over by defendants to pay creditors in terms of agreement. Order granted.

MATRIMONIAL CASES.

KRIEL V. KRIEL.

This was an action brought by Anna M. Kriel, of Colesberg, against her husband, Jacobus E. Kriel, of Robertson, for divorce, on the ground of his alleged adultery with one Dinah Johanna du Preez.

Mr. Toms appeared for plaintiff; defendant had been barred.

W. T. Birch, of the Colonial Secretary's office, gave formal proof of registration of the marriage.

Plaintiff said that she was married to defendant at Colesberg in September, 1904. Defendant had not resided with her since June, 1906. In September they entered into a notarial deed of separation. The photo produced was that of her husband.

Frederick T. Parker, a waiter, at the Hotel Metropole, residing at Woodstock, said that he recognised the photo produced, which had been identified as that of the defendant. Defendant and a woman lived at the hotel two days and two nights as though they were man and wife. The woman accompanying the defendant was not the plaintiff.

Miss Robson, manageress of the Hotel Metropole, said that she recognised the portrait produced as that of a man who stayed with a young woman from one Friday until the following Monday.

Decree of divorce granted, with costs.

AUSTIN V. AUSTIN.

This was an action brought by Mary E. Austin, against her husband, Robert J. Austin, described as a private in the C.M.P., in the division of Albany, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a divorce, custody of the child, and forfeiture of benefits.

Mr. M. Bisset was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

The plaintiff said she was married to the defendant in 1896. There was one child of the marriage. They lived together until about the end of 1901. Defendant was employed at the Docks, but in 1902 he got into some difficulty, and was suspended. On the 3rd April, 1903, he left witness, without giving her any warning. A day or two later she received a letter from him from Bellville, where he had got a position. Witness was then residing at Salt River. She received a further letter from him from Bellville, where he continued to work for some time. He then lost this situation. He disappeared, and she did not see him until July, 1904. He joined the C.M.R. She had had no communication with him since July, 1904. He was afterwards drafted into the C.M.P.

Decree of restitution granted, with costs, defendant to restore conjugal rights on or before the 31st December, failing which, to show cause on the 4th February why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed, with costs.

KNOX V. KNOX.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce. Mr. Douglas Buchanan appeared for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default.

William Thomas Birch, officer in charge of the duplicate original marriage register in the Colonial Office, put in a true copy of the marriage certificate.

Honoraria Gladys Knox, the plaintiff, said that she was married to the defendant at Simon's Town on June 21, 1901. Thereafter they lived at Simon's Town. They were not very happy, as her husband drank heavily. She left her husband and took up nursing at Wynberg. Her husband was in the employ of the Naval authorities, by whom he was sent to England. Although he was entitled to a free passage for her, he did not offer to take her with him. She had not heard from him since 1902.

The Court granted a decree of restitution, ordering the defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before January 20, 1907, failing which, to show cause, on February 4, 1908, why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed; affidavit of service to be sworn before a Justice of the Peace, whose signature will have to be certified by the proper authority.

PARSONS V. PARSONS.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan appeared for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default.

William Thomas Birch, officer in charge of the marriage register, Colonial Secretary's Office, put in an office copy of the marriage certificate.

Mary Ellen Parsons, the plaintiff, said that she was married to the defendant at Woodstock on May 29, 1900. Her husband was in the police force, and in June, 1905, on returning home from work one evening, she found that her husband had gone. She subsequently heard that her husband had gone to England. She had received one letter from defendant—from Bath. He had not returned to her. There were two children of the marriage—both boys.

The Court granted a decree of restitution, ordering the defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before January 30, 1908, failing which, to show cause on February 11, 1908, why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed, with costs, and why plaintiff should not have the custody of the children of the marriage.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ABELS. { 1907.
 { Nov. 13th.

Mr. Marais moved on behalf of petitioner for leave to sue her husband, Manuel Abels, in forma pauperis, for divorce on the ground of adultery.

On Mr. Marais certifying probabilis causa, the Court granted a rule nisi returnable November 26, calling on the respondent to show cause why leave should not be granted as prayed.

FRIEDLANDER V. VOM DORP AND SCHARFSCHNEER.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl, on behalf of the applicant, moved for leave to sue the respondents by edictal citation for £23 17s. 9d., and for leave to attach certain property in Cape Town to found jurisdiction.

The Court granted leave to sue respondents by edictal citation, citation returnable January 30, 1908, to be served together with the interdict and notices; personal service; property attached, but petition to be amended by inserting a description of the property to be attached.

LURY V. LAWRENCE AND CO., LTD.

Arrest of person ad fundandam jurisdictionem—Incola.

This was an application calling upon respondents to show cause why a certain order for applicant's arrest ad fundandam jurisdictionem, granted by the Chief Justice on the 7th November, should not be set aside, and why they should not pay costs.

From the applicant's affidavit it appeared that he based his application on an allegation that he resided in Constitution-street, Cape Town, and was domiciled in this colony. He had only gone to German South-West Africa periodically on trading expeditions. When arrested he was proceeding to German South-West Africa to adjust business matters.

Respondents said that applicant was indebted to them in the sum of £58 16s. 1d., and that they had reason to believe that applicant was domiciled in German South-West Africa, although he may have resided in Cape Town.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for applicant; Mr. Close was for respondents.

Mr. Jones submitted that respondents had clearly taken the wrong procedure in moving to arrest applicant ad fundandam jurisdictionem, seeing that he was domiciled and resident in this colony. Counsel quoted Van Zyl's Jud. Prac. (p. 132). Applicant had, he added, been resident in Cape Town for 12 years. He cited Springle v. Mercantile Association of Sraziland (1904, T.S.C., 163), Solomon v. Wool (15, S.C., 162), and Schunke v. Taylor and Symonds (8 S.C., 104).

Mr. Close said that he did not dispute the law as contended for by his learned friend. He submitted, however, that on the facts there was a sufficient prima facie case to justify the continuance of the order. No injury would be caused to applicant by allowing the attachment to continue, seeing that security had been furnished by him.

Buchanan, J.: The petitioner states, and it is not denied, that he arrived in this country 12 years ago, and has been residing here ever since, and that he has carried on business in different districts—Ceres, Prince Albert, and afterwards apparently in Namaqualand. About three years ago he changed his residence to Cape Town, where he brought his wife and family, and they now reside in Cape Town, at 108, Constitution-street, and that address has not been changed. The applicant, however, does go on trading expeditions across the border into German South-West Africa. The original applicants—Brown, Lawrence and Co.—finding him in Cape Town, and fearing that he was about to leave again for German South-West Africa, applied for a writ of attachment against the applicant to found jurisdiction. I am convinced that had the Court known that he was domiciled in the Colony, and had his wife and children residing in Cape Town, the writ of attachment to found jurisdiction never would have been granted. It was not, under these circumstances, a proper course to take. The man being domiciled in this country, it was unnecessary to apply for his personal attachment for the purpose of founding jurisdiction. The liberty of persons must be respected, and if a man is deprived of his liberty without just cause, the Court will set aside the order for his arrest. Of course, it is still open to the respondents, if they fear that defendant will attempt to evade the debt by leaving the Colony, to move to have him arrested by an application under the 8th Rule of Court. The writ of arrest to found jurisdiction must, however, be set aside, with costs.

ESTATE STEPHAN V. ESTATE STEPHAN.

This was an application for leave to purge default in an action brought by respondents against applicants to recover a sum of about £20,000.

Mr. Burton, K.C., was for applicant; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Louwrens) was for respondent.

Having heard affidavits read, and counsel's argument,

Buchanan, J.: The late Mr. Henry Stephan died in October last year, and there have been important questions raised as to the administration of his estate. One of these actions has recently been tried, and heard in this Court. After that trial was over the executors of J. C. Stephan, as they were probably entitled to do, wished to force a settlement, and they issued summons on October 24. Appearance was entered on October 30, and the same day the declaration was filed, and on November 11, two days ago, the defendants were barred. The plea would have been filed in time if counsel had not been otherwise engaged, and if the plea had been so filed it would have been impossible to have gone to trial this term. There is a large amount at stake, and, without going into the issues or deciding which side is likely to succeed, I think, under these circumstances, that the bar should be removed; but, of course, upon payment of costs of bar, and on condition that the defendants go to trial before the 7th February, I do not think one can very well order security to be given by defendants now. Applicant must pay costs of purging default. The only reason why I order him to pay costs is that it is a matter of executors, and there has been a considerable amount of delay, but I do not think judgment should be given against defendant without having a hearing. By consent, it is ordered that the costs of the motion set down for to-morrow be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

INSOLVENT ESTATE OF WEINBERG V. S. WEINBERG.	{ 1907. July 2nd. Nov. 13th.
INSOLVENT ESTATE OF WEINBERG V. J. WEINBERG.

Insolvent Ordinance—Act 38 of 1884—Contemplation of insolvency—Undue preference.

These were actions (consolidated for hearing) based on an alleged undue preference.

Mr. Burton, K.C. (with him Mr. Wallach), was for the plaintiffs; Mr. Close was for the defendants.

Mr. Close said he might state at the outset that he appeared on behalf of the defendants to make a special application. The case was one in which it was alleged there had been an undue preference granted to each of the defendants by their father, Nathan Weinberg, the insolvent. Since these proceedings were begun, criminal proceedings had been instituted against the father for culpable insolvency. The two defendants in the present case were not in a position to fight the case on their own account, but friends were assisting them. Shortly before they were about to come to town for the trial, the two defendants were arrested as witnesses in their father's case, and he (counsel) had no instructions for the defence.

Buchanan, J., said that, as the issue in this case seemed to be the same as in the criminal trial, it would be inadvisable to take the civil case first. The civil trial might prejudice the prisoner in the criminal trial, but the criminal trial, whatever the result, could not affect the issue of the civil trial.

Mr. Burton said the defendants were arrested as witnesses on the 19th June, and were only kept in custody for a few hours. On security being given for their appearance as witnesses at their father's trial, they were released, and they could easily have come to Cape Town for this case.

Buchanan, J., said that that was not so much the question. The point was that the practice had been established not to hear a civil case before a criminal trial in which the issue was identical.

After further argument, the Court ordered that the witnesses for the plaintiff be now examined, that a joint commission de bene esse issue to take evidence for the defendants, and any further evidence for the plaintiff, the Resident Magistrate of Prieska to be commissioner, and that the Deputy-Sheriff be authorised to sell the goods now under attachment, in respect of which undue preference was alleged, and to retain the proceeds pending the trial. The question of costs was ordered to stand over.

Mr. Burton briefly stated the circumstances of the case. The position, he said, was that the estate was sequestered on the 23rd February, 1907, and on the 15th January—five weeks before the sequestration—goods of considerable value were delivered by the elder Weinberg to his two sons, one of whom is a minor. It was in respect of the goods so delivered that the trustee now claimed on the ground of there having been undue preference. The defendants, in their pleas, claimed that they were engaged by their father as assistants, that he owed them certain wages, and that these goods were payment of the wages in the ordinary course of business. Evidence was then led for the plaintiff.

Joshua Pell, clerk in the Master's Office, was called, and produced certain records in connection with the insolvency of Nathan Weinberg.

Claude Bernard Schultz, attorney, of Prieska, and trustee in the insolvent estate of Nathan Weinberg, produced various documents belonging to the insolvent. The ledger showed an account in the name of Joe Weinberg, showing an amount of £317 10s. due to him by the insolvent in respect of wages. From the debit entry, it appeared that Joe Weinberg obtained goods from his father to the amount of £434 2s. 8d. Nathan Weinberg surrendered voluntarily. The assets (excluding these goods) amounted to £1,032, and the liabilities to £1,938. Joe Weinberg gave a promissory note to his father, dated January 21, 1907, for £121 9s. 5d. All these goods were delivered on the same date. Creditors were pressing the father in December, 1906, and January, 1907, and he gave cheques which were dishonoured. At the end of January—after this delivery—Nathan offered his creditors 5s. in the £. At the third meeting of creditors, Joe Weinberg proved his claim to £317 10s. for wages. He called himself the manager. The books showed wages due to Simon Weinberg amounting to £75, and on the 27th January insolvent delivered to him a wagon, mules, and harness. These were the things witness claimed by reason of undue preference. Simon had also proved his claim. The entries in the ledger—credits and debits—looked as though they had been made at the same time.

Richard Thomas Hyland, accountant, of Prieska, deposed to having drawn up a statement from the books. This showed that there was a deficiency of £705 a week before the delivery of these goods. The position was worse on the 8th February by £200.

This concluded the evidence for the plaintiff, and the further hearing of the case was postponed until after the sitting of the Circuit Court, the case to be set down after notice given to the defendants. The question of costs was reserved.

Postea (November 13th).

Mr. Close, in argument, referred to section 84 of the Insolvent Ordinance and section 8 of Act 38, 1884, and cited Hugo's Trustee v. Lindenberg (2 Juta, 186), Slater's Trustee v. Smith (5 E.D.C., 9), Goosen v. Goosen's Trustee (1 App. Ct., 414), and Estate Green v. S.A. Mutual (21 S.C., 54).

Buchanan, J.: Two actions were brought by the trustees in the insolvent estate of Nathan Weinberg against the two sons, Joseph Weinberg and Simon Weinberg, claiming to have certain transactions entered into between the father and sons in January, 1907, set aside as being an undue preference. These two sons were employed by the father in his business, which he was carrying on at Prieska. The elder son, who was about 22 years of age at the time, claimed that his father owed him £317 10s., being 25½ months' salary—the first 12 months at £10 per month, and the second at £15 a month. The plaintiff's second son Simon, who is a lad of 17, claimed salary due from his father amounting to £75. In the books of the insolvent the amount due to each son was brought up and entered in the ledger, evidently on the same day that the transactions challenged in these cases were entered into. As regards the elder son, the father handed over wagons and merchandise in the first place to pay off the £317 due, and then a further amount of goods to the value of £121 for which the son gave his promissory note at 12 months. The reason given for allowing this long credit was that the stock so taken over was returned stock which had been taken on a previous trading expedition, and which was in consequence not easily and readily disposable. The actions brought are only founded upon the 84th section of the Insolvent Ordinance, which renders liable to be set aside transactions between debtor and creditor which are entered into at a time when the debtor contemplates sequestration of his estate, and with the intention of preferring the creditor. Section 8 of Act 38, 1884, provides that when the assets fairly valued are exceeded by the liabilities fairly calculated, if sequestration takes place within six months after the transaction in question, the onus or burden of proof is upon the defendant to show that the transaction is a bona fide one. In this case the transaction was entered into on the 15th of January, 1907, and on the 23rd February the estate of the father was sequestered. Now, with the burden of proof against them, have the defendants satisfied the Court that at the time of the transaction, the father did not contemplate the sequestration of his estate and did not intend to prefer his sons? Great stress has been laid, and very properly, upon the fact that these transactions which are now in question in this civil suit were made the subject of a criminal charge against the father for fraudulent insolvency, and that the father was at the Circuit Court at Prieska acquitted by the jury of having given this undue preference. But, as was remarked in the early part of the hearing of this case, the benefit of the Act 38, 1884 (section 8), could not be taken advantage by the prosecutor in the criminal case, and, therefore, the onus was upon the prosecutor of proving the state of mind of the insolvent, that he was contemplating sequestration, and that he intended to prefer his sons. In this civil case, on the contrary, the burden is upon the defendants to satisfy the Court that there was no such contemplation. The contemplation is presumed. Have the defendants satisfied the Court that there was no such contemplation? It is alleged that the transactions were in the ordinary course of business. But were they? Here we have two persons, one of whom is still a minor, sons of the insolvent, living with him and working with him in his store for a considerable period. Suddenly, on the 15th January he brings up the salaries of these two sons in his books. There is against these salaries, no payments made to them during all this period, and only a debit for the large amount of the movable assets handed over to the sons. This was alleged to be on the 15th January. Apparently some of it took place a little later than that. On the 29th January, the father gave notice in the "Gazette" of his intention to surrender his estate, and in the schedules which he filed on the 9th February he brought up his debts in round figures at £1,900, and assets at £1,000, leaving a deficiency of something like £900. The father had up to the end of the year been carrying on a business which seemed to be tolerably profitable, and large payments had been made by him to his other creditors. He had been speculating with a man named Smith, whom he sent on trading expeditions into German South-west Africa. Weinberg, being pressed by his creditors left Prieska to go and see about Smith's business, and returned with something like £300 in cash. With this amount he paid off a number of cheques which he had given to sundry creditors, but which had been dishonoured, and he endeavoured to carry on his business. Early in January, Smith sent a heliograph message to the insolvent to the effect that he had got into trouble with the German authorities, and insolvent went up again, and this time all he could bring back from Smith was some goods which were handed over to the sons and a wagon and four mules. In going into the accounts between Smith and Weinberg, the father and son estimated the loss which must be written off for this transaction at £668. Both the father and son said they had received all they expected to be able to recover from Smith. In January, this £670 formed a very large proportion of the deficiency in the estate, and this loss I have no doubt, influenced the mind of the insolvent in his transactions with his sons. It is true that the son Joseph Weinberg, as far back as the previous October, had applied for a licence to go out trading, but he had not gone, and the evidence given by the bank manager states that Weinberg, senior (the father), told him that trade being so bad he intended to send out his son, so as to dispose of his property. When the insolvent came back from Smith he found his estate was hopelessly insolvent, and then not only do we find him settling with his sons, but immediately giving notice in the Gazette, and filing schedules, showing a deficiency of £900, and then on the 29th January we find him offering 6s. in the £ to his creditors. A person who does this must not be surprised if the Court thinks that he entered into these transactions in contemplation of sequestration. I quite agree with Mr. Close in his argument that contemplation of sequestration must be followed with proof of intention to prefer, but at the same time, the Court is at liberty to draw its conclusion as to the intention to prefer not only from the contemplation of sequestration itself, but also from the other circumstances in the case. The impression it makes on my mind is that the insolvent, knowing his position to be one of insolvency, knowing that he had lost very largely in his transactions with Smith wanted to secure his sons, and fully expected that he would have to surrender his estate very shortly. The action he took almost immediately afterwards shows that he was perfectly aware that he was unable to pay his debts. There were communications between himself and the bank manager as to a bill which the insolvent had discounted in the bank, and he said that if the maker could not meet it, he certainly could not pay it. I think this was about the 16th or 17th January, at the very time these transactions were entered into. No doubt, a person who is insolvent may pay creditors, and such payments cannot be attacked when made in the ordinary course of business, and it is said that these transactions with the sons were made in the ordinary course of business. Now, I think it would be a very wide latitude to say that transactions of this kind, with a boy of 17, for instance, who was in his employ, and to whom he said he owed £75 for wages, were transactions in the ordinary course of business. The other son was older, and apparently the other son hoped to make some money out of the transaction, and, judging from subsequent events he seems to have done very well, for he had promissory notes from purchasers for something like £300 or £400, which were seized by the trustees when this action was commenced. Assuming, and it is not denied, that these two sons were creditors in the estate, one for £75 and the other for £317, the settlement with them immediately before sequestration, and at a time when the father contemplated sequestration of his estate, and, with the intention to prefer, must be set aside, under the 84th section. With regard to the further transaction of the sale of £121 worth of goods, for which the son gave his promissory note, I think that transaction cannot be attacked in this case. It is not an undue preference, and there has been no attempt under any other section of the Act to set aside that transaction. As far as these proceedings are concerned, that transaction, the sale of £121 worth of goods to Joseph Weinberg, must stand, and the trustee who has taken this property from Joseph Weinberg must restore it to him. As far as the other amounts are concerned, the settlement must be declared an undue preference, and the goods given up by insolvent to his sons must be handed back to the trustee. As a matter of fact, I understand the trustee is in possession of all the goods. The judgment of the Court will be for plaintiff, declaring the payment of £317 10s. to Joseph Weinberg an undue preference, and £75 to Simon Weinberg an undue preference. The judgment will carry costs. By consent of the parties it will be ordered that the plaintiff deliver up to J. Weinberg his promissory note for £121 on J. Weinberg endorsing the promissory note now in the possession of the trustees given by Weinberg and Susman for goods sold to them.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

HENNESSY V. FURTER. { 1907.

Brokerage commission—Introduction of purchaser—Remote result.

The plaintiff and the defendant agreed that, in consideration of the former advertising farms which the defendant had for sale, and introducing to the defendant prospective purchasers, the brokerage commission and fees on any sales accruing from any transactions resulting therefrom shall be shared equally between them. The plaintiff, having issued such advertisements, J. called and asked for details, saying that he wished to purchase a farm for himself. In fact, J. had been sent by P., who was the broker of R., who was anxious to obtain farm property by exchanging his town property for the same. The plaintiff placed J. in direct communication with the defendant, but no sale resulted. It was stated by P. that he was introduced to the defendant by J., but the defendant denied the statement, and the Court found, as a fact, that P. was not so introduced.

Held, in an action for a share of the commission received by the defendant in effecting a sale of R.'s town property to one V., and a sale of V.'s farm property to R., that the plaintiff was not entitled to such commission, inasmuch as the sale of such farm by V. to R., was too remote a result of the introduction by the plaintiff of J. to the defendant.

This was an action brought by Alfred Theodore Hennessy, of Cape Town, against Pieter Louis Furter, also of Cape Town, for division of certain commission upon the sales of certain farm properties, in terms of an agreement.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for plaintiff; Mr. H. S. van Zyl was for defendant.

Mr. Buchanan applied for a postponement of the hearing, in consequence of the serious illness of his client's chief witness, Edward Parry, broker, Cape Town. Counsel produced a medical certificate showing that it was impossible for Mr. Parry to attend the court to give evidence.

By consent, the hearing was postponed until Wednesday next, and Dr. Rainsford was appointed commissioner to take the evidence of Mr. Parry meanwhile, costs to be costs in the cause.

Postea (November 20th). The case was heard.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. Plaintiff is Alfred Theodore Hennessy, an accountant and broker, of Cape Town. Defendant is Pieter Louis Furter, of Church-street, Cape Town.

2. In or about the month of September, 1906, defendant, who then had and was thereafter likely to have a number of farms for sale, contracted and agreed with plaintiff that in consideration of plaintiff advertising such farms for sale, and introducing to the defendant prospective purchasers, the brokerage commission and fees on any sales accruing from any transactions resulting therefrom should be shared equally between plaintiff and defendant.

3. Thereafter, in accordance with the said agreement, plaintiff offered for several weeks, by public advertisement, farms for sale in the districts in which the said farms were situated.

4. As a result, a number of applications were made to plaintiff by intending purchasers, or by persons on their behalf, in respect of the said farms, which said applications the plaintiff submitted to the defendant, and thereafter, and in consequence thereof, the defendant effected certain sales, among others of certain farms and properties to one Rayner and one Russouw, upon which sales the defendant has received certain sums as commission and fees, one-half of which amount thereupon became due and payable to the plaintiff under and by virtue of the aforesaid contract and agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant.

5. The particulars of these said transactions and the amount of brokerage commission and fees received by the defendant thereunder are not within the knowledge of the plaintiff. The defendant, though frequently requested so to do, refuses to disclose the said particulars or to pay to the plaintiff the amount due to him thereupon.

6. All times have elapsed and all conditions have been fulfilled to entitle plaintiff to payment, but defendant wrongfully, unlawfully, and in breach of his said agreement, refuses to account to plaintiff for brokerage commission and fees received from such sales, or to pay to plaintiff his share thereof or any portion of the same, though frequently requested so to do.

Wherefore plaintiff claims: (a) A just and true account, supported by all proper and necessary vouchers, of all sums had and received and paid to defendant as brokerage commission or fees on aforesaid sales. (b) On debate of the account, payment of the sum or sums of money which may be found owing to plaintiff thereon. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. Defendant admits paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of plaintiff's declaration, save that he says that the agreement mentioned in paragraph 2 was a verbal agreement, and also provided that all out-of-pocket expenses incurred by defendant in the conveyance of intending purchasers introduced by plaintiff to the said farms for the purpose of inspecting them, as well as all advertising expenses incurred by plaintiff in accordance with the agreement, should, in case a sale resulted from such introduction, be deducted from the brokerage commission and fees before dividing the same equally between plaintiff and defendant.

2. With regard to paragraph 4, defendant admits that plaintiff from time to time submitted to him the names of intending purchasers, to wit one Dix, one Cosky-White, one Darvell, one Visser, one Van Niekerk, one Dreyer, one Eakin, and one Joel, with all of whom defendant entered into negotiations, and conveyed some of them to the said farms, but in no case was any sale effected.

3. Defendant further admits that he sold two farms to one Rayner, but says that they were farms which did not fall within the scope of the said agreement, inasmuch as the said Rayner was never introduced to him by plaintiff or through the instrumentality of plaintiff, and plaintiff is not entitled to a share in the brokerage commission and fees in respect of the sale of the said two farms. Save as above, defendant denies all the allegations contained in paragraph 4, and denies specifically that he sold any farm or other property to one Russouw, or that he sold any farm or other property whatsoever in consequence of plaintiff's introduction, and in respect of which plaintiff is entitled to a share in the brokerage commission and fees.

4. Defendant says there are no particulars to disclose to plaintiff, and there are no brokerage commission and fees whatsoever in respect of which plaintiff is entitled to demand an account from defendant. Save as above defendant denies paragraphs 5 and 6.

Wherefore defendant claims that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

For replication to defendant's plea plaintiff admits paragraph 1 of the plea. As to paragraphs 2 and 3, plaintiff says that sales did result from the introduction to defendant of the persons named in the plea, and in particular from the introduction of the said Joel, and further, that the sales to the said Rayner resulted from introductions made by plaintiff to defendant. Save as above, and save for the admissions in the said plea contained, plaintiff denies all the other allegations of fact in the said plea contained, and joins issue thereon, and again prays judgment as in his declaration set forth.

The plaintiff stated he was approached by the defendant, who said he had several farms in the Malmesbury, Wellington, and other districts, and that if witness could find him purchasers for them, they would share the commission. Witness sent several people to defendant, amongst whom was Mr. Joel. About that time witness had other dealings with defendant with regard to loans, and shared commission with him. Witness heard that through the instrumentality of Mr. Joel certain sales were effected, and out of which witness claimed half the commission. He wrote to defendant and interviewed him with regard to his share of the commission, and defendant said the sale had not been negotiated through his (plaintiff's) office, but that he would make witness a present of half. Witness replied that he did not want a present. The sales that witness claimed commission on were between Rayner and Russouw. Witness wanted a statement of account. In cross-examination, witness said that when approached by Mr. Joel he did not raise the question as to whether he was a purchaser or a middleman. Witness knew there was some difference between Parry (the man who told him about Rayner's sale) and defendant about some commission. Witness introduced Joel to Truter, and Joel introduced Parry to Furter. Witness claimed a commission on the town sales.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How can you when the agreement was for farm property?—The farm property would not have been purchased but for the sale of the town property. The one sale cannot be separated from the other.

Witness (continuing) said that he only claimed what he considered he was justly entitled to. If Furter did not get commission on the town properties, witness did not claim commission.

To the Court: Witness contended that if Furter sold a farm to anybody on an introduction from his office, he was entitled to commission.

The evidence of Mr. Parry, taken on commission, was then read and put in.

James Rayner stated that Parry used to be his broker. Last year Parry told witness he had a gentleman, who would exchange a farm property for a town property, and introduced witness to Joel. Witness sold his town property for £6,250, and the farm property was sold for £5,000. Witness paid £156 in commission. Subsequently, Furter approached witness, and told him that he knew of a farm that would just suit him, and that if he did not tell Parry he would introduce it to him. Witness sold a town property for £6,000, and bought the other property for £3,750. He paid £100 commission.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Where are these town properties?—In Cape Town.

[But what do farmers want with town properties?—I suppose they bought them for investment.

[But do they live here?—No.

Witness (continuing) said that Furter eventually gave Parry £50, half of the commission out of the last sale.

To the Court: Mr. Parry introduced witness to Furter. He never had any direct communication with Hennessy.

Mr. W. H. Walshe, broker, gave evidence as to the custom adopted in the sale of property, and considered that plaintiff was entitled to commission, as he had been the means of introducing the parties.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

The defendant, Pieter Louis Furter, stated that in August last year he made an agreement with plaintiff that plaintiff should advertise certain farms for sale, and forward him the applications, and he would go further with them. That was done, and several people were sent from time to time and considerable correspondence passed between him and them, but nothing came of it. The plaintiff sent witness to see Joel, and explained the purport of his visit. Joel never mentioned Parry, and witness did not again see him. Joel never introduced Parry to witness, but the latter introduced himself, and asked him to do business. Witness wrote to certain probable sellers, and then he saw Rayner for the first time. Witness went on to deny that plaintiff had any interest in certain specified transactions.

Cross-examined, witness denied that he told Rayner not to let Parry know of the deal about the second farm. Parry went to witness exactly as a broker would. Witness was to have been introduced to Parry.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But Parry says that he was introduced to you by Joel?—That is absolutely an untruth.

Daniel C. Boonzaier, handwriting expert, considered that the signatures alleged to have been made by Mr. Parry were the same.

Marthinus Johannes Dreyer, a baker, stated he gave Parry Mr. Furter's address, when the former asked him if he knew of any farms for sale.

In cross-examination, witness admitted he did not introduce the parties.

Daniel Gerhardus Russouw stated he acted on behalf of his son in exchanging the Malmesbury property for town property. He approached Furter about the matter, but was introduced to Rayner by Parry.

Counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 28th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The declaration states that in September, 1906, the defendant, who then had, and thereafter was likely to have, a number of farms for sale, agreed with the plaintiff that, in consideration of the plaintiff advertising such farms for sale and introducing to the defendant prospective purchasers, the brokerage commission and fees on any sales accruing from any transactions resulting therefrom should be shared equally between the plaintiff and the defendant. This statement is admitted by the defendant in his plea. A copy of the "Cape Times" of October 12, 1906, has been produced, in which appears an advertisement to the effect that the plaintiff had farms for sale in the Wellington, Paarl, Stellenbosch, and Malmesbury districts. Similar advertisements were from time to time published, and among the persons who inquired from the plaintiff about those farms was one Joel, who asked for details. The plaintiff said that he would put Joel in direct communication with the person for whom he was acting, namely, defendant. The plaintiff then informed the defendant about the matter, upon which the defendant went to see Joel. If in consequence of this introduction the defendant had sold one of the farms he had for sale to

Joel, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff would have been entitled to a share of any commission received by the defendant from Joel. None of the farms, however, was sold to Joel. According to Parry's evidence, it was he who had sent Joel to make inquiries from the plaintiff. Parry was the broker of one Rayner, who had some town property for sale, and was willing to exchange it for a good farm. Parry states that he (Parry) was introduced to the defendant by Joel, and that upon such introduction the defendant gave him the particulars of a farm which he had for sale called Modderkloof. These particulars were communicated by Parry to Rayner, with the result that Rossouw, the owner of Modderkloof, sold that farm to Rayner, who on his own part sold some town property to Rossouw. The defendant in his evidence denied that he was ever introduced by Joel to Parry, and his denial is strengthened by a document signed by Parry himself, in which he withdrew the statement that he had introduced Joel to the defendant. In his evidence, he denied his signature to the document, but I am quite satisfied that the signature is his. His evidence is in every way unsatisfactory, and I am not prepared to accept his statement that he introduced Joel to the defendant. In the face of the defendant's absolute denial of the statement. But assuming that Parry was introduced to the defendant by Joel, it does not follow that because Parry ultimately negotiated a purchase of the farm with the defendant a commission became payable under the contract. The plaintiff never introduced a prospective purchaser of the farm to the defendant. He introduced Joel, who admittedly was not a prospective purchaser. Joel introduced Parry, who was acting as the broker of a prospective purchaser, but the introduction by Joel of Parry did not amount to an introduction by the plaintiff of Parry to the defendant. Joel was not the agent of a prospective purchaser, and he seems to have represented himself to the plaintiff as being a purchaser on his own behalf. When the plaintiff introduced Joel to the defendant, it was certainly as a purchaser on his own behalf. If Joel was really acting as a go-between on behalf of Parry, and deceived the plaintiff, the defendant was no party to the deception. It may have been an indirect result of the introduction of Joel by the plaintiff to the defendant that the defendant ultimately found a purchaser in Parry as the agent of Rayner, but it is the direct, and not the ultimate result of the introduction that must be looked at. The plaintiff goes so far as to say that, although only farms were mentioned in his agreement with the defendant, yet as the sale of Rayner's town property was one of the ultimate results of his introduction of Joel to the defendant, he would also be entitled to a share of any commission the defendant may have received (which he did not) for the sale of such property. Nay, he goes still further, and contends that because after the sale of the one farm the defendant induced the owner of a neighbouring farm to sell it to Rayner, a commission became payable to the plaintiff in respect of such neighbouring farm also. If such a contention were allowed, it would be difficult to know where and when the plaintiff's rights are to cease in respect of transactions effected by the defendant. The contract was that the plaintiff is to share in commissions accruing from transactions resulting from the introduction of prospective purchasers to the defendant. The plaintiff would read this as meaning that he is to have the benefit of transactions which are the indirect as well as the direct result of his introductions. The more reasonable construction appears to me to be that he is to take the benefit only of the direct results of his introductions. "It were infinite," said Lord Bacon, "for the law to consider the causes of causes and their impulses one of another: therefore it contenteth itself with the immediate cause, and judgment of acts by that without looking to any further degree." Even if it be true, a point on which I am not satisfied, that Joel introduced Parry to the defendant, then it might fairly be held that Joel was the immediate cause of the transactions going through, but it would be a misuse of words to say that the previous introduction of Joel to the defendant was also such an immediate cause. I am of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiff has not made out his right to a share of the commission, and that there should be absolution from the instance, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GARCIA AND OTHERS V. } 1907.
CARR. } Nov. 14th.

This was an action in which Celestino Garcia, Manuel Fernandez, Archangelo Gregorini, and Jose Barcala claimed certain sums of money due for work done under a certain contract entered into between the plaintiffs and defendant, who is a quarry owner at the Paarl, and also for an amount due for work done at the special request of the defendant, not strictly under the contract, and for an amount of £50 as and for damages for breach of contract by reason of the defendant refusing to allow the plaintiffs to carry out their share of the contract.

The total amounts claimed were £72, due for work done, and £50, damages for breach of contract.

The plaintiffs' declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are Celestino Garcia, of Brackenfell, in the Cape Division, Manuel Fernandez, of Simon's Town, Archangelo Gregorini, of Simon's Town, and Jose Barcala, of Paarl. The defendant is Andrew Carr, a contractor, of Paarl.

2. On or about the 18th October, 1906, the plaintiffs of the one part entered into an agreement with the defendant of the other part, whereby it was agreed that the plaintiffs should quarry all granite for the defendant on his quarry at Paarl for a period of 11 months at the rate of 64d. per cubic foot, in such sizes and quantities as the defendant might from time to time require, and that in the event of quarrying becoming dull, the plaintiffs should have the right to dress the granite required by the defendant for all such contracts as he might enter into from and after the 18th October, 1906, with any other person or persons, for kerbing or guttering, at the current rates of wages, with the exception of a certain contract between the defendant and the Cape Town Municipality, in which case the dressing of the granite was required to be done at the old prices.

3. Plaintiffs duly proceeded to carry out the terms of the said agreement, and continued in such performance and execution until the 16th April, 1907, at which date there was due to them for work done in terms of the agreement the sum of £122 2s. 64d., as will more fully appear from the account hereunto annexed marked "A."

4. During the course of the execution of the said agreement the plaintiffs did certain work for and on behalf of the defendant at his special instance and request, in and about the preparation of the quarry pit, and the removal and erection of a certain crane, for which said work the defendant is indebted to them in the sum of £43 5s. 4d., as will more fully appear from the account hereunto annexed marked "B."

5. In part liquidation of the indebtedness aforesaid, the defendant has, since the 16th April, 1907, paid to the plaintiffs moneys amounting in all to the sum of £37 12s. 4d., and on or about the 14th and 20th June, 1907, respectively, gave them two postdated cheques for £22 13s. 6d. and £15 15s. 8d., payable respectively on the 10th August and 27th August, 1907, for which sums the plaintiffs have given the defendant credit on account, leaving a balance due to them of £72 10s. 44d.

6. On or about the 16th April, 1907, the defendant, in breach of the terms of the aforesaid agreement to employ the plaintiffs to do all quarrying and dressing of granite for a period of 11 months from the 18th October, 1906, gave notice to the plaintiffs to cease work, and, notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiffs have at all times material been ready and willing to continue in the employment of the defendant, in terms of the agreement, employed other persons to quarry and dress granite and to do work in the said quarry which the plaintiffs were entitled to do, thereby causing damage to the plaintiffs in the sum of £50.

7. Notwithstanding demand for the aforesaid sums of £72 10s. 44d. and £50, the defendant has failed and neglected to pay the said sums or any part thereof.

Wherefore the plaintiffs claim: (a) Judgment for the sum of £72 10s. 44d., as aforesaid; (b) interest a tempore morie on the said sum; (c) judgment for the sum of £50 as and for damages; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

For a plea to the declaration, defendant says:

1. Paragraph 1 is admitted.

2. Defendant admits that on or about the 18th October, 1906, he entered into a contract with plaintiff Garcia in the terms in paragraph 2 of the declaration, with the reservation of a right to employ extra labour if necessary, but says that the other three plaintiffs were then no parties to the contract. The other plaintiffs for a time worked for Garcia under an arrangement with him, and ultimately, after disputes had arisen among themselves, were accepted by defendant at their and Garcia's request as parties to the contract, and then affixed their signatures thereto.

3. Prior to the acceptance of all the plaintiffs as parties to the contract, defendant made certain payments to Garcia on account of work done by him, or on his behalf, under the contract. Subsequently to the acceptance of all the plaintiffs as parties to the contract, it was arranged between plaintiffs and defendant that all orders for work should be given by defendant to Garcia, and that all payments should be made by defendant to Garcia for and on behalf of all the plaintiffs.

4. Thereafter plaintiffs continued to perform work for defendant under the contract, and from time to time defendant made payments on account of such work to Garcia for and on behalf of all the plaintiffs.

5. In or about the month of April, 1907, plaintiff Garcia asked to be released from the contract, as he wished to proceed to South America, and defendant agreed to such release, provided that plaintiffs agreed to cancellation of the contract between themselves and defendant. Plaintiffs did so agree, and the contract was thereafter deemed by the parties thereto to be, and in fact was, cancelled. Garcia thereupon left the Paarl, and thereafter plaintiffs Fernandez and Gregorini also departed, leaving no address. Barcala alone remained at the Paarl.

6. Thereafter defendant, having promised to offer work to the three plaintiffs, other than Garcia, if work improved, offered employment to Barcala, an order having been given to him (defendant). Barcala agreed to commence work on a certain day, but failed to do so, and defendant thereupon engaged other workmen. Shortly after Barcala and Garcia (who had not gone to South America) appeared, and asked for work, and agreed with defendant to commence work on a certain day. Garcia did not appear, but Barcala worked for four days, when defendant was compelled to discharge him, as he lawfully might, in consequence of incompetency and inefficiency in respect of the work performed by him. Defendant paid Barcala 8s. per diem for the four days' work performed by him.

7. Thereafter Garcia came, with Barcala, to defendant to ask for work, but defendant, as he lawfully might, refused further to employ them, and arranged with them to make a settlement with them on behalf of plaintiffs for all work performed by plaintiffs and not paid for.

8. Defendant thereupon measured up the work performed by plaintiffs, and in settlement therefor paid to Barcala, for and on behalf of plaintiffs, the sum of £42 13s. 6d. The payment was for work done, but by agreement between the parties, in accordance with the custom of the trade, not to be paid for, save as to certain advances from time to time, until the sale of the stones.

9. Disputes arose as to the measurements of the work, and thereupon the work was again measured by two impartial persons, and on such measurement and a revision of account a further sum of £16 15s. 8d. was found due to plaintiffs, which was duly paid.

10. Plaintiffs in all did work for defendant in terms of the contract to the value of £172 15s. 7½d., and have been paid in excess thereof, viz., in the sum in all of £176 18s. 9d. The account of work and payments in the declaration referred to is incomplete.

11. With reference to paragraph 4, defendant denies that plaintiffs did any work other than that provided and paid for in terms of the contract. Any work in paragraph 4 referred to was work done in the ordinary course of preparation for quarrying, was incidental thereto, and cannot be charged for against defendant. Defendant is in no way indebted to plaintiffs in respect thereof.

12. By reason of the premises defendant says that he was and is under no obligation further to employ plaintiffs or any of them, and is not liable to them in any sum in damages by reason of such non-employment.

13. He further denies that he is indebted to them in any sum. He admits that he refuses to pay the sums referred to in paragraph 7, says he is justified in such refusal, and, save as above, denies the allegations in the declaration contained.

Wherefore he prays that plaintiffs' claims may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones for plaintiff; Mr. Bisset for defendant.

The plaintiffs then went over the principal features of the declaration. At the outset the defendant's attorney remarked that plaintiff was able to speak excellent English, whereupon his Lordship said, "Proceed in English." Plaintiff, however, was unable, or affected to be unable, to comprehend, and maintained a stony silence. Thereupon the interpreter in Italian was sworn.

There was almost immediately a deadlock by reason of confusion in the accounts. His Lordship said that all these things should have been arranged beforehand. He refused to sit there whilst counsel fixed up things that should have previously been decided.

Counsel thereupon proceeded to direct the evidence of the plaintiff as to who put an end to the contract.

Witness stated that on April 16 work was stopped on the quarry. Witness denied that he agreed to cancel the contract. The signature on the cancellation was not in witness's handwriting. Work ceased on April 16, because Carr said he had no orders for stone. He told them to stop working for a few weeks. Witness replied that he could not stay without working. Witness wanted Carr to measure the stone, so they could settle accounts, and he could return to Brackenfeld to work. Witness was married, and had a family, and could not do without work, as he had to support them. Witness told Carr that he was going to Brackenfeld, whilst the other plaintiffs remained behind to await Carr's orders. Two of them subsequently left, because Carr had no orders for work. Witness only went to Brackenfell as a temporary measure. He returned to the quarry on June 13, having been recalled by Barcala. Witness went to see Carr, and Carr said he did not want Barcala back. He said he had no work, and would measure the stone and pay witness off. Witness asked Carr for payment, and Carr told him he would pay him, and that he had no more work, yet three days after he put other men into work. On the following day he paid two post-dated cheques, one for 15 guineas and the other for £20. Witness did not accept this amount as being sufficient.

In cross-examination, witness said that Barcala was dismissed on June 15. Barcala said he had been dismissed because he was prying into Carr's business and not because of inefficiency.

Witness was not present when the stone was measured after June 15. The cheques on June 15 were not in settlement of account. Witness thought the cheques were only on account. When witness received the cheque he told Mr. Carr that the special work he had done was not included in it.

Archangelo Gregorini gave corroborative evidence. He was now making 11s. per day, but if the work with Carr had continued he would have made 30s. per day.

Evidence of a like nature was given by the other plaintiffs.

The witness Garcia, recalled by his lordship, stated he measured the stone lying in the quarry on 16th April, with the exception of the rough blocks, which they thought of working again; the page contained all the stone in the quarry. When he came back in June, all the stuff which he left lying at the quarry in April was not there.

Andrew Carr, defendant, stated that on 18th October, 1906, he entered into the contract with Garcia. The other plaintiffs afterwards joined in the contract as partners. Witness explained the work of the plaintiffs on the contract. On 17th December, the work was suspended, and about the New Year the work was re-started. Garcia asked to be allowed to restart the work, saying that a little money could be paid by defendant on account. In February, the work was suspended again owing to slackness, and a week later the plaintiffs started work again. About a week after they had measured up, Garcia, with the others, came to see witness, and Garcia said that he intended leaving for South America. He wished to be relieved of the contract. Garcia was the head man, and received all orders and payments. Witness did not agree to Garcia leaving, or another man taking his place. Witness said he would employ the other three if they were competent. Witness understood that the contract between him and the four was cancelled on that day, as he promised to employ the other three. From 16th April to 18th May, 1,166 cubic feet had gone out of the quarry, representing about £31. There was a settlement to the extent of £32 for 1,166 feet of gutting, plus 90 feet of dressing, between them. Barcala told witness that Garcia had not gone to South America, but was working in the Brackenfell Quarry. On the 5th or 6th June, Barcala and Garcia came to see witness, and asked witness if they might resume work. Witness agreed to this, and both men were to be at work on the following Monday. Garcia did not come as promised, and Barcala and an Austrian were started on the job. On a visit to the quarry, witness found that the cutting was not properly done. It was evident that Barcala did not understand the work at all. Witness then dismissed Barcala. Then Garcia came out, and witness showed him the rock, and he said concrete could be made of it. Witness said he would measure up, and pay them for everything they had done. When Barcala measured up, he made out 450 feet more in his favour. Witness suggested a joint measurement, which Barcala agreed to, and he raised no objection to it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: The day-book he used was a wages-book and an order-book. Three pages were torn out because he spilled an ink bottle on the book. Between April and May, kerb and gutting went out of the quarry to the extent of 1,166 ft. and 63 ft. In the first or second week of April the quarry was upside down. The contract was cancelled on 10th April. Witness did not refuse to take Garcia back; he came back to assist Barcala for a few days. The contract was never mentioned then. He maintained that the plaintiffs had been paid in full. He had nothing to advance against the correctness of the measurements of the plaintiff. If there had been no complaint when he paid them on 15th June the matter would have been settled. As a matter of fact, the amount was wrong, and if the plaintiffs had not pointed out the error they would have been worse off.

Further evidence having been called for the defendant, and counsel for the plaintiffs heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: From the view I take of the evidence given in Court, I do not think it is necessary to hear Mr. Bisset. The issue raised by the parties as to the cancellation of the contract in the case will throw a great deal of light upon the value of the evidence of the witnesses. The plaintiff has put in a claim for damages on the ground that he was prevented by a wrongful act of the defendant from earning certain remuneration. The defendant states, on the other hand, that at the time that the work ceased it ceased in consequence of an agreement between the parties for the cancellation of the contract. The Court has now to decide whether the contract was cancelled, or whether it was improperly put an end to. Now, it appears at the time when the work ceased a measurement took place of stone lying in the quarry, and this measurement took place for the purpose of coming to a final settlement. It became necessary, because there seemed to be an arrangement between the partners in this concern to arrive at some arrangement for settlement amongst themselves. And that settlement was necessary, I am satisfied upon the evidence, because Garcia was on the point of leaving the country. I come to that conclusion upon the evidence of Innes, Dunstan, and Gregorini. It was stated at the time that Garcia was not certain of going, but expected he might go. That was the evidence given by one of the plaintiffs. Now, this statement is corroborated by Innes that Garcia actually came to them and said "Good-bye," and Dunstan says that he added he would never come back to the Pearl. If that was so, it was absolutely necessary for him to see Mr. Carr and see that his part of the contract was cancelled, and his part could not have been cancelled without involving the cancellation of the contract with the other three partners, because Garcia seems to have been the man of skill and experience in this matter, and I am satisfied from Mr. Carr's evidence that he could not have possibly gone on with the three less experienced men left after Garcia's leaving. Immediately after this Barcala was the man dealt with by Mr. Carr in the matter, and he says Garcia did tell him that he and Barcala had come to a settlement, and in future Barcala would be entitled to receive the money. I accept that as perfectly true. I need not go further into the question by comparison of the evidence as to cancellation of the contract, and I will say that upon that point I do not accept the evidence of Garcia or that of Barcala. That will seriously affect the further branch of the case. Garcia says that he never intended to leave. I come to the conclusion that he did, and intended to cancel the contract. Barcala says that he never heard anything about Garcia leaving. I come to the conclusion that the contract was cancelled by mutual consent. Now, the question arises whether there are certain other items of work for which the plaintiffs are entitled to be paid. That is not a question which is free from doubt. We have it stated by the plaintiffs that they made a certain measurement of the work in April and they did that in the absence of Mr. Carr, and consequently that cannot be accepted as conclusive, because it was made in the absence of Mr. Carr. The question remains: Is the measurement correct? If their evidence had been of such a character that I could rely upon their statements, I could accept their statements made in the account without requiring any further corroboration, but under the circumstances I find that Mr. Carr himself has supplied the Court with a basis for measurement of the work in the quarry. He has entered in these books everything he has tendered, and given a statement of everything removed, and here again Barcala comes in direct conflict with the witnesses in such a manner that I must characterise his evidence as untruthful. It appears on the 15th there had been a settlement arrived at with which Garcia was not satisfied. Thereupon Mr. Carr said: "Very well. We will go into the measurement again, and if there is anything wrong we will have a further statement." Then Barcala takes part in the measurements, which were to constitute the final arrangement between the parties. The account finally arrived at was of the total figure of £15 15s. 8d. Whatever Garcia may say as to this being payment on account, it clearly was not intended to be payment on account as far as Mr. Carr was concerned. All the items in this account are given in the closest detail, and after a balance has been struck and former errors rectified, a cheque is given to Barcala for £15 15s. 8d. Garcia is satisfied with this cheque. Barcala's attorney makes a demand on his behalf in the sum of £166. The correspondence proceeds, Barcala insisting upon this claim. Well, it is explained that Mr. Carr never had any dealings with Barcala, but that there was a man called Garcia whom he chiefly dealt with, and that cheques had been paid to Barcala, owing to Garcia having stated that Barcala had advanced him money. Here is a statement, then, for the first time, that the attorney seems to be told that the whole case had altered, Barcala not claiming money on his own behalf, and that he had other partners. The conclusion I come to, therefore, is that there was a final settlement which there is now no clear evidence to upset. The judgment will be for the defendant, with costs.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

GARDINER V. GARDINER.

This was an action brought by Charles Alfred Percy Gardiner against his wife, Edith Amelia Gardiner, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Mr. Gutsche was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

Charles Gardiner, plaintiff, stated he was married to the defendant in Sydney, New South Wales, and had been in the Colony since 1901. He lived with the defendant until 1903, when the defendant went to Australia, and plaintiff went to England on a business trip. When he was leaving on board the Runic some friends came to see him off. One of the young ladies—a girl of some sixteen or seventeen years of age—refused to go ashore. When the ship got to sea witness put the girl in charge of a Dean and his wife, and paid for her passage. He had no hand in her taking this step. When he got to England he was arrested, and charged with abduction. He was tried at Bow-street, and honourably acquitted. He returned back to South Africa on July 23 of the same year, and the defendant refused to come back at all. She did not exactly give a reason, but put it down to the girl who left on the Runic.

Decree of restitution granted, the defendant to return or receive the plaintiff on or about December 31 next, failing which, the usual rule nisi returnable January 30.

BIRCH V. BIRCH.

Mr. Watermeyer, for the plaintiff, Emilia F. L. Birch, moved for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The parties were married about July 27, 1905. There was one child of the marriage. In July, 1905, the defendant unlawfully deserted the plaintiff, and since then had not returned to her. She claimed custody of the child of the marriage, restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

The plaintiff, Amelia Francisca Birch, in the course of her evidence, said that she married the defendant on July 27, 1905. On the same day as the marriage he left her, and never came back again. After the marriage he went to Rhodesia. He had written a letter stating inter alia that he had broken off all connection with witness and her family.

Decree of restitution of conjugal rights granted, the defendant to return to the plaintiff on or about December 31, failing which the usual rule nisi returnable January 30.

FOURIE V. BRAND.

Dr. Greer was for the applicant, and Mr. Upington was for the defendant. Counsel for the applicant moved to make absolute an interdict and ejectment granted by his lordship the Chief Justice.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: The applicant bought and the respondent sold certain landed property upon certain written conditions of sale. The parties went to a man who considered himself a legal adviser, and he drew up this document. This legal gentleman comes forward and says there were a number of other conditions which were agreed to at the time. Whatever these conditions are, as long as a contract stands, the document must be taken in preference. By this document certain landed property was sold for a certain price. The first interference complained of is that he prevented the respondent from cutting wood. Then it is also said that the respondent refuses to give up possession of a house. The applicant applies for a rule nisi calling on the respondent to show cause why the seller should not be restrained from interfering with the purchaser in his lawful use and enjoyment of the property, and also that the seller be forthwith ejected from the premises. If the written conditions of sale did not represent the contract, the proper course for the respondent to take was to take steps to rectify the conditions of sale. I think the purchaser is entitled to have an interdict restraining the seller from interfering with the property. The Court will order the interim interdict to be continued until 7th February next, the question of costs to stand over. The purchaser must be prepared forthwith to carry out his part of the contract, and pay the purchase price.

GREEVE V. KEAL.

This was an action brought by Magdalena Greeve against Herbert Sydney Keal for damages for seduction. Mr. Roux was for the plaintiff and Mr. Payne was for the curator ad litem.

Evidence taken on commission having been read,

Buchanan, J., said that, under the circumstances, and as the defendant was only fifteen or sixteen years of age, and the plaintiff about four years older, he could not give anything for seduction. For other expenses, including maintenance, he allowed the plaintiff £20, with costs. The Master authorised to pay this amount out of the funds in his hands belonging to the minor.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

JACOBS V. CLOSE. { 1907
Nov. 15th.

Pleading—Exception.

This was an argument on an exception taken by the defendant (John Edwin Paul Close) to the declaration of the plaintiff (Alfred Ernest Jacob).

Plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff resides at Cape Town and, until the matters hereinafter complained of, carried on the business there of a glass merchant. The defendant is an accountant practising at Cape Town.

2. On or about the 27th day of August, 1906, the plaintiff of the one part, the defendant of the second part, and certain creditors of the plaintiff by themselves or their duly authorised agents of the third part, signed and executed a certain deed of assignment, copy whereof is hereunto annexed marked "A."

3. By the said deed, the plaintiff ceded and assigned to the defendant, his executors, administrators, and assigns the whole of his estate and property, movable and immovable, for the benefit of the creditors of the plaintiff, and the defendant agreed, for remuneration, to realise and distribute the same in legal order of preference for the benefit of the said creditors, and to pay over to the plaintiff any surplus (if any) which might remain after such distribution. The parties of the third part agreed in consideration of the foregoing to release the plaintiff from all claims which they or any of them had or might thereafter have against him or his estate for or in respect of any debt, transaction, matter, or thing up to the date of the said deed.

4. It was further provided that the defendant should with all convenient speed collect, get in, sell and dispose of, and convert into money all the said landed property, goods, estate, and effects so assigned, and every part thereof in such manner as shall seem to him most expedient, and shall stand possessed of the same and of the monies to be received by virtue of the provisions of the said deed after paying thereout all expenses and charges connected with the execution of the said deed, and of carrying out the trusts under the said deed and incidental thereto, upon trust in the first place to pay all mortgage and preferent debts due by the plaintiff, and thereafter to pay and divide the balance of the said estate among the concurrent creditors of the said Jacob pro rata. The plaintiff craves leave to refer to the terms of the said deed.

5. The plaintiff duly assigned the whole of his estate and property as aforesaid, and duly carried out all his obligations under the said deed.

6. At the date of the said assignment there was lawfully due and owing to the Corporation of the city of Cape Town the sum of £36 ls. 11d., being for rates due upon certain of the immovable property so assigned of which the defendant had due legal notice and knowledge at all times material, and it became and was the duty of the defendant under the said deed to pay the said sum out of the proceeds of the said estate with all convenient speed.

7. The defendant did not pay the said sum as aforesaid, and the said Corporation instituted legal proceedings for the recovery thereof against the plaintiff, and on or about the 30th day of October, 1906, obtained judgment against him for the said amount, with costs in the Court of Resident Magistrate for Cape Town, and thereafter large quanties of glass, the property of the plaintiff, acquired subsequent to the said assignment, were attached and sold in execution of the said judgment on or about the 4th December, 1906, of all which the defendant had full legal notice and knowledge.

8. The value of the said glass so attached and sold was the sum of £531 15s. 4d., and the plaintiff has in addition suffered loss by having to close his said business, and has in all sustained loss and damage in the sum of £1,000.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) £1,000 damages; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

The defendant excepted to the declaration as follows:

1. That defendant is sued in his personal capacity, whereas he should have been sued in his capacity as assignee under the deed of assignment annexed to the declaration.

2. That the declaration is vague, embarrassing, and bad in law, in that the deed of assignment specially provides that preferent creditors shall be paid before concurrent creditors, whereas plaintiff's declaration does not allege that the debt for rates (for non-payment of which by defendant the plaintiff claims damages) was a preferent one, or that the preferent debts in the estate had been paid prior to judgment and execution for such rates; or that there were sufficient funds in the estate wherewith to pay the said debt for rates. Wherefore the defendant prays that the declaration may be quashed and set aside, with costs.

Mr. Close was for the excipient (defendant in the action); Mr. Upington was for the respondent (plaintiff in the action).

Mr. Close submitted that the exception was a thoroughly sound one, and one upon which the defendant was entitled to rely, following the ordinary rules of pleading. The first exception was that he was sued in his personal capacity, whereas he should have been sued in his capacity as assignee. That objection, he submitted, was fatal to the declaration. Then an even more material objection was that it was not alleged that the debt was preferent. The Town Council was not a party to the deed. The defendant was put upon trust to pay all preferent debts. There was no allegation in the declaration that this was either a mortgage or a preferent debt. Counsel cited Municipality of Green Point v. Powell's Trustees (2 Menzies, 380), Smuts v. Divisional Council of Cathcart (6 C.T.R., 384), Divisional Council v. Marais (16 C.T.R., 704), and Krackmal's Trustees v. Epstein (10 C.T.R., 421), and referred to Act 25, 1893 (sections 102 and 178) and Act 25, 1897 (section 3).

Mr. Upington said that as to the first objection, the defendant was sued as a party to an agreement, and it did not seem that under that agreement as assignee he had got any special capacity in which he was to be sued. Defendant acted under an agreement of this kind at his own peril. As to the second and substantial objection, as it was called, he contended that the important point in the case was not whether this was a preferent debt, but whether it was a charge attaching to the property. Counsel submitted that the charge in question was a charge incidental to the trust. As to the other ground of exception, he could not conceive how the plaintiff could be expected to state a fact of which he had had no knowledge. It was a point for the defence as to whether there were funds in the estate to meet the payment.

Mr. Close having been heard in reply, De Villiers, C.J.: There were three parties to the deed of assignment, viz., the plaintiff (the assignor), the defendant (the assignee), and the third parties were the creditors, who consented to the deed of assignment. The declaration alleges that in this deed of assignment, it is provided that the defendant should collect in all the assets, and shall stand possessed of same, "after paying thereout all expenses and charges connected with the execution of these presents and carrying into effect the trusts hereby created and incidental thereto, upon trust in the first place to pay all mortgage and preferent debts due by the said Alfred Ernest Jacob, and thereafter to pay and divide the balance of the said estate to and among all and singular the several concurrent creditors of the said Alfred Ernest Jacob ratable according to the amount of their several debts." In the declaration it is alleged that there was a breach on the part of the defendant, the assignee under this deed, in that he did not pay a certain sum of money alleged to have been due to the Corporation of the City of Cape Town for rates, viz., £36 1s. 11d., although he had legal knowledge and the notice that these rates were due. Now, the question arises whether these allegations are sufficient to prove that there has been a breach of contract on the part of the defendant (the assignee) for which he is liable in damages. Now, I take it to be perfectly clear that what the defendant had to do was to pay mortgage and preferent debts due by the plaintiff. I am by no means satisfied that creditors who were not parties to the deed would have any claim thereunder. The Town Council was not a party to the deed, and, therefore, on that ground alone, I am inclined to think that the plaintiff has not shown that there has been a breach of contract, but, quite independently of this technical objection, my own view is that the exception taken to the declaration is a good one. Mr. Upington has relied upon the portion of the deed which refers to incidental expenses. But incidental expenses which the defendant was bound to pay, were expenses incidental to the carrying out of the trusts under the deed. The payment of the rates due to the Corporation, which were already due at the date of the assignment, cannot be regarded as incidental to the carrying out of the trusts under the deed. So that, unless the plaintiff could show that under the rest of that clause referring to the payment of mortgage or preferent debts, due by the plaintiff, there has been a breach of contract on the part of defendant, his declaration fails to show any cause of action. Now, there is no allegation in the declaration that the debt which the defendant failed to pay was a mortgage or preferent debt, and, therefore, plaintiff has failed to show that the defendant has failed to perform his part of the contract in paying the particular debt, which forms the subject of the action. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the exception should be sustained, with costs. I think, moreover, I may add that in a declaration of this kind, I consider it necessary that there should have been an allegation that the defendant had assets to pay these debts. I do not think there is much in the exception that the defendant is sued in his individual capacity, instead of being sued as assignee, but I do consider this to be clear that the defendant cannot be held liable for not paying particular debts unless it is shown that he had collected assets for the purpose of paying the debts. So that seems to me also a very material statement, which has been omitted from the declaration, but, upon other grounds stated, I am of opinion that the exception is a good one, and must be allowed with costs.

ENGELBRECHT AND OTHERS { 1907.
V. BOTHA AND OTHERS. { Nov. 15th.
{ Dec. 5th.

Will — Jus accrendi — Death of legatee—Specific bequest.

The testators, being husband and wife, bequeathed a farm to four of their children by name. One of the children died before both the testators, leaving children.

Held, that the remaining legatees were entitled, after the death of the testators, to the whole farm, and that the children of the deceased legatee were not entitled to share in the legacy.

This was a special case for the interpretation of certain clauses in the will of the late Johannes Cornelis Marthinus Engelbrecht and the late Anna Jacomina Engelbrecht.

The special case was set out in the following terms:

1. The first and second plaintiffs and the wife of the third plaintiff married to him in community of property, are children of the late Johannes Cornelis Marthinus Engelbrecht, hereinafter called the testator.

2. The first defendant is sued in his capacity as father and natural guardian of the seven minor children of himself and his deceased wife, Annie Jacomina Barbara Botha (born Engelbrecht), a daughter of the testator.

3. The second and third defendants are sued in their capacity as executors testamentary in the estates of the testator and his wife, Anna Jacomina Engelbrecht (born De Lange), hereinafter called the testatrix; and likewise in their capacity as tutors testamentary of Eglia Jemina Engelbrecht, a minor child of the testator and testatrix.

4. The parties reside on divers farms in the districts of Cathcart, Queen's Town, and Stockenstrom within this colony.

5. Before his marriage with the testatrix the testator was married to Alotta Maria Engelbrecht (born Botha), by whom he had three children, to wit: the first two plaintiffs, and a daughter, Isabella Johanna. By his marriage with the testatrix the testator had eleven children, amongst them the aforesaid Annie Jacomina Barbara Botha, Davidina Petronella de Wit, and Eglia Jemina Engelbrecht.

6. All the aforesaid children of the testator of both marriages are still surviving, save only the said Annie Jacomina Barbara Botha, who died before the testator and before the testatrix, on or about the 6th June, 1904, leaving issue the seven minor children who are in this action represented by the first defendant.

7. On or about the 26th September, 1903, the testator and the testatrix being married in community of property, executed a joint and mutual will. A copy thereof, together with a true translation, is hereunto annexed marked "A," and the parties crave leave to have it regarded as inserted herein. They wish to refer particularly to that part of the will containing the institution of heirs, and to that part relating to the legacy of the farm Deepdale, and to that part containing the conditions under which the bequests therein contained were expressed to be made.

8. In the joint estate at the death of the survivor there was certain landed property (viz., a certain farm Brakkloof) not specially bequeathed nor in any way specifically referred to in the said will.

9. The testator died on the 17th January, 1907, and the testatrix on the 8th July, 1907, and the said will is now of full force and effect as the last will of both the testator and the testatrix.

10. The plaintiffs contend: (a) That the sole heirs to the general or residuary estates of the testator and the testatrix under the said mutual will are the aforesaid surviving children of the testator by both his said marriages, to the exclusion of the issue of the said predeceased child, Annie Jacomina Barbara Botha. (b) That the plaintiffs jointly are entitled to claim the whole legacy of the farm Deepdale under the said will, by virtue of the jus accrescendi, to the exclusion of the general heirs of the testator and testatrix, and to the exclusion of the issue of the predeceased co-legatee, the said Annie Jacomina Barbara Botha. (c) That if this Honourable Court holds that the share of the farm Deepdale which would have fallen to the said Annie Jacomina Barbara Botha devolves on her said children or lapses into the general estate, then such share remains subject to the conditions in the will affecting the bequests of landed property therein, and may not be sold free from the said conditions by the second and third defendants.

11. The first defendant contends: (d) That the minor children aforesaid of himself and his late wife Anna Jacomina Barbara Botha (born Engelbrecht) are entitled in the distribution of the general or residuary estates of the testators, under the said mutual will, to receive the share which their deceased mother would have received had she survived the said testators. The said minor children are so entitled according to the true construction of the will and intention of the testators, as being included among the kinderen who by the will are appointed heirs. Alternatively, the defendant says that they are so entitled by representation. (e) That the minor children in the preceding paragraph referred to are in regard to the farm Deepdale similarly entitled, upon the grounds in such paragraph set forth, to succeed to the share which their deceased mother would have received had she survived the testators. (f) That the said minor children are entitled to receive their share of the farm Deepdale free from the restrictions imposed by the testators in connection with the said farm.

12. The second and third defendants contend: (g) That the contention of the plaintiffs in their contention (a) is correct. (h) That the share of the farm Deepdale, which under the will would have fallen to the child Annie Jacomina Barbara (but for her aforesaid predecease) now, by reason of such predecease, falls into, and has to be administered as part of the general or residuary estates of the testator and testatrix; the heirs thereto being the persons specified in plaintiffs' contention (a). (i) That the landed property in the estate not specially bequeathed (to wit, the farm Brakkloof) is, and has to be, administered as part of the general or residuary estates of the testator and testatrix; the heirs thereto also being the persons specified in plaintiffs' contention (a). (j) That the children of the said Annie Jacomina Barbara Botha are not entitled as heirs to or to participate in any of the aforesaid estates or properties. (k) That the lapsed share of the farm Deepdale (more fully described in the second and third defendants' contention (h) and the unbequeathed landed property Brakkloof are not affected by any of the conditions in the will affecting the bequests of landed property therein, and the second and third defendants are entitled to sell the same free from any of the said conditions, if such sale be deemed advisable or necessary. The proceeds in the event of a sale being then distributed in lieu of the landed property.

Wherefore the parties pray for judgment upon their respective contentions, and that the costs of this suit may come out of the estates of the testator and testatrix in equal shares.

Mr. De Villiers for plaintiffs. Mr. Close for the first defendant (Reynier Botha, in his capacity as guardian of his minor children). Mr. McGregor, K.C., for the second and third defendants.

Mr. De Villiers, in argument, cited Gulliers v. Ryecraft (17 S.C., 569), where it was laid down that the rule was that "kinderen" had prima facie to be taken to refer to children of the first degree. The intention to benefit remoter descendants must be clear. This rule was followed in the case of Fermaak v. Fermaak (21 S.C., 463). In the will under consideration there was no indication of any intention that the word "kinderen" should mean anything else but children of the first degree. By the jus accrescendi the fourth of the farm Deepdale bequeathed to Annie J. B. Botha could be claimed by the plaintiffs. He also referred to Steenkamp v. De Villiers (10 S.C., 61), Potgieter v. Executors of Van der Heever (11 S.C., 40), Watson v. Burchell (9 S.C., 2), Mijdel's Executors v. Ara (14 S.C., 511); Voet (Bk. 30, sections 60 and 61), and Van der Kessel (Thesis 326).

Mr. McGregor cited Voet (36, 1, 22); Groenewegen (ad. Dig. 50, 16, 201 and 220); In re Pretorius (2 J., 293); Michau's case (11 S.C., 362); Pothier on Legacies (Van der Linden's Transl., pp. 108 and 125). De Jager's case (5 Buch. 86) showed, he said, that the Court would presume that the testators wished to have equality. This would not happen if the jus accrescendi were to prevail. In Watson v. Burchell there were no other people to come in as in this case.

Mr. Close said that the presumption was in favour of "grand-children" being included in the word "children." He referred to De Smidt v. Martin (14 C.T., 200), Van Leeuwen (C.F. 3, 5, 10, and R.D.L., vol. I.); Wentzell v. Brink's Executors. The will itself supported this view. He also cited Maasdorp (Inst. vol. I, p. 191).

De Villiers, C.J.: At this stage I shall simply state that as to the contention of the plaintiffs in regard to the farm Deepdale, it must be supported. The terms in which that legacy is given are as follows: "After the death of the survivor we declare to bequeath, subject to conditions to be detailed later on in this, our will, the following farms to the following children, namely: The farm Deepdale, situate in the district of Cathcart, to the children Pieter Wilhelm Adrian Engelbrecht, Johannes Martinus Cornelis Engelbrecht, Davidina Petronella Engelbrecht (married to Cornelia de Wet), and Anna Jacomina Engelbrecht (married to Renier Botha)." It seems that Anna is dead, leaving children. She died before the testators. No difficulty can arise in this case, because it is a specific bequest. It is not a bequest to a class, but a specific bequest to individuals, and they are joined et ceteris. The jus accrescendi therefore applies in the case of the share of one of the legatees lapsing and the remaining legatees are entitled to the legacy. Judgment will be reserved upon the other questions. I hope the parties will come to some agreement, because if the decision should be against the first defendant it will be rather hard upon the minor children.

Postea (December 5).

De Villiers, C.J., asked counsel whether an arrangement had been come to with regard to the question still outstanding in this case, in which the construction of the will of the late Johannes C. M. Engelbrecht was involved.

Mr. De Villiers said he appeared for four of the children. It had been found impossible to obtain the consent of the other 13 children. Some had consented, but others wished to insist upon their strict legal rights. They did not wish to consent to make any allowance in favour of the minors. Some were willing to waive their rights in favour of the minors, and he understood would do so whatever the decision of the Court.

Mr. Close and Mr. McGregor, K.C., said that, as far as they were aware, no arrangement had been come to, as suggested by the Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: I was in hopes that the parties would come to some settlement. The terms of the will under consideration are as follows: "We declare to nominate and appoint the children of the testator begot in wedlock with his predeceased spouse Aletta Maria Engelbrecht (born Botha), together with the children which have already or may still be begotten by us, during our union, to be the only and universal heirs of all our goods and effects, inheritances and legacies, chattels and goods, credits, and of everything of whatever nature and wherever the same might be, which might be left at the death of the first dying of us, and at the death of the survivor." Now, of these children, one, Annie Jacomina, died before both the testators, and the question now to be decided is whether her children are entitled to share in this inheritance. The only ground upon which they could possibly be held to be entitled to share would be that, being grandchildren of the testators, they would be included under the general term "children." The question has been authoritatively decided in the Privy Council in the case of Galliers v. Ryckroft (17 S.C.), and there the conclusion arrived at was that the word "kinderen," which is the Dutch equivalent for "children," must prima facie be taken to refer to descendants of the first degree, but if it can be gathered from the context of the will or from other circumstances that the testator had regard to descendants of a remoter degree, the word should be construed in its wider signification. It was added also that in the case of a bequest to the testator's own children, the Court of Holland required much slighter evidence of a desire to benefit further descendants than in the case of a bequest to the children of another person. In the present case, it was the testator's own children, and, therefore, very slight evidence of a desire to benefit further descendants would have been sufficient. But I have carefully read the will, and I am unable to find any trace of an intention to benefit further descendants. Counsel has relied upon one clause of the will in which there is a bequest of land to the sons, and in which the eldest son of certain sons is to be held entitled to that bequest. Well, the fact that regarding a particular bequest, the testator intended to benefit the eldest son of certain sons, does not show that in regard to the residue there was any desire to benefit the children of any of the children, who are made the heirs under the clause now in question. I was in hopes, as I said, that the parties might come to some terms in the matter, because it does seem somewhat hard that these children of the deceased mother, who possibly might require the money just as much as their uncles and aunts, should not be entitled to share in the bequest, but the rule of law is clear. Prima facie, the word "children" does not include grandchildren, and it is only in case the Court can find some other evidence, however slight, that the testators intended to benefit the grandchildren, that the Court can give the wider meaning to the word "children" which is now insisted upon. Under these circumstances, I am bound to hold in terms of contention "a" of the plaintiffs, but that won't affect the question of costs. Costs will come out of the estate.

Contention "a" of the plaintiffs was as follows: "That the sole heirs to the general or residuary estates of the testator and the testatrix under the said mutual will are the aforesaid surviving children of the testator by both his said marriages, to the exclusion of the issue of the said predeceased child, Annie Jacomina Barbara Botha."

Dredger — Specifications — Sale and purchase.

This was an action brought by Sydney Charles Gearing, carrying on business in Cape Town, under the style of Cunningham and Gearing, engineers, sought against the Milnerton Estates, Ltd., to recover the sum of £1,413 6s. 8d., balance of purchase price of certain dredger, and £28 9s. 2d. for material pumped and delivered.

Plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is Sydney Charles Gearing, who carries on business in Cape Town, under the style of Cunningham and Gearing. Defendant is a company duly registered and carrying on business in this colony.

2. In or about September, 1905, the plaintiff at defendant's request agreed to supply and thereafter did supply a suction sand dredger for the purposes of dredging operations in the river on the defendant's property at Milnerton.

3. The terms of the contract relative thereto were on or about the 7th day of March, 1906, set forth in a certain signed written contract called a memorandum of agreement.

4. The parties hereto agreed that the purchase price of the dredger, together with certain spare parts, should be £2,120. Prior to the 12th February, 1907, the dredger had after being set up and inspected in plaintiff's workshops, been transported to Milnerton and launched there: and the defendant had duly paid the first instalment, being one-third of the purchase price.

5. Thereafter the dredger was put in order, and was worked by plaintiff throughout the trial period necessary under clause 2 of the contract, which period expired prior to March 5 last. Thereafter plaintiff allowed a further extended probationary trial period of three weeks for experimental working under clause 3 and duly carried out such working, and at the request of the defendant company's engineer (Mr. W. Farrant) continued such extended period and working up to June 14 last.

6. During the period from the 12th February to 14th June last, the plaintiff executed all such alterations to the dredger as were found to be needed, and as were required by the said engineer to make the dredger work satisfactorily. On the said 14th June, a final test took place in the presence of plaintiff's representative Harry Gearing, and of Messrs. Fraser, jun., and Hunter, the duly authorised representatives of the engineer then absent from Milnerton.

7. At the test on the 14th June, the dredger was complete and worked well and satisfactorily in terms of the contract, and to the satisfaction of the engineer's representatives; and thereafter the defendant company, acting under clause 3 of the contract, took control of the working of the dredger plant, and the plaintiff's control which had continued to such date thereupon ceased.

8. The guarantee period under clause 4 of the contract began on the 14th

June, and ended on the 14th September, 1907. The conditions of the clause have been duly, properly, and reasonably fulfilled.

9. On the 14th June and 14th September respectively, the plaintiff became entitled to claim from defendant the remaining two instalments, each of one-third of the purchase price amounting in all to £1,413 6s. 8d.

10. The plaintiff during the probationary trial period set forth in paragraph 5, pumped and delivered material for which in terms of clauses 3 and 6 of the contract he is entitled to payment of £28 9s. 2d.

11. The plaintiff has tendered and hereby again tenders delivery of the spare parts referred to in paragraph 4 and otherwise has duly and properly performed his part of the contract; and all things have happened, all conditions have been fulfilled and all times have elapsed necessary to enable plaintiff to claim payment of the said sums of £1,413 6s. 8d. and £28 9s. 2d., but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully fails and refuses to pay any part thereof though requested so to do.

Wherefore plaintiff claims: (a) Payment of £1,413 6s. 8d. balance due of the purchase price of the dredger aforesaid. (b) Payment of £28 9s. 2d. for material pumped and delivered as aforesaid. (c) Interest a tempore morae. (d) Alternative relief; (e) Costs of suit.

The defendant's plea admitted that on or about the 7th of March, 1906, a written contract was executed, and craved leave to refer to the original documents at the trial. The plaintiff erected a certain suction and sand dredger, but had failed to work the same in complete order. The defendant admitted that the plaintiff did attempt to work the dredger for the period provided in the contract, but on account of the unsatisfactory way the work was done it was found necessary to extend the period as provided for in the contract. He admitted that the plaintiff had made certain alterations, but the engineer was dissatisfied with the dredger, and the defendant refused to accept it. Save as above, the defendant denied paragraphs 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9. The defendant admitted paragraph 10, and tendered to set off the same "pro tanto" against the sum claimed by it in the claim in reconviction. The defendant was willing to accept the dredger and to pay the sum of £1,413 6s. 8d. upon the plaintiff fulfilling the contract to the satisfaction of the defendant's engineer within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the Court.

In reconviction, the defendant (now plaintiff) claimed the return of the first instalment (£706 13s. 4d.), as the contract was cancelled. The plaintiff (now defendant) was indebted to the defendant (now plaintiff) in the sum of £134 4s. 4d. for work and labour and material done and supplied by the latter, for and on behalf of the former, and at his special interest and request, between the months of January and August, 1907.

Wherefore the defendant (now plaintiff) claimed that the plaintiff (now defendant) be ordered to duly perform his contract to the satisfaction of the defendant's engineer, or, failing compliance with that order, cancellation of the contract and repayment of the sum of £706 15s. 4d., and judgment for the sum of £134 4s. 4d., with interest.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Bisset) was for the plaintiff; Mr. W. P. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) was for the defendants.

Mr. Close, at some length, detailed the principles of the machine.

The first witness examined was Ernest Peters, photographer, who proved certain photographs of the dredger, taken at Milnerton on the 5th and 7th of the present month.

Harry Charles Gearing, of the plaintiff firm, said that he had had 15 years' experience of general engineering work. He gave evidence as to the negotiations which led up to the execution of the contract in question. The original dredger was, he was informed by Mr. Farrant (defendants' engineer), doing 7 to 10 cubic yards. The machine was rated at a higher capacity, but it was unable to effect its full capacity because of the hardness of the sand and clay seams to be operated upon. When entering into the contract, witness was not aware of the existence of stone in any quantity in the river bed. He undertook in the contract to supply a sand-sucker. A sand-sucker was not intended to deal with large stones. The dredger supplied was rated to do 30 to 35 cubic yards per hour. It was guaranteed to do 31.5 cubic yards per hour. The machine was fitted up in the plaintiffs' workshops. Mr. Farrant saw the machine from time to time as it was being fitted up, and he expressed himself as satisfied with it. The machine was put on the water. On the 12th February, 1907, a letter was received by plaintiffs from Mr. Farrant drawing attention to certain parts of the machine, which he thought should be altered, and which were explained to Court by witness from a model of the dredger. Witness went on to explain the device adopted in order to deal with clay, viz., a kind of revolving harrow. This, he said, was introduced with the consent of Mr. Farrant. Alterations were made, and Mr. Farrant then appeared to be satisfied with the construction of the machine. Proceeding, he showed that it was of the utmost importance that the machine should be moved carefully so as to keep the delivery pipe in efficient working order. Later Mr. Farrant wrote a letter on the 28th February, in which mention was made of the need of keeping the mouthpiece free from stones and weeds. The various objections raised by Mr. Farrant were rectified or not sustained. Between the 14th and the 26th March tests were made on eleven occasions, the results of which were entered in a log by an employee named Fraser and tabulated. Witness was present at several of the tests, and found that the machine was seriously hampered with stones.

Mr. Close: Two per cent.?

Witness: I wish it was only 2 per cent. Continuing, he said that an occasional stone, if small enough, would pass through the pump, and would not have any material effect on the work of the dredger. A lot of stones or large stones would cause the suction pipe to become partially blocked, and work half or part bore, and, as a consequence, the output was materially reduced. The dredger worked very well with the clay. Witness then described the trouble occasioned by a mishap during March, more especially owing to the effect of stones upon the cutting gear. Besides the difficulty with stones, they had, he said, difficulty with the delivery pipes owing to the leather break bands between the sections of the pipe giving way. On the 26th March witness had a discussion with Mr. Farrant, when the latter suggested that a different clutch should be put in the engine shaft, and that a safety device should be put in the cutting gear. No further testing took place until fresh devices were fitted. Mr. Farrant wrote approving of the blue prints of the devices, which had been submitted to him. The devices were installed. Witness was then examined with regard to the correspondence that took place between the plaintiffs and Mr. Farrant. He stated that the position the plaintiffs took up was that if the machinery was defective, they would like to know where. With regard to the claim in reconvention for £134 4s. 4d., witness said that the plaintiffs had not requested the defendants to expend moneys on the dredger to make test trials in August. Plaintiffs left the machine in the river on the 14th June. It was then in good condition, and everything was in proper working order. The output of the machine varied a good deal, according to conditions; for instance, as to whether the cutting blades were off, whether they had stones to deal with, and who was the dredging master. The principal trouble they had to contend with was the stones. The quantity of stones that they had to deal with affected the output of the dredger from 20 to 30 per cent., when the tests were made. Witness produced samples of stones taken from the bed of the river. Proceeding, he said that stones would go through the pump, but the effect would be to diminish the suction. If the machine were employed on right conditions, it would be equal to the output required. On the afternoon of the 12th June they had right conditions, and the dredger did the work required of it. There were stones on that afternoon. When the dredger came on a bed of stones the pump only brought up water, and as a consequence the dredger was shifted off the stones.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Witness was a member of the plaintiff firm, but not a partner. He was paid a salary by his father. He was not financially interested in the result of this case. He was a member of the Institute of Mechanical Engineers. They had always been prepared to undertake that the dredger would do the work claimed for it. Of course, they did not think they would have to pump stones. Such a contingency was never contemplated. There was no mention of stones in any letter sent by the plaintiffs before the 12th June. Witness spoke to Mr. Farrant in the course of the tests about the presence of stones. That would be, he thought, during the first few weeks of the tests. Grating was put in the machines to prevent larger solids from going through. In speaking of "solids" they had roots, etc., in their mind. He should not deny that stones were "solids." The Gwynn Sergeant Tubular Disc was not designed specially to separate large stones and other solids.

Cross-examination continued: You said that a sand sucker had nothing to do with anything but sand?—It would not deal with anything that would not be held in suspension.

Your contention is that it will not deal with stones?—That is so.

Do you know the Basingstoke sand pump in use in Holland that deals with sand, gravel, and stone?—But it will not deal with stone in quantities.

Now we get that pretty little word in quantities, what do you mean by that?—Well, in quantities found at Milnerton.

Continuing, witness admitted that he suggested the omission of the grating, which was part of a swinging harrow. If the grating had been there it would have kept out the stones, and the bars were inserted.

Why did you suggest the omission of the grating?—The grating is an integral part of the swinging harrow, and when the swinging harrow was abandoned the grating was also abandoned.

Witness admitted that he had not submitted drawings of the swinging harrow. The plaintiffs did not say anything about the machine bringing up stones, although the defendants wrote about it. Frazer was on board the dredger as a representative of the company.

Did you borrow his services?—We borrowed them, but not with the idea of paying for them.

Don't bother about "ideas." Did you borrow them or not?—No.

You suggested that somebody of experience should be recommended by the company to work the dredger; they recommended Frazer, and you wrote thanking them; and do you now say that he was there to learn to work the dredger, and be paid by the company, although he was a man of experience?—Yes.

Witness could not give any idea of the estimate of stones brought up. The friction clutch was designed by witness. There was difficulty in connection with the delivery pipes bursting.

Did you ever refer to that in any of your letters?—No.

Just an afterthought?—Oh, no.

Witness admitted that they offered to have a seven hours' trial, but denied that he refused to be responsible for the results.

Did you send a telephonic message on March 13, stating you would arrange a nine hours' test as soon as the cutting gear was on?—I may have said a nine hours' test, but not a continuous test. On March 11, with two hours' pumping, the output was 28.6 cubic yards of solids per hour, whilst on a subsequent occasion, with 6½ hours' pumping, the output per hour was only 17.1 cubic yards. On one occasion (March 12), it reached 31.3 per hour. Witness denied that he asked Mr. Farrant what could be done, and also denied that Farrant told him it was his business to put the machine in proper working order. Farrant said he was quite satisfied with the machine.

Although it was not working up to the specification?—He was pleased with his work. Continuing, Mr. Farrant said nothing about the company being agreeable to extend the test period. Witness endeavoured to show Farrant that the machine was working satisfactorily. While witness was away, Frazer, sen., had control of the dredger, and had charge of the dredger. Plaintiffs supplied Frazer with oil whenever it was necessary. He did not apply for oil during May to carry out experiments.

When Frazer did not apply to you for oil, did it not strike you that he must be getting it from the company?—Yes. He told me Farrant put the oil on the dredger as he wished to try it. Continuing, Frazer kept no log of the workings. Witness considered that after they had carried out a couple of tests they were entitled to their second instalment. Witness denied that he borrowed any men. The men on the dredger were there to learn the working of the dredger. Farrant told witness to tell Frazer, jun., when he intended making tests. On the occasion of June 12 (the last test), witness denied that he did only superficial work so as to get up a good average.

Arthur Gearing stated he remembered the test on June 12. He went down with his brother to Milnerton. He considered the dredger was in good working order. He also remembered two or three trials after the clutch had been fixed. He did not take down any data at the tests.

William John Frazer, sen., stated he had been employed by the plaintiff firm for 16 years, and had during that period been in charge of several large contracts. He was connected with the Milnerton dredger from the beginning. Farrant was present nearly every day. Witness was present when the tests were made, and took down the data. He also kept the times for which the tests were made. He was in the engine-room, and kept a watch before him. On March 4 the engines worked from 7 in the morning until after 9 in the evening. They had to stop from 9.20 to 9.45 owing to stones in the pump, and again from 11.25 to 11.45. After March 22 witness took no note of the output or the times. This was left to Mr. Farrant. On June 12 witness again took up the charge, Mr. Harry Gearing having come out. The engines were going all the time, but the pump had to be taken out occasionally. Witness considered it would be impossible to get a seven hours' run in a day with a dredger. On August 22 witness saw the engines at work, and they were thumping badly owing to no water being injected. This must have been due to somebody tampering with it. This interfered with the power of the engine. Witness drew Mr. Farrant's attention to this, and suggested that if the engines were stopped for an hour he would set it right. Farrant said somebody must have been tampering with it, and walked away. The engine-driver, when spoken to on the matter, said he had instructions not to take orders from witness. At the dinner hour witness attended to what was wrong, and the engine worked all right until five o'clock, when the water ran short.

Hugh McColl said he was a consulting engineer, and had been employed as an engineer by the British Admiralty. He had had experience of dredgers in connection with the construction of Milford Docks and elsewhere. At Milford they had a ladder or bucket-dredger. He described the different types of dredgers and their functions and duties. Witness went on to say that he had heard the evidence given in this case, and had read the specification, and had heard of the difficulties encountered in working the machine on the Diep River, Milnerton. He had seen the reference in the specification to a device for breaking up clay seams, and he had seen the device now actually incorporated in the machine. The latter was, to his mind, much better than the one described in the specification. He had seen the dredger under working conditions. He considered that the pipeline going ashore was a cumbrous and unwieldy device, which would hamper the free action of the machine to a great extent. He had heard the evidence to the effect that on one occasion 34.2 cubic yards per hour was the result obtained by Mr. Farrant in one hour and 58 minutes, and that Mr. Farrant had suggested that the dredger dodged about to make that. He should say that with the machine as it was constructed, "dodging" would be rather difficult. Witness was familiar with sand dredgers, but he had not worked with them. In the case of a machine of this kind, he would put the various parts of the machine to work so as to see whether they were in proper order before he went to the test. When he found the machine was all right, he would tell the purchasers that he was ready for the test.

Mr. Close: How long would you consider such a test should be made?

Witness: I should be quite satisfied with a couple of hours.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness was formerly engineer at Ohlsson's Cape Breweries, but he was now a consulting engineer, practising on his own account. He claimed to have a practical knowledge of dredgers.

Mr. Upington: Are not all sand dredgers so constructed as to be able to deal with solids of more or less size?

Witness: That is so.

Including stones?—Yes.

Various devices are used for the purpose of limiting the size of the stones and other solids that can enter the pipe?—Yes.

Cross-examination continued: If he were a supervising engineer he should want to be present at the test of the machine. That test would have to go on until he was satisfied that the machine was capable of doing the work that it was contracted to do. It might occupy two hours or a longer period.

Mr. Close: If you had been observing the machine for weeks before, would you want to be there yourself?

Witness: At the final test?

Yes?—Either myself or a trusted representative.

Re-examination continued: It was possible to get a certain output where the machine was working among sand and stones, but not the output to be expected from sand.

Maasdorp, J.: There is no positive evidence yet that we have got as to the nature of the river there, but take it that there is a variety, boulders, mixed stuff, and sand in different parts, you have contracted to work this machine, a sand sucker, supposing you are an engineer on the plaintiffs' side, where would you reasonably expect to be called upon to work?

Witness: I should expect it to be put on the sand and the mud slimes, as set forth in the specifications, no mention being made of stones.

[You are now with the machine to do the work, and there is the river; where would you go and work? Not in the big boulders?—Not if I could help it. One might come across them accidentally.]

[Supposing you are the engineer on the other side to take over the machine, what would you do when you go and test as to locality and area?—We should agree as to a place for testing the machine, and place the machine there and start working.]

[Not merely sand, but a proportion of stones?—Yes.]

[You would go together and select the locality?—Yes.]

Mr. Close closed his case.

Wm. Farrant, A.M.I.C.E., said he had had seventeen years' experience of engineering. He had been employed as engineer by the defendant company almost four years. He negotiated with Mr. Miller, on behalf of the plaintiffs, in regard to this dredger. Witness still thought that the output of the dredger would have been better if cutters had been fitted instead of, as the plaintiffs specified, the harrow and grating. Witness went on to give evidence as to the experiments carried on on the river with the dredger, and said that when he was not present, the record was taken by an employee named Hunter. After the 15th March, witness took a number of the times. As far as he could, he took the times accurately, deducting stoppages fully and fairly. The return put in was, as far as he knew, accurately copied from his schedule. Witness always took the computations as to the stuff delivered ashore.

[Maasdorp, J.: What are the differences in the times?]

Mr. Schreiner said that, with one exception, the times taken on behalf of the defendants were in favour of the plaintiffs.

Witness (continuing) said that at the end of the test period, viz., on the 25th March, the complete account had not been found by him to work satisfactorily. He had an interview with Mr. Harry Gearing on the 28th March, as a result of which it was agreed that an extended test period should be allowed. Mr. Gearing was at that time at his wits' ends what to do, and witness told him that he did not think the company would be too stringent with them. Before and after that date witness did all he could to assist the plaintiffs to put the machine into good working condition. The experiments were not resumed until the 10th May. Witness had never yet seen the machine work right, and in conversation with Mr. Sydney Gearing, he had told him that he would be glad if he could see the machine do its work properly once. Mr. Harry Gearing came down on the 12th June. Witness was not informed that any particular test was going to be made on that date. He was engaged in superintending the work at the racecourse on the 12th June. He had not authorised anybody to represent him during the test that Mr. Harry Gearing made. Fraser, sen., was looking after the dredger, Hunter was engaged ashore at the delivery pipe, and Moore was employed at the winch, and in the engine-room. Witness measured the output, and found that 34.2 cubic yards per hour had been done. This was the first time on which the 35 cubic yards per hour, less 10 per cent., was passed. Witness did not actually see how the machine was working on the day in question. He went on to speak as to a four-arm device which he designed with a view of facilitating suction, and said that this arm must have been on when the short tests were made on the 11th and 12th June. On the 22nd August he detached the device so as to give the machine as supplied by the plaintiffs its test. He should not say that that device made a difference of 9 cubic yards per hour. He would not like to say what difference it would make in the output, because the experiments had not been conducted long enough. He thought it would have made some difference, but he did not think the improvement would have had the effect of bringing up the output to 31.5 cubic yards per hour. On the night of the 12th June, the dredger went aground. In the course of the trials the dredger went aground a few times, and there was a good deal of trouble in manoeuvring her. Witness called upon the plaintiffs to carry out seven hours' continuous pumping.

Mr. Schreiner: Did you mean in that continuous run of seven hours' pumping that they must actually be dredging in one channel the whole of the seven hours?

Witness: No. I did not mean that, although it is quite possible to work in one channel for seven hours.

Mr. Close: The knowledge you had of the bed of the river was the knowledge which you had in connection with the working of No. 1 dredger?

Witness was understood to acquiesce.

Cross-examination continued: No. 1 dredger was of smaller power, and had smaller pipes than the dredger at present on the river.

Mr. Close: Under those circumstances of the power and pipes, No. 1 dredger would dredge a different class of material to what this one is doing?

Witness: Just the same material.

A great deal more sand and a great deal less stone?—No, much the same.

About the same proportions of stones?—Yes.

And about the same size of stones?—It is true that some large stones come through the new dredger.

Further cross-examined: No. 1 dredger was not suitable for the river. He did not think there would have been much trouble if the dredger had been made suitable for the river. He was aware that in the specification in the present case a dredger "to dredge sand and mud slimes" was referred to. Reference was also made to a cutter to deal with clay.

Mr. Close: If you knew that stones were met with in some degree as they are being met with now, are you not surprised that no mention of stones is made in that specification?

Witness: I am not surprised.

[Maasdorp, J.: How do you explain that?]

Witness: The percentage of stones compared with the bulk is so small that, in drawing up a specification of that sort, one would throw them in, bulk by bulk, because in any river you must meet with stones.

Further cross-examined: Witness believed that in the specification solids were mentioned, and the Gwynn-Sergeant disc was also mentioned. He should certainly say that contemplated an ordinary proportion of stones. He relied partly upon that, and also upon the knowledge that Mr. H. W. Miller (who signed the specification for plaintiffs) had of the bed of the river from observations and soundings. To his mind, the tests which had been made did not convey much, because they were too short. He did not think a quarter of a day or less than that was a fair test of the working conditions. Defects were more likely to develop in a longer period than in the space of one hour or two hours. A seven hours' run with a full output per hour would be a proof to witness that the company were getting value for their money. He believed that the plaintiffs had not come to finality in experimenting, and that it was not beyond their powers to construct a machine to deal with the material in the river. This machine appeared to be improperly constructed to deal with the stones. He wanted a machine to deal with the river as it was, stones included. He did not think that "dodging" was quite the right word to use in reference to the tests.

Further cross-examined: In the course of his further evidence, Mr. Farrant said that there were no really big stones in the river.

Henry Payne, professor of civil engineering, South African College, said that he was an A.M.I.C.E. He had lectured on engineering at several colleges, and had had actual experience of hydraulic engineering. He had attended certain dredger trials on the river at Milnerton. He assumed that a sand suction dredger should be able to deal with stones. In ordinary sand suction dredgers provision was made to deal with stones. The test at which he was present was carried out in a careful and satisfactory manner. During part of the time he was on the dredger and part of the time he spent at the delivery pipe. He noticed the way in which the engines were working and observed no difference before lunch and after lunch. He measured the output separately. He took seven hours and thirty-five minutes, giving an average of 22 cubic yards per hour. He examined the deposit along the bank, and also on the old dredger. He found the character of the deposits to be about the same. The pipe line was not uncoupled during the test.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: The manufacturers of the pump in the dredger in question stated that they could deal with boulders of the size of the one produced. A small percentage of stones would make no difference to the output. A considerable quantity of stones at one instant would make a difference, but not if distributed over a time. He had not observed a hard foundation in the river. He claimed to have a practical knowledge of dredgers. He had had experience of dredgers on the Thames. He was not a dredging master. He had had experience of a different kind of dredger and of the dredger at Milnerton.

Robert H. Fraser, who was employed as engine driver on the dredger by the defendants, said that to the best of his ability he had tried to get the requisite work out of the dredger. He had always taken his instructions from Mr. Gearing when Mr. Gearing was present. Mr. Farrant had told him to follow Mr. Gearing's instructions.

Joseph Hunter, a carpenter, employed by the defendant company, stated he had made a lot of test pits for the dredger. He had to keep the time at the delivery pipe. The moment she began to run half bore he gave the signal, and the necessary arrangements were made. There might be a little difference on account of this in his computation. The results of the time he produced were correct. On June 12 witness took the time.

In cross-examination witness said he had instructions from Mr. Farrant to take the times, when he was absent.

Malcolm R. Burwash, a bookkeeper, in the employment of the defendant company, submitted the books and the time sheets, which were kept under the direction of the engineer.

After further evidence,

Counsel were heard in argument.

Mr. Close said that the whole and sole difficulty in connection with this case was caused by the presence of stones in the bed of the river at Milnerton. What the plaintiffs undertook to do) was to supply a machine to deal with sand and mud slimes. Stones were a factor which the dredger was not intended to cope with, and for the purpose of dealing with which the plaintiffs were not obliged to supply a machine. They undertook to supply a certain specified article to do a certain specified thing, and the difficulty was caused by the presence of a class of material which the dredger was not intended to dredge. Mr. Farrant (the defendants' engineer) had taken up the position that this machine must pump 31.5 cubic yards per hour for a period of seven hours. That was where the fallacy in the case arose. All that the contract specified was that the rate of capacity was to be so much, to be determined for such and such period. It did not say that the machine should pump 31.5 cubic yards. It said that the rate of capacity was to be determined. How was it to be determined? If the machine were put on sand and mud slimes, and its capacity were then tested, he submitted that that would be a fair and reasonable test. Counsel contended that the dredger had been tested, and had fulfilled the requirements laid down in the contract. He quoted Voet (19, 2, 36), Larson v. Wallacy (47 L.T., 628), and Roberts v. Bury (Commissioners) (L.R., 5 C.P., 310).

Mr. Schreiner submitted that the plaintiffs had not shown that this machine had answered the conditions laid down in the contract and specification. The contract spoke of "solids," and said that the machine must dredge 30 to 35 cubic yards of solids. Surely that did not mean simply sand and mud slimes. Mr. Gearing had said it would include roots as well, but not stones. His learned friend would also include clay, but not stones. It was an inconceivably foolish contention that stone was not a "solid," and that stones were not included in the "solids" to be measured. The defendants did not guarantee that there would be no stones in the bottom of the river. The specification said that the machine was to deal with 30 to 35 cubic yards of solids. It was a remarkable fact, as showing what was contemplated, that the Gwynne Sergeant tubular disc was to form part of the machine, and the specification said that it would permit of the passing of solids. Clearly, then, the intention was to permit of the passing of large stones, inter alia. As to the proportion of stones that occurred, the best evidence was that there was 2 per cent. of stones or thereabouts at the outside.

Mr. Schreiner having been further heard on the facts, and Mr. Close having been heard in reply:

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (December 11th).

Maasdorp, J.: The Milnerton Estates, Limited, the defendants in this case, is a company possessing land upon which a blind river, cut off from the sea by a sand bar, is situated. In order to improve the condition of this river, both as a waterway and an ornamental water, the defendants set about deepening the middle of its course. This was done by means of a dredger, which pumped the material from the bed of the river on to its banks. It was found that the work done in this way was of very slow progress, and the defendants desired to obtain a dredger of larger capacity for the work. With this object they entered into communication with the plaintiff-firm. These circumstances would be irrelevant to the present case if it did not appear that it was directly in contemplation of both the parties in their negotiations, and I mention it because it throws considerable light upon several phases of the case. It will appear upon reference to the description given of the proposed new dredger by the defendants, which in their subsequent contract was embodied as the specification of the required machine, that the defendants wrote: "The actual results achieved with the machine supplied by Gwynne's, which, by the way, are before anticipations, I am afforded corroborative dates on which the present specification is based, and all calculations as to output and working costs are based upon the figures of the working of the present machine. It was hoped that when the project was first mooted, the present line of nine inch pipes would have proved of sufficient capacity to deal with the large quantity of materials discharged by the new machine, but the difference in level due to rise and fall of tide, length of pipe-line when the dredger is operating on the farthest bank, and the sinuous course taken by the line of pipes, due to the run of the current and set of tide, indicates that a great loss by friction in the pipes would result if this size of pipe be used for the new machine. It appears to us that it looks as if there were sufficient work for the two machines, acting conjointly, for some time to come; it will be necessary to procure more pipes for fluming, in which case, of course, larger pipes to suit the new and bigger machine would be obtained." And further on, they say: "By this means the material in the bed of the river will be rendered more suitable to be influenced by the vortex created by the pump, and a larger portion of solids will be pumped than is now the case." Harry Gearing says in his evidence: "In 1905 the Diep River, Milnerton, was being dredged by No. 1 dredger, supplied by Gwynne's. I was informed by Mr. Farrant that the dredger was only turning out 7 to 10 cubic yards per hour. Defendants wanted a new dredger, and correspondence took place, and I made investigations at this site." I do not lose sight of the evidence which immediately follows, with reference to the condition of things that he says he actually discovered when making investigations on the spot, but that will come up in another part of the case. I merely now point out that when the contract was entered into, the defendants were, or should have been, aware of all that was required of them, from knowledge obtained after personal investigation. Whether the knowledge then acquired differed from what was afterwards discovered, is a disputed question of fact. And whether this difference in any way alters the legal position of the plaintiffs, is a question of law which will have to be dealt with. It was under these circumstances, and others which will be referred to in due course, that the contract in question was entered into by the parties. In their agreement, the sellers agree to supply, erect, and work in complete order a suction sand dredger, more particularly described in the accompanying specification, marked "A." In the specification, the dredger is described as a centrifugal pump sand dredger, to dredge mud and stones from the bottom of the Diep River, and to deliver the material by means of pipes on to the banks, and then follows a full description of the machine. For this machine the defendants engaged to pay the sum of £2,120, payment of one-third of the price to be made when the machine is set up in the sellers' workshop, ready for inspection, prior to being taken apart for transport to Milnerton. About the 2nd of November, 1906, the dredger was completed, and set up in the workshops of the plaintiffs, and the defendants' engineer wrote the following letter to the defendant company: "I have to state that Messrs. Cunningham and Gearing have applied for the first instalment of the payment for the new dredger. I have inspected the complete machine put together in the workshops, and have to report that the work has been carried out in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. I have therefore to certify, in accordance with the provisions of the contract, that the sum of £706 13s. 4d. may be paid to Messrs Cunningham and Gearing." Payment was duly made, the machine was taken to pieces, transported to Milnerton, and launched on the Diep River. Then came into operation the further condition of the agreement, which provides that the sellers shall work the complete plant in connection with the floating pipe line for a trial period of one week, for the purpose of getting all machinery into good working order, the costs of this work being included in the price mutually agreed to be paid for the plants, should it be found necessary to extend this period of probationary trials, an extension up to three weeks shall be allowed for the purpose of experimental working by the sellers, they paying all expenses, but the material pumped and delivered to proper levels behind the new banks during the period of experimental working, shall be paid for by the purchasers at the rate mentioned in clause 6 of the agreement. At the end of this period the purchasers shall take control of the working of the plant, and the sellers' control shall cease. Upon the due performance of that part of the agreement, there would fall due the second instalment of the purchase price, which became payable when the dredger was launched and the complete machine found to work satisfactorily by the purchasers' engineer. The plaintiffs allege in their declaration that this part of their agreement was performed by them on the 12th of June, 1907. They say that the dredger was put in order and worked by the plaintiffs throughout the trial period, which expired prior to the 5th March. But they allowed the further probationary period at the request of the engineer. The true significance of this part of the plaintiffs' case was not quite clear until it was explained by counsel at the trial to amount to a claim on their part that by the 5th of March they had already succeeded in getting the machinery into good working order, and were entitled then to call upon the engineer to issue the necessary certificate, and upon the defendants to take control. But, as a matter of grace, they did not insist upon their rights, but allowed the further extended probationary period to be utilised. Now, in my opinion, the extended probationary period was not intended for that purpose, but rather to give the sellers a further opportunity to prove that the machine was fit for its work, in case they should not succeed in doing so within one week. However that may be, they proceed to say that at the end of the extended period, their part of the work was completed to the satisfaction of the duly-authorised representative of the defendants' engineer. It would appear that on the occasion when such satisfaction is alleged to have been expressed, the engineer was not himself present at the works, but that a man named Hunter, described as the defendants' carpenter, took part in the tests that were made. This man Hunter is the duly-authorised representative referred to in the declaration. It is not necessary to consider whether in law the engineer had the right under the contract to act by deputy in deciding when the machine answered its purpose, because there is no evidence that Hunter was appointed by the engineer as his representative for the purpose mentioned, nor is there any evidence that Hunter ever expressed himself satisfied that the machine worked satisfactorily. The supposed authority given to Hunter is contained in the letter of the 4th of March, where Farrant writes: "In my absence from the river, please instruct your foreman to let either the younger Fraser, or the carpenter, Hunter, know when he is about to start pumping." This is certainly quite insufficient to establish the plaintiffs' position that Hunter was appointed to decide whether the dredger worked satisfactorily, and the object Farrant had in view would appear from his letter of the 26th of February, in which he writes: "And with regard to any pumping tests you may be starting, please arrange to give me reasonable notice of the starting of the pumping tests, so that I may make the necessary measurement particulars." Even if Hunter were intended to take Farrant's place at the tests, it was merely to take the necessary measurements, and nothing more, and these tests were merely a series of trials, none of which was in itself expected to decide the matter finally. No attempt was made to show that Farrant himself even declared that he had found the machine to work satisfactorily. As a matter of fact, I find that there is no proof that the machine was found to work satisfactorily by the purchasers' engineer. Nor is there any evidence to support the allegation that after the 12th of June the defendants took control of the dredger. At the trial the plaintiffs' counsel attempted to take up the wholly untenable position that the defendants had virtually taken control of the dredger at the end of the joint test period of one week, but in my opinion the attempt entirely failed, and the contention was wholly defeated by the plaintiffs' own letters. The absence of the engineer's certificate upon the allowance of which the second instalment would become due, is, in my opinion, sufficient to dispose of the plaintiffs' claim, there being no evidence that the defendants are responsible for his wrongfully withholding his certificate. In fact, to say that the certificate is wrongfully withheld would be entirely inconsistent with the plaintiffs' case as set up in their declaration. I shall, nevertheless, proceed now to give my findings upon the further contentions raised by the plaintiffs at the trial. One was that the plaintiffs became entitled to the payment of the second instalment upon their getting the machinery during the test period into good working order, and that that condition was fulfilled when they set up the complete machine, and made its parts work smoothly together, without any obligation on their part to show that the dredger was capable of pumping up a given quantity of material. According to the specification, the dredger was designed with the object of dealing with from thirty to thirty-five cubic yards of solids per hour, in addition to the water necessarily raised by the pump at the same time from a depth of from six to eight feet below the water line and deposit the same on the bank, which is approximately the same height above the water. One of the conditions of the contract is "that the sellers agree that the rated capacity of the dredger when operating in the orthodox manner, and in accordance with the plan of operations of the purchasers' engineer, and when dredging a uniform channel midway between the new river banks, shall be 35 cubic yards of solids per hour, to be determined over an extended period of not less than one month's operations, dated from the end of the trial period mentioned in clauses 2 and 3 of this agreement, and in the actual time during which the pump works. This period shall not be more than three calendar months, and shall be termed the guarantee period." And in clause 7 it is provided, with respect to the capacity of the dredger, that a margin of 10 per cent. in each direction shall be allowed in determining the amount of material dredged by the machine. It is quite clear from all this, and the references in the specification to the old dredger, that the main object of the parties was to get a dredger of a certain capacity, and not merely a well-built machine with good parts; but the plaintiffs contend that the defendants were, under the contract, obliged to accept the machine at the end of the test period, and to pay the second instalment before its capacity had been ascertained upon the plaintiff guaranteeing that during the guarantee period the defendants would, upon working it themselves, find that it pumped up the given quantity of material. In my opinion, the words, "in good working order," used in the second clause of the contract, signifies that the machine was to work in good order, and to perform the amount of work it was designed to perform, and the words, "work satisfactorily," in the sixth clause, mean that it should satisfactorily do the work required of it, which is to pump up a given quantity of material per hour. That such was the intention is made abundantly clear by the third clause, which shows that it was intended that the actual work of pumping material should be undertaken to test the machine—that is, in my opinion, to test its capacity for performing the required work. It was proved that during the numerous trials made from March to June the dredger utterly failed to perform the required work, except for a short period on two different occasions. Nor was it enough on one or two occasions for a brief period to pump up sufficient material, but it was to do the work in such a manner as to satisfy the engineer. The engineer was not satisfied, and, in my opinion, he had good reason to be dissatisfied, seeing that the spasmodic effort which succeeded on June 12 to raise the necessary material was not such as to prove that similar results could be relied upon in the long run. Especially when we bear in mind the many previous failures. The proposal made by the engineer that a test of some duration should be made was very reasonable, and the plaintiffs would have been wise to adopt it, instead of hurrying off and attempting to leave the machine upon the defendants' hands the moment they succeeded, by a supreme effort, to bring the dredger up to the required standard. The construction of the contract does not depend upon what the parties either did or said after it was completed; still, it is satisfactory to find that in what they both said and did, the plaintiffs showed that they well understood that it was required of them during the test period to bring the dredger up to its full working strength. We next come to a question between the parties which bulked very largely in the case, although it is not easy to discover where it is raised in the pleadings. Up to this point, it would seem the case for the plaintiffs is that they constructed a dredger according to the terms of their contract, which was found by the engineer's representative to work satisfactorily, and was taken by the defendants under their control. That the defendants have had control for three calendar months, and if they have allowed the guarantee period to elapse without ascertaining if the machine satisfied the guarantee, it is no concern of the plaintiffs, who at the end of the three months became entitled to the final instalment. But gradually a different colour comes upon the plaintiffs' case as it proceeds; and the change of attitude is not adopted by way of an alternative position, which, while open to the charge of inconsistency, may yet be quite legitimate, but it is taken as in some way growing out of the case first set up by them. This is their contention. Under their contract they constructed a sand dredger, to dredge sand and mud slimes, which they launched on the Diep River to do the required work, and it was then discovered that the Diep River was not a spot suitable for the operation of such a dredger. The plaintiffs say they have constructed the dredger according to specification, and the reason why it does not pump upwards of 31 cubic yards of solid material is because the river bed does not consist mainly of such material, but contains an undue proportion of stones of some magnitude. In the correspondence, the presence of stones is referred to as a serious difficulty, but as one in spite of which the work was satisfactorily accomplished. At the trial, however, the nature of the difficulty became more serious, until it came to be set up as a reason why the dredger could not be expected to pump up the stipulated quantity of material per hour. On the 14th of June, 1907, Cunningham and Gearing, referring to the output of 34.2 cubic yards on the 12th of June, write: "As the dredger has now shown itself capable of performing the guarantee, we presume you are making arrangements to start regular working. We are accordingly withdrawing our foreman and assistant. We are pleased that this difficult problem has been successfully solved, and feel confident that you will be gratified at the result obtained." Farrant promptly repudiated this position, and on the 19th of June Cunningham and Gearing, in explaining the previous failures of the dredger, say that accidents occurred solely through the presence of large stones in the bed of the river; that the delays were due not to any defect in the machinery, but to the presence of layers of stones of various sizes, these layers resembling a hand-packed road foundation; and that there were frequent stoppages depending on the beds of stones encountered during pumping, but they were stoppages of a few minutes only. But, in spite of all this, they say: "We would state that we have contracted to supply a suction dredger to a specification approved of by your company, and to perform a stated duty, in terms of our specification, all details were assembled in the works, and were inspected and passed by you. The guaranteed output has been exceeded, and we claim that we have in every way fulfilled our contract obligations." The plaintiffs claim success, and at the trial it was attempted to excuse their failure. I do not think this is putting the matter too broadly, although the contention was now and again modified and qualified. In its modified form it amounts to this, that where suitable material is met with in the river the dredger operates successfully, where unsuitable material is encountered it cannot be expected to do the work. Unsuitable material, the plaintiffs say, is constantly encountered, and for the want of success in consequence they are not responsible. A great deal of evidence was directed to the question whether the river was one upon which a sand dredger could successfully operate, but I cannot find any evidence to prove that there existed beds of stone at the bottom of the river. The best way of discovering the nature of the bed of the river is to examine the material thrown up by the old dredger. That was done by Professor

Payne, who was present at the dredging on the 22nd of August. He examined the soil from the old dredger, and compared it with that of the new dredger, and found it similar. The old dredger has successfully pumped up this material, and continues to do so, and, in my opinion, the new dredger should do the same. What is required of the new dredger is not to pump up a different kind of material, but to pump up similar material in larger quantities, and so perform the work more rapidly. Professor Payne stated that, in his opinion, the proportion of stone was not more than two per cent., and I accept the evidence of the witnesses, who say that a sand dredger is expected to deal with stone in such quantities and of the size found in the river. That would appear to be so from the specification itself, where provision is made for the presence of stones. I may say again that the plaintiffs contracted to construct a machine to deal with a condition of things which Harry Gearing found to exist after personal investigation, and in my opinion the condition of things as found by him is that described by the witnesses for the defence. I come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs have failed to carry out their contract, and must fail in their claim. And the plaintiffs, having refused to complete their contract, the plaintiffs in reconvention are entitled to judgment in terms of their prayer (b). The Court must leave it to the parties to make any reasonable settlement they may be able to arrive at, and cannot now undertake to see that the plaintiffs fulfil their contract within a reasonable time. It would seem that the dredger, although it falls short of the contract requirements, may yet be of great service to the defendants, and it would be a great pity if it should be left as useless lumber upon the hands of the plaintiffs. As to the further claim in reconvention, it appears to me the defendants are not entitled to recover for the services rendered by their servants to the plaintiff. It is quite clear that Hunter and Fraser, jun., were at the works in the interests of the defendants, and there was no arrangements made as to the services of the other servants. Farrant was very anxious to assist the plaintiffs in every way to get on with the work, and it was quite natural that when, during the time he, Hunter, and Fraser worked with the plaintiffs' men, the dredger got on the sands, he should send for his men to assist to get it off without meaning to charge the plaintiffs. Nor do I think that the assistance rendered by Farrant in making the new parts, with which he and plaintiffs seem to have made experiments, were intended to be charged against the plaintiffs. He certainly never intimated that he intended to charge them, and the entries in the books prove little, because in any case, even if it was not intended to charge the plaintiffs, the work would necessarily be entered there as work on the dredger in account with the servants. But I do not think the plaintiffs could have imagined that the oil supplied was a gift, and that it must be allowed, amounting to £8 5s. Judgment will therefore be entered for the plaintiffs in reconvention for £706 13s. 4d. and £8 5s., less £28 9s. 2d. for material pumped by the plaintiffs, for which the plaintiffs in reconvention admitted their liability, and this judgment will carry costs.

Ordered that execution of judgment in respect of the cancellation of the contract and the payment of £706 13s. 4d. be suspended for three months, to enable the plaintiffs to perform their contract in the meanwhile to the satisfaction of the defendant's engineer.

SUPREME COURT

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSIONS. } 1907.
} Nov. 19th.

Mr. Toms moved for the admission of John Douglas Luyt as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Alexander moved for the admission of Hendrik Jacobus Cornelius de Jager as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Registrar of the High Court, Kimberley.

PROVISIONAL ROLI.

DRAKE V. MEYER AND ANOTHER.

Mr. P. T. Lewis moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

WIENER AND CO. V. KHANGOOL.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

BURNARD V. GREYLING.

Mr. Marais moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £165, with interest at 8 per cent. from December, 1906; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. FOCK.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,200, with interest from the 1st January, 1906, less £4 9s. 2d. paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

ARCHIBALD AND BROWN V. BAILEY.

Mr. Coenradie moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court at Port Elizabeth for £32 2s., and costs, and for certain property mentioned in the summons and rents accruing to be declared executable.

Order granted.

BROWN V. BROWN.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £709, with interest from the 1st April, 1906, and costs.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

CLAREMONT MUNICIPALITY V. COWLING. { 1907.
 { Nov. 19th.

Mr. Coenradie moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £122, less 15s. 5d. paid on account, being for rates for 1907, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

SIERADZKI V. MICHELL.

Mr. Coenradie moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £140, less £115 paid, since issue of summons, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

LINDSAY V. LINDSAY. { 1907.
 { Nov. 19th.

Mr. Howes moved for a decree of divorce in default of compliance by the defendant in reconvention (Mrs. Lindsay), with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

De Villiers, C.J., said that there appeared to be an informality in the service, inasmuch as the defendant in reconvention was not served with the rule until the very day on which she was directed to restore conjugal rights, but, on the other hand, she did not appear to show cause, and, under the special circumstances, the rule would be made absolute.

Ex parte DUMBLETON.

Mr. H. G. Lewis again mentioned this matter, in which petitioner, a general dealer, of the Bredasdorp district, sought leave to sue his wife by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, and to have a certain deed of separation set aside. (17 C.T.R., 912.)

Counsel produced a further affidavit as to the domicile of the petitioner, who, it appeared, came to this colony from New Zealand for the benefit of his health, and had now been residing here some years. Petitioner's position in relation to the deed of separation was that he entered into it in complete ignorance of its meaning and contents. He had repeatedly asked his wife, who was in New Zealand, to join him, but she declined.

It transpired that there had been previous proceedings, but that these were dropped for the time being.

De Villiers, C.J.: As far as I can see, it will be a hopeless case if she comes here to defend it. If she did not appear before, that would seem to show that she does not intend to appear to set up this defence. Leave will be granted to sue respondent by edictal citation, returnable on the last day of next term, personal service to be effected.

INSOLVENT ESTATE REIDEL V. DUKE.

This was an application upon notice to respondent (Wm. Duke) to show cause why he should not be ordered to forthwith vacate and give up possession to applicants (the trustees in the insolvent estate of C. F. H. Reidel) of the farm Rompe Valley, Wynberg.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl was for applicants; Mr. Alexander was for respondent.

Respondent's position shewed that he had been granted a five years' lease of the farm by Mrs. Atkins, a relative of the insolvent (by whom, he claimed, she was authorised to act), that he had made considerable improvements, and that no offer had been made by applicants to compensate him.

Applicants denied that respondent had any right to remain on the farm.

Mr. Van Zyl submitted that respondent was not a bona fide possessor of the farm. If a mala fide possessor, the applicants were entitled to eject him, and the respondent, if he had any claim for improvements, could then proceed to sue the applicants.

Mr. Alexander submitted that the respondent was a bona fide possessor. It was clear that he had made some improvements. Counsel contended that it was impossible to decide the matter on motion. On the question of compensation, he quoted Maasdorp's Institute (vol. 3, p.p. 2 and 225), De Beers Consolidated Mines v. London and South African Exploration Co. (12 S.C., 107), Billingham v. Bloomentje (1874, Buch., 36), Lind and Others v. Calitz and Others (9 S.C., 268), South African Association v. Van Staden (9 S.C., 99), and Barnard v. Colonial Government (5 Juta, 122).

De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear that the respondent has no right whatever to be upon this property. He alleges that he got permission to be upon the property from Mrs. Atkins. He does not produce Mrs. Atkins to support him in any way, and the only person who was the agent of the owner of this property was Mr. Wolf, and he denies that he at any time was a party to any lease or agreement of lease being effected in favour of the respondent. There are several allegations made by the respondent in his affidavits which are wholly misleading. Amongst the statements which he makes is one to the effect that he has derived no profit whatever from the farm save and except a few shillings which he mentions, and there are affidavits now to the effect that he has actually been receiving some of the rents accruing in respect of properties on the farm. No statement whatever is made about this in his affidavits. It seems to me that the respondent has greatly exaggerated the amount of the improvements which he has made upon this property, and I am by no means satisfied that those improvements are more than the benefits which he has derived from the property. It is quite possible that he may be able to prove at some future stage that they are improvements which have permanently benefited the property, and are of a tangible nature in respect of which he is entitled to recover. For the present I am not satisfied that he has expended more than he has received. But that matter I shall leave open for any future action, but for the present, not being satisfied that improvements have been made in respect of which the defendant will be entitled to compensation, I think that an order should be made that the defendant should vacate the premises. The Court will order that the respondent vacate and give up possession of the property in question on or before the 15th January, 1908, and that in the meantime he be interdicted from receiving any rents or allowing the cattle of others to graze on the property, or disposing of or removing from the said property any articles affixed thereto or forming part thereof, save and except any plants or trees sown or planted by himself, or the produce of any plants or trees sown or planted by himself on the said property. This order to be without prejudice to any action the respondent may be advised to bring for improvements made by him by which the value of the land has been increased, the applicant to be entitled in the meantime to occupation of so much of the property as is not in the personal occupation of the respondent, or does not form part of the gardens planted by the respondent, the costs of the motion to abide the result of such action, if such action be not brought to trial before the last day of next term, the costs of this application to be paid by the respondent.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE TESSENDORF.

Mr. Payne moved, on behalf of the trustee in the insolvent estate of Herman Friedrich Tessendorf, for an amendment of the records in insolvency, in which insolvent is described as "Herman Tessendorf."

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte HELLAND.

Mr. Roux moved, on petition of Alice Helland, a widow, of Steynsburg, for leave to sue in forma pauperis the Town Council of Cape Town for £500 damages for shock sustained by her during the explosion in Adderley-street on the 13th June, 1906. Petitioner stated that she had arrived by the mail steamer on the morning of the occurrence, and that she was in the street when her companion was killed by the explosion, and she (petitioner) sustained a terrible shock. Petitioner was at the time en route from England to take up a situation as a housekeeper at Steynsburg. Counsel said that there was some little difficulty in this matter, because notice in writing was not served upon respondents within 14 days of the accident, as required by Act 26 of 1894 (section 2). The delay appeared to be due to the fact that Mrs. Holland at first consulted Messrs. Fairbridge, Ardorne and Lawton, and that they informed her that they did not know whether they would be acting as the Council's attorneys in the matters arising out of the explosion. They found that they would be so acting, and informed Mrs. Holland, and she proceeded to instruct other attorneys, but it was a few days beyond the period of 14 days when notice was given to the respondents of the claim. The applicant was in this difficulty, that she had no money to make application to the Court, for leave to sue, notwithstanding that written notice had not been given within 14 days. Counsel added that he had certified probabilis causa.

The Court granted a rule, returnable on the 12th December, calling upon respondents to show cause why leave should not be granted to petitioner to sue, notwithstanding that no written notice was given in terms of section 2 of Act 26 of 1894, and why she should not be admitted to sue in forma pauperis, any further affidavits which petitioner intends to use to be served together with the rule.

REX V. SEYMOUR.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the A.R.M. of Wynberg, who had convicted the appellant of receiving stolen property, knowing the same to have been stolen, and sentenced him to undergo a term of imprisonment.

Appellant appeared in person; Mr. Howel Jones, K.C., was for the Crown.

Appellant stated that he was not guilty of the charge. The other man (Russell) who was a discharged soldier, had brought the goods to the room which they occupied together. He (Seymour) had received a shirt and a pair of drawers from Russell about a fortnight before his arrest, and the other goods which he was charged with stealing he had not seen until twenty minutes before he was apprehended.

De Villiers, C.J.: I am afraid it is impossible to allow this appeal. The two prisoners, Russell and Seymour, were charged together with the theft of these articles, which had been stolen from a washerwoman, who was washing soldiers' clothes, and also from the hospital. The two prisoners were living together. Russell pleaded guilty. Seymour pleaded not guilty. The Magistrate found that he was guilty of receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, which he is entitled to do by law if he is satisfied that Seymour knew the goods were stolen. Some of these articles were found in the possession of the accused, who was actually wearing them. Many of the articles were found under the bed on which Seymour generally slept. He and Russell had been living together for three weeks. All of a sudden he finds Russell coming there with all these articles, stolen articles, and he finds Russell hiding these articles under the bed. The Magistrate comes to the conclusion that Seymour must have known, under all the circumstances, that Russell had stolen these goods. I consider that the Magistrate was quite justified in arriving at that conclusion, and, therefore, upon the evidence as it stands, quite independently of the previous convictions against Seymour, even if there had been no previous convictions, I should have held that the judgment was perfectly correct. Seymour is an old offender, he is a man who has been repeatedly convicted of petty thefts, and, therefore, that strengthens the view that he would have had no compunction in receiving goods, knowing them to have been stolen, from his comrade. The appeal must be dismissed, and the conviction confirmed.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TEMPORARY INTERDICT.

LEWIN AND ADAMSTEIN V. { 1907.
BURGER AND INSOLVENT } Nov. 20th.
ESTATE BURGER.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Louwrens) moved, as a matter of urgency, for a certain temporary interdict in the matter of Lewin and Adamstein v. (1) Jacobus Francois Burger and (2) A. G. H. Teubens and W. S. van Niekerk as joint trustees in the insolvent estate of Gideon Johannes Burger. Applicants prayed for a rule or order restraining the second-named respondents from selling the farm Kraalboschvlakte, district Robertson, on the 21st inst., or at any time previously to the hearing of the action, pending between applicant and the first named respondent, or until this Court had heard and adjudicated upon the applicant's motion to be instituted for the expunging of the first named respondent's proof of bond for £3,200, and the admission of the applicants' proof of the same unless for a price or upon terms to be approved by the applicants and, if the property be sold upon these conditions, restraining second named respondents for paying over to the first named respondents, or otherwise dealing with the proceeds of the sale, pending the result of the action or the motion for expunging the first named respondent's proof. From counsel's statement, it appeared that applicants claimed to have a registered cession of the bond for which the first named respondent had proved against the estate.

The Registrar handed in a letter which he had received from the trustees, in anticipation of the present application.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp (after perusing the letter) said that the trustees apparently wanted to be heard, and the sale would, therefore, have to be postponed.

Rule nisi granted, to operate as an interim interdict, calling upon respondents to show cause why the sale should not be interdicted pending the action, rule returnable on the 26th November.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

SOEKER V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

1907.
Nov. 22nd.
" 29th.

This was an action brought by Lalie Soeker, a livery stable keeper, of Cape Town, against the Hon. Victor Sampson, K.C., in his capacity as Attorney-General, and as such representing the Colonial Government, for £200 damages for alleged breach of contract.

Plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. Plaintiff is Lalie Soeker, a livery stable keeper, residing and carrying on business in Cape Town. Defendant is the Hon. Victor Sampson, K.C., and is sued in his capacity as Attorney-General, and as such representing the Government of the Colony.

2. On or about 17th November, 1906, defendant issued a notice, with a schedule attached, calling for "tenders for Western Circuit." Thereafter, and in consequence thereof, plaintiff tendered for the same. For greater certainty plaintiff craves leave to refer to the said notice and tender when produced at the trial.

3. On or about February 22, 1907, and in pursuance of the above, the parties entered into a formal contract for the conveyance of His Majesty's Judges on the Western Circuit during the year 1907, which said contract plaintiff prays may be read as if inserted herein.

4. With regard to the second Western Circuit of 1907, defendant, on or about June 14, 1907, wrongfully, unlawfully, and in breach of the said contract, dispensed with plaintiff's services etc., and refused to allow him to complete the said contract, though able, ready, and willing to do so. Thereby defendant caused plaintiff to suffer heavy loss and damage both by reason of labour and expenses spent and incurred by plaintiff in and about fulfilling his said duties under the said contract, and on account of loss of profit.

5. All things have happened, all conditions have been fulfilled, and all times have elapsed necessary to entitle plaintiff to claim damages from defendant for such breach as aforesaid, but defendant has not paid the same or any part thereof, though frequently requested so to do.

Wherefore plaintiff claims: (a) £200 damages; (b) further or other relief; (c) costs of suit.

Defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration.

2. He admits that on the 22nd February, 1907, the parties entered into an agreement in writing, a copy of which he attaches hereto marked "A" and prays may be read as part hereof.

3. In the month of March, 1907, the plaintiff was, in terms of the said agreement, required to provide certain horses, harness, drivers, and necessary appliances for the use of the Judge proceeding upon the Western Circuit from a date of departure notified to him by the said Judge; he thereupon carried out his contract, and was paid for his services in accordance therewith.

4. The defendant says that owing to the extension of the railway through the Western Districts of the Colony there has not since the date aforesaid been any further necessity to use the Judge's wagon or spider, or for requiring the plaintiff to provide the said horses, harness, drivers, and appliances, and no notification has been given to the plaintiff by the Circuit Judge to leave Cape Town, as provided by clause 5 of the said agreement.

5. On or about the 14th June, 1907, the defendant was notified that the Judge proceeding upon the Western Circuit would not require the Circuit equipment referred to in the preceding paragraphs, and thereupon in order to prevent disappointment to the plaintiff and obviate any unnecessary preparations which he might otherwise make for a second Circuit, notified to him that he would not be called upon to supply the said equipment therefor. Save as aforesaid the defendant denies paragraphs 3, 4, and 5 of the declaration.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) was for plaintiff; Mr. Howel Jones, K.C. (with him Mr. Morgan Evans), was for the defendant Government.

Lalie Soeker, the plaintiff, said that for many years past he had, with a short interval, carried the Judges on the Western Circuit. He had carried on business for 35 years. The horses that he used for the Circuit were horses specially kept for that purpose. He had harness that he procured specially for the purpose. He had a driver, Esau Stemmet, whom he had specially kept to drive the Circuit Judge. Esau had been in his employ for 35 years, and had also been employed by his father previously. Esau had driven the Circuit Judges during a period of 46 years. In March last he received notice as usual to provide horses for the conveyance of the judge for the first Circuit Court. On the 14th June he received a letter from Sir John Graham, Secretary of the Law Department, informing him that he would not be called upon to supply horses, etc., for the conveyance of the judge on the Second Western Circuit this year, as the Circuit journey would be performed almost entirely by railway. Mr. Thomas, who conducted business on his behalf, wrote to the Attorney-General's Department, pointing out that he (plaintiff) was bound to provide horses, etc., in readiness for two Circuit journeys in the year, and correspondence ensued. In the course of July, witness had an interview with Sir John Graham, who said that the Government wanted to know what his actual loss was. In consequence, Mr. Thomas wrote a letter indicating the losses which he (plaintiff) had sustained, and witness, later on, had a further interview with Sir John Graham. Later, his attorney wrote a letter to Sir John Graham stating that he was not prepared to accept the sum of £50 offered by the Government in settlement of his claim for damages, and demanding £200 as compensation. An estimate had been framed, showing the amount which he would have received had he been employed to carry the Circuit Judge from George to Oudtshoorn and back.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: Witness expected that he should send his horses to every town where the Circuit Judge went. He had contracted on the basis that he was to make two trips in the year.

De Villiers, C.J., said it was apparent that the plaintiff, through his counsel, did not claim damages except as to the journey between George and Oudtshoorn.

Cross-examination continued: In the old days the contract used to be very profitable, and even this year it had been a good thing for him.

Mr. Jones: You seem to have forgotten about the advance of the "iron horse." The circumstances had never before been as they were then. The mistake you made was in keeping your men and horses.

Witness: I could not dismiss my servants, because I had entered into a contract for a year. I did not know when the Government would call upon me.

Mr. Jones: You know there is no Circuit Court between March and September?

Witness: Yes, but I should have had to sell my horses at a great loss then.

In further cross-examination, witness said that he had used imported horses occasionally on the circuit journeys, but as a rule he used Cape horses. He had one imported horse which cost him £25, and when it came back from circuit he had to exchange it and give £25 to boot.

[De Villiers, C.J.: So that you found the Colonial article was the best?]

Witness: Yes, that is so.

E. F. Kilpin, clerk of the House of Assembly, produced a copy of the Supplementary Estimates submitted to Parliament last session, on which appeared an item of £50, Superior Courts, compensation to the circuit transport contractor in connection with the cancellation of contract.

Francis Clark, clerk to the Hon. Sir John Buchanan, gave evidence as to the employment of a livery stable proprietor to carry the Circuit Judge from George to Oudtshoorn and back to George at the last sitting of the Western Circuit.

By the Court: The amount paid to the contractor, Van Rooyen, was £27.

Esau Stemmet, foreman driver, employed by plaintiff, said that he had driven the Judge's wagon on the Western Circuit for the past 46 years. In former days he used to drive the judges over the whole of the circuit.

A. W. Steer, attorney, and Mr. Thomas also gave evidence.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Sir John Graham, secretary of the Law Department, said that the Circuit Courts were held in March and September of each year. The itinerary was fixed by the Judges. Six weeks' notice was usually given by proclamation of the dates of the Circuit Courts. In connection with the circuits, the Judges used the railway as far as possible. The circuit towns were constantly changing with the progression of the railway. On the first circuit this year Soeker was paid £271 for 26 days. Consultations had taken place between the Judges and the Attorney-General with a view of the reduction of circuit expenses as far as possible. In view of the opening of the George railway, it was agreed between the Attorney-General and the Judges that the Western Circuit should be, as far as possible, an all-rail circuit.

Mr. Jones proposed to put in a letter received by the Attorney-General from the Chief Justice in regard to the circuit arrangements.

Mr. Upington objected that the letter must be proved in the usual way.

Mr. Jones (at the request of the Court) marked the passage which he wished to be put in.

The Chief Justice (after perusing the letter) ruled that the letter was admissible, but said that he should direct the jury that anything in the letter could not affect the contract. The fact that it was suggested in the letter that the circuit road equipage should not be used would not affect the plaintiff's rights under the contract.

Mr. Jones read the letter.

Witness (continuing) said that in consequence of the letter he wrote to plaintiff on the 14th June on the instructions of the Attorney-General informing him that his horses, etc., would not be required for the second Circuit. On the 18th September witness was interviewed by Mr. Steer, on behalf of Attorney MacCallum, in reference to the position. Witness said that they did not admit any liability in law to Soeker, but that if Soeker could show that he had sustained any loss, the Attorney-General would pay reasonable compensation. He could not get any definite information out of Soeker, and he said that £50 had been put down on the Supplementary Estimates, which they would be prepared to pay if Parliament passed the item, and if Soeker could show that he had actually suffered loss. The £50 was not voted by Parliament, because the Appropriation Bill was not passed. The item was put on the Estimates as a matter of grace.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He had never regarded the £50 as a definite offer. He thought the work on the second Circuit would have had disastrous results for plaintiff.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Mr. Upington was about to address the jury, when

Mr. Jones said that his contention was, in the first place, that there was no breach of contract in law, and he would ask for a ruling on that before the case went to the jury.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the letter from the Judges to the Attorney-General was written independently of Soeker, and, if it were a breach of contract to employ somebody else between George and Oudtshoorn, the letter from the Judges could not affect that.

Mr. Jones said his contention was that there was no case to go to the jury at all.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would hear Mr. Jones on the point, but that he would not be able to address the jury on it also afterwards.

Mr. Jones, upon the legal point, submitted that there had actually been no breach of the contract. The duty of the plaintiff was merely to provide horses for the Judge's wagon when required by the Judge going on Circuit, and defendant's obligation was merely to pay the plaintiff for the number of days he was actually required to convey the Judges. There was no obligation at all to employ him. When it came to defendant's knowledge that they would not require him to go on Circuit, he could not insist on being employed. He referred to section six of the notice calling for tenders, and was perfectly clear that plaintiff only undertook to supply horses if required. He also referred to clause 3 of the contract. This was really a unilateral contract, and on that he cited Burton v. Great Northern Railway Company (23 L.J. Exch., D., 184). He also cited Witham v. Great Northern Railway Company (9 L.R., C.P., 16), referred to Pollock (Conts., ed. 5, p. 174). There was no contract between Soeker and the Government in this case until he was actually ordered to supply horses. He referred to the Privy Council Appeal from Quebec of Queen v. Deemers (1900, Appeal Court, p. 103).

Mr. Upington said this was not a unilateral contract at all, but a bilateral contract between the plaintiff and the defendant. Plaintiff undertook to provide at any time when the horses became necessary for the use of the Judge to proceed on Circuit. The contract did not specifically say that plaintiff had the sole right to supply those things, but it was a necessary inference from the contract that he should have that right. It was an entirely different case from that of Deemer or Witham, which were cases of continuing offers. He read from the judgment of Mr.

Justice Brett in Witham's case, on the side of the Government there was an obligation not only to pay, but to supply a spider and wagon for the use of the plaintiff. It was a fair inference from the contract that when Soeker agreed to supply whenever required the Government agreed to pay whenever required.

De Villiers, C.J., asked if plaintiff should not have alleged that horses were required?

Mr. Upington said that that matter was in issue between the parties, as would appear from the pleadings. He distinguished Burton's case cited by Mr. Jones.

Mr. Jones having replied,

De Villiers, C.J., said that the legal question raised was whether the contract between the parties imposed upon the defendant the obligation to utilise the horses of the plaintiff under the circumstances, which arose before the last Circuit. It was clear that it was intimated to the Government that so far as the judges were concerned they could dispense with the horses, and the question was whether the Government was still bound to employ the plaintiff. No obligation was imposed on the Government except by clauses five and two. By clause five the Government agreed that it would pay the plaintiff at the rate of £8 10s. per diem, reckoned from the date of his departure, and until his arrival back in Cape Town. In the second clause the Government agreed to provide a large travelling wagon and a spider. By the first clause the plaintiff covenanted and agreed to provide, at his own cost and charge, the number of horses thereafter mentioned, together with the necessary harness and appliances, required for the use of the Judges to proceed on Circuit in the Western districts of the Colony whenever required during the year 1907. Now, it was quite clear that when those horses were not required there could be no possible obligation on the Government to employ the plaintiff, and, in the absence of such obligation, he (the Chief Justice) failed to see what case the plaintiff had made out. It was, however, possible that the Court of Appeal might take a different view, and to save expense the jury had better assess the amount of damages suffered by plaintiff now.

Mr. Upington suggested that the question of fact whether these vehicles were needed by the Judge, between George and Oudtshoorn, should also go to the jury.

De Villiers, C.J., said that they were not needed, because neither the spider nor wagon was required. However, the question could be put to the jury.

Counsel then addressed the jury on the questions of whether the horses were needed by or only for the use of the Judge between George and Oudtshoorn and on the question of damages.

De Villiers, C.J., in summing up the evidence, pointed out that the contract was for one year only. In the notice calling for tenders it was stated that any such of the horses, etc., would have to be provided as would be required. It was not necessary to go to all the towns in the circuit. Some of the towns could be excluded, and if the whole journey could be done by railway, then it would not be necessary to employ the plaintiff. It was probably more convenient for Soeker to tender than for other people, as Soeker always had a number of horses. In June the Government found that it would not be necessary to employ the plaintiff on the Western Circuit, because it would be practically an all-rail circuit, and Soeker was informed of this. If there were a breach of contract, it was a breach in June, and plaintiff could reduce his loss. It was a question if plaintiff could have made any profit under the circumstances. The jury would be quite justified in bearing in mind that notice was given in June. Mr. Upington had asked him to leave to the jury the question whether the horses were required for the circuit. He (the Chief Justice) was quite willing to leave it to the jury, but it would be difficult for the jury to say that they were required when the people who had to use them said that they were not required.

The jury then retired.

During their absence his lordship heard counsel in argument on the question whether the vehicles were required by the Judge between George and Oudtshoorn should have been left to jury.

De Villiers, C.J., then sent for the jury, and on their return said that the only question the jury had to answer was: "In case it should be found by a full Court that there was a breach of contract, what was the amount of damages suffered by the plaintiff?"

The foreman said the jury found that the plaintiff had suffered £128 damages.

Mr. Jones moved for judgment on his lordship's ruling.

Postea (November 29).

De Villiers, C.J.: After the evidence had been given in this case, but before verdict, the plaintiff's counsel asked for the ruling of the Court upon the question whether there was any evidence to submit to the jury of breach of contract on the defendants' part. I intimated that, in my opinion, there was no such evidence, and the further consideration which I have given to the case has confirmed me in that opinion. The action is for damages for the defendants' breach of contract in not employing the plaintiff's services for the conveyance of the judge on the second Western Circuit of this year. The declaration does not set out the terms of the contract, but relies generally upon a tender which was sent by the plaintiff to the defendant for the conveyance of judges on the Western Circuit during the year 1907, and upon a formal contract consequent on such accepted tender. The tender was upon the face of a written notice calling for tenders. The 6th clause of this notice stated that it must be understood that only such of the vehicles, horses, etc., will be engaged as may be required by the judges for the respective Circuits, and the 8th clause specified the towns to be visited, including Oudtshoorn, adding, however, that any of these towns may be excluded from the itinerary and others added, and that the service will include the conveyance of the judge from and to the time of railway where necessary. The contract which was entered into imposed on the Government no other obligation than to provide one large travelling wagon or one spider, or both the vehicles, and, upon performance by the plaintiff of the covenants in the contract contained, to pay him at the rate of £8 10s. per diem, if both vehicles with fourteen horses were used, £6 10s. if the wagon with ten horses were used, and £5 if only the spider with six horses were used. On the other hand, the plaintiff undertook to provide at his own cost and charge the number of horses required, together with the necessary harness and drivers required for the use of the judges to proceed on the Western Circuit whenever required during the year 1907. It appears from the evidence that the plaintiff's services were employed for the first Western Circuit of 1907, but that on the 14th June, 1907, the secretary of the Law Department informed him that he would not be called upon to supply horses, etc., for the conveyance of the Judge on the second Western Circuit as the circuit journey would be performed almost entirely by railway. A correspondence, as well as personal communications, between the parties ensued, but they are not of any assistance upon the question whether there was any legal obligation on the defendant to employ the plaintiff's services on the second Western Circuit. At the trial the Supplementary Estimates for 1907, passed by the House of Assembly, but not by the Legislative Council, were produced, upon which appeared the item of £50, "Superior Courts, compensation to the Circuit transport contractor, in connection with the cancellation of contract." It was urged on behalf of the plaintiff that this was an acknowledgment of liability by the Government, but it is of no assistance in the determination of the strictly legal question whether before such alleged acknowledgment there had been a breach of contract. The Government may have been willing to compensate the plaintiff for the undoubted hardship, that, in consequence of the extension of the railway system, his services would no longer be required, but there never was a formal tender of the amount, and even if there had been a tender, the plaintiff did not accept the tender, nor does he in his declaration rely upon any promise made by Government after the alleged breach of contract. The alleged breach in this, that, although by far the greater part of the journey was to be performed by railway, yet, as some portion of the journey was to be performed by road, the defendant did not, as he ought to have done, utilise the plaintiff's services for the performance of that portion. The present terminus of the railway destined to be constructed to Oudtshoorn, is George, and it accordingly became necessary to convey the Judge by road from George to Oudtshoorn, and back to the railway terminus. Although neither the Circuit wagon nor the Circuit spider specified in the contract was used, the plaintiff's counsel contended that the defendant was bound under the contract to employ the plaintiff's services for that journey. This contention, if correct, would have necessitated the employment of the plaintiff's services, wherever it became necessary to employ vehicles by road from the nearest railway station to any Circuit town, as, for instance, was the case before a railway was constructed from Hutchinson Station to Victoria West. It would probably be a dead loss for the plaintiff to have to send his horses by rail for the purpose of conveying the Judge such a short distance, but, of course, if he has the legal right to insist upon it the Court must give effect to it. The question is, does such a right exist under the contract? I have again carefully read the contract, and have been unable to find any provision which imposes the obligation on the Government to utilise the services of the plaintiff under the circumstances which admittedly exist in the present case. In the absence of such an obligation, it is clear that there was no breach of contract. In the case of the Queen v. Cemera (A.C. for 1900, p. 103), it appeared that the plaintiff had contracted with the Government of Quebec to execute for a term of years the printing and binding of certain public documents at stipulated prices, but the Government did not expressly contract to give the plaintiff all or any of the said work. It was held by the Privy Council on appeal from the Queen's Bench of Quebec, that an obligation to that effect could not be implied, and that there was no breach of contract by reason of orders for work being withheld. Lord Macnaghten, in delivering the judgment of the Board, said: "The respondent undertakes to print certain public documents at certain specified rates. For all work given to him in the footing of the contract, the Government was undoubtedly bound to pay according to the agreed tariff. But the contract imposes no obligation on the Crown to pay the respondent for work not given to him for execution. There is nothing in the contract binding the Government to give to the respondent all or any of the printing work referred to in the contract, nor is there anything in it to prevent the Government from giving the whole of the work or such part as they may think fit, to any other printer." In the present case the contract leaves it to the Government to decide whether the plaintiff's horses would be required for the use of the Judges in any particular Circuit during 1907, and if the Government did not require the plaintiff's horses for the conveyance of the Judge between the George terminus and Oudtshoorn there could be no breach of contract in the Government employing a local contractor for the purpose. If it be said that the decision as to whether the plaintiff's horses were required by the Government, there would not then be this fatal objection to the plaintiff's claim, that he has neither alleged nor proved that the Circuit Judge did require his horses. The case may therefore be decided without reference to the defendant's evidence, in regard to which very few remarks are required. The letter written to the Attorney-General on behalf of the Judge, who was to proceed on the second Western Circuit of 1907, intimated that there would be no necessity for using the Circuit road equipage. That letter cannot be used for the purpose of construing the contract or relieving the Government from any of its obligations thereunder. It is clear that the letter was written with the sole object of facilitating the Circuit arrangements, and assisting to reduce the Circuit expenditure, and there is nothing to show that any of the Judges was aware of the terms of the then existing contract between the plaintiff and the Government. The only possible use, therefore, that can be made of the letter is to prove that as a matter of fact, the Circuit Judge did not require the Circuit road equipage on any part of the second Western Circuit. Quite independently, however, of the evidence given for the defendant, I am of opinion that there was no evidence to go to the jury of any breach of contract on the defendant's part, and that there should be absolution from the instance. Seeing, however, that the expenses of a trial by jury had been incurred, and that, in case of an application under the 35th or 39th section of Act 23 of 1891, the full Court might hold a different view from mine on the legal question, I requested the jury to assess the damage, which, assuming a breach of contract, the plaintiff has sustained. The jury, by their verdict, adopted the principle contended for on behalf of the plaintiff, namely, that he should receive the sum of £8 10s. per diem, as if the full equipage and number of horses had been required, and that the number of days should be computed by taking three days as the time for proceeding by train from Cape Town to George, and three days back, one day by road from George to Oudtshoorn, and one day back, and eight days being time spent by the Judge at Oudtshoorn. In this manner the sum of £136 would be arrived at, but from this amount was deducted the sum of £8, which, according to the plaintiff would have been the expenditure of his men at the rate of ten shillings per diem. There was no deduction from the feeding of the horses, apparently on the ground that they would have required feeding in Cape Town. At this stage it is unnecessary for me to say whether this mode of computation is justified by the evidence.

In regard to the costs of this action, I am bound to say that I would have been glad to relieve the plaintiff from the payment of the defendant's costs. He has always admittedly done his work to the satisfaction of the Judges and of the Government, and it was an undoubted hardship on him that the need for retrenchment and the progress of the railway induced the Government to dispense with his services. I cannot, however, be swayed by my personal feelings in the matter, and, in granting absolution from the instance, the Court must follow the ordinary practice, and give the defendant his costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

BEAMS V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1907.
Nov. 25th.
Dec. 3rd.

Civil service — Fixed establishment — Fixity of tenure —

Reduction of salary or emolument—Artizans on fixed establishment.

The plaintiff, after ten years efficient service as an artisan in the Railway Locomotive Department, was placed on the "fixed establishment." At the time of his being so placed, he was paid at a certain rate per hour for 54 hours per week, part of the wages being paid at the end of each week, and the balance at the end of each month. In the following year he petitioned for a reduction of the number of working hours to 48 per week, with a corresponding increase in the rate of wages per hour, and the request was granted. Subsequently the rate of wages per hour was increased, but the number of working hours remained at 48 per week. At the end of 1906, in consequence of the falling off of traffic, the Government reduced the number of working hours per week to 43½, but made no corresponding increase in the rate of wages per hour. It was admitted that no fault was to be found with the work done by the plaintiff.

Held, that as the plaintiff's monthly wages or emoluments were fixed and definite, and as a Civil Servant's salary cannot be reduced by Government save for misconduct, the Government was not entitled to reduce the number of working hours per week without a corresponding increase in the rate of wages per hour.

In this case the plaintiff, John Beams, an employee at the Salt River Works, sued the Colonial Government for a declaration that the defendants had no power or authority by law to reduce his salary or wage in the circumstances set forth in his declaration, and for £10 17s. salary unlawfully withheld, or in the alternative by way of damages.

Plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is John Beams, a turner on the fixed establishment of the Civil Service of this colony.

2. The defendant is the Honourable Thomas William Smartt, and is sued in his capacity as Commissioner of Public Works, and as such representing the Government of the Colony.

3. The plaintiff was duly placed on the fixed establishment aforesaid on the 29th February, 1888, pursuant to the provisions of the law then in force, and on the 6th August, 1895, he was a person in the public service of the Colony, and already placed on the fixed establishment, and the provisions of section 3, sub-section (c) of Act No. 32 of 1895 apply to the plaintiff, who has since the 6th August, 1895, continued to be and is on the fixed establishment.

4. Before and up to the 5th January 1907, the hours worked by the plaintiff amounted to 48 hours per week, taken on an average throughout the year, as will more fully appear from the by-laws duly framed by the Colonial Government as rules for workmen, and to which the plaintiff craves leave to refer when produced at the trial; and, in accordance with an agreement between the parties, the manner in which wages were paid by the defendant to the plaintiff was as follows: At the end of any particular week a certain advance against his wages, termed a "sub," was, for the convenience of the plaintiff and at his request, made to the plaintiff by the defendant, and thereafter, once in each month, the balance of total wages, calculated at the rate of 1s. 6d. per hour and 48 hours per week for four or five weeks, was paid to the plaintiff, less certain monthly stoppages, in which was included the sum total of the aforesaid weekly advances or "subs" since the payment of the last balance; and the plaintiff had undertaken and was obliged in consideration of such wages to work for 48 hours per week as aforesaid, and to submit to a deduction from his wages in case he should leave his work without permission of his foreman, or be absent even with such leave for more than 15 minutes, such deduction to be calculated at the rate of 1s. 6d. per hour.

5. The balance aforesaid was arrived at and stated monthly upon a printed ticket, provided by the defendant, whereof a true copy is hereunto annexed and marked "A," the total wages being filled in for a period of either four or five weeks, and reductions for the month for pension fund, sick fund, house rent (if any), school fees (if any) being included in the stoppages, as well as any sums falling under other heads indicated upon the ticket.

6. On and after the 5th January, 1907, the defendant, without the consent of the plaintiff pursuant to a notice whereof a copy is hereunto annexed and marked "B," reduced the plaintiff's number of hours of work per week by 4 2-3rd hours on Saturdays, and also refused to pay the plaintiff the salary or wage which before the said date he was drawing as aforesaid, but reduced the said salary or wage by seven shillings weekly, being 4 2-3rd hours at 1s. 6d. per hour.

7. The plaintiff has at all times performed his duties pursuant to the said Act and the rules lawfully made thereunder, to wit, under section 88 of the said Act, and he has at no time been guilty of a breach of discipline or been disgraced or incurred any of the penalties lawfully provided for the punishment of offences against the said rules.

8. The reductions made from the plaintiff's salary since the 5th January, 1907, and down to the issue of summons, amount to £10 17s.

9. The plaintiff has always, on and since that date, been and is ready and willing to work for and during the said 4 2-3rd hours per week, by which the 48 weekly hours of work have been reduced as aforesaid, and he has always protested against the reduction from his salary or wage, of 7s. per week, as aforesaid.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays generally a declaration of his rights, and more particularly the following declaration and orders: (a) That there was no power or authority vested by law in the defendant or the Colonial Government to reduce his salary or wage in the circumstances aforesaid; (b) that he is entitled either by way of salary unlawfully withheld, or, in the alternative, by way of damages, to the payment of the said sum of £10 17s.; (c) that he is entitled to an order declaring that while he remains upon the fixed establishment, and is ready and willing to perform his duties, the defendant or the Colonial Government is not justified in reducing his salary or wage, save in so far as such reduction is authorised by any provision of the said Act or lawful rules made thereunder providing such reduction for absence from work or by way of penalty for such breach of any lawful rule; (d) that he is entitled to have his costs of suit as against the defendant in his capacity.

Defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of the declaration.

2. At and after the date upon which the plaintiff was placed upon the fixed establishment, viz., the 9th February, 1886, he was in receipt of wages at the rate of nine and one-third pence per hour for each hour worked up to and inclusive of the number of 54 hours in each week, hereinafter termed the workshop hours, with an increase of 25 per centum upon the hourly wage for each hour worked overtime or beyond the said workshop hours.

3. Thereafter the plaintiff's wages were increased from time to time, to wit: Upon the 1st June, 1888, to 10½d. per hour; upon the 1st May, 1889, to 11½d. per hour; upon the 1st July, 1890, to 1s.

1½d. per hour; upon the 1st November, 1895, to 1s. 3d. per hour; upon the 1st December, 1900, to 1s. 4½d. per hour; upon the 1st July, 1906, to 1s. 6d. per hour; and he was paid at the said rate of 1s. 6d. per hour up to the 5th January, 1907, and has been so paid ever since.

4. Between the said 9th February, 1886, and the 5th January, 1907, the workshop hours were altered by the defendant upon the dates and in the manner following, to wit: Upon the 3rd April, 1886, from 54 to 47½; upon the 13th November, 1886, from 47½ to 54; upon the 15th January, 1887, from 54 to 47½; upon the 22nd April, 1887, from 47½ to 54; upon the 1st May, 1889, from 54 to 50; upon the 1st July, 1890, from 50 to 48.

5. The manner in which the plaintiff's wages were customarily paid to him by the defendant was as follows: At the end of each week a certain portion, termed a "sub." of the wages actually earned during the said week was paid, and thereafter once in each month, the balance of the total wages earned after deductions of the nature indicated in annexure A to the declaration. Save as aforesaid, the defendant denies paragraph 4 of the declaration.

6. The defendant admits paragraphs 5, 7, and 9 of the declaration.

7. As to paragraph 6, he admits the issue of the notice referred to, and that he has refused to employ the plaintiff or to pay him for more than forty-three and one-third hours in each week since the 5th January, 1907, as he was lawfully entitled to do, but otherwise denies the said paragraph.

8. He denies paragraph 8.

Wherefore the defendant says that the plaintiff is not entitled to the declaration and orders set out in his prayer, and prays that the same may be refused with costs.

The notice annexed to the declaration read:

Salt River, December 17, 1906.

Notice No. 615.

NOTICE TO WORKMEN.

Retrenchment: Closing of Workshops on Saturdays.—Owing to the persistent falling-off in traffic, and as there appears to be no immediate prospect of improvement, the Government have decided that the workshops are to be closed on Friday evening, 4.30, until 6.30 Monday morning each week, to take effect from the 4th January, 1907. This course has been adopted in preference to discharging men, as it is felt to be the fairest course to take, and the one which will entail less individual hardship.—(Signed) G. McGrath, Locomotive Superintendent.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) was for plaintiff;

Mr. Howel Jones, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin, K.C.) was for defendants.

Mr. Schreiner, in opening the case, said that this was a test case of considerable interest to the Civil Service. He believed there were 200 workmen on the fixed establishment. The plaintiff's position was that no man who was on the fixed establishment should have his salary reduced at the will of the Government without his consent, as long as he had not subjected himself to penalties.

Plaintiff was called. He stated that he was now 57½ years of age, within 2½ years of the retiring age. He came out to the Colony under contract in 1873, and in 1888, in consideration of the fact that he had been 10 years in the Service, he was placed on the fixed establishment. Plaintiff went on to give evidence as to the changes in his hours and rates of pay, and the deductions made for the Pension Fund. The pension, he said, was fixed on the basis of salary in the three years previous to retirement. Witness was still contributing to the Pension Fund at the same rate as prior to January last. Witness gave evidence as to what was done by consent of the men to meet the position of affairs during the depression of 1886. He had heard recently that it was intended to introduce a Bill to protect the position of men whose salaries had been reduced in regard to the question of pension, but no legislation had been actually brought forward. The hours of labour were reduced from 9 to 8 per day in 1899.

Mr. Schreiner was proposing to examine the witness in reference to a conversation which Sir Charles (then Mr.) Elliott had with the men in 1888, when

Mr. Jones objected to evidence of this kind being admitted on the ground that it did not touch the contract between the plaintiff and the Government.

De Villiers, C.J. (with the consent of Mr. Jones) allowed the evidence to be admitted on the understanding that, if necessary, the Government could take Sir Charles Elliott's evidence on the point.

Plaintiff said that at the meeting in 1888, Mr. Elliott informed the men who were not on the fixed establishment of the advantages of being on the fixed establishment. Mr. Elliott said that a man who had served ten years, and who was on the fixed establishment, and belonged to the Pension Fund, would not, in case of retrenchment, shortness of work, suffer in wages. At that time there were 12 to 18 men on the fixed establishment. His wages had hitherto always had an upward movement; this was his first experience of a fall in wages.

Cross-examined: When he was originally employed his pay was 5s. a day. He worked nine hours a day. He was a Civil Servant under chapter "b" of the regulations.

Mr. Jones: A competent authority could alter your hours from time to time?

Witness: Yes, but not my pay.

Supposing they increased your hours to 52, what would you say to that?—I should say nothing about it: I should be very glad of it.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Jones): But suppose they reduce this hours to two per week.]

Mr. Jones: My argument is that the Government could not do anything unreasonable, but that they are entitled to act within reason.

De Villiers, C.J., asked whether, as a matter of fact, retrenchment had not actually taken place in the salaries of Civil Servants.

Mr. Schreiner: If a man has got so much a year the Government are not entitled to take away a portion without the consent of Parliament.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But was there not an all-round reduction?]

Mr. Jones: As far as I can gather, it was not an actual reduction, but their increases were not allowed.

In further cross-examination, Mr. Jones asked witness if his position was that the Government could work him any number of hours without giving him any increased pay per hour?

Witness: They could work me nine hours a day, but I must get my 12s.—8 hours a day at 1s. 6d. per hour.

Mr. Jones: What is your complaint about the Pension Fund?

Witness: I am contributing to the Pension Fund at 1s. 6d. per hour for 48 hours per week, and I am not getting that.

In reply to the Court, witness said that he was now receiving 45s. a week, and he claimed to be entitled as a member of the fixed establishment to 72s. a week.

[De Villiers, C.J.: suppose they give you ten hours a day, would you be satisfied with £3 12s. a week.]

Witness: If they put up a note to work ten hours I should expect to receive £3 12s. I cannot say about the hours, such a thing has not happened.

Would you be satisfied to work ten hours a day instead of 8?—According to my rate, I should have to get my 12s. a day.

I suppose you would say that the additional hours should be paid for?—I have been paid for them when I have been asked to work before.

If a competent officer said you must work ten hours a day would you think you were entitled to more than £3 12s.?—I should have £3 12s., and try to get the other.

If you didn't get it?—I should have to do without.

Probably go to law for that?—Yes.

David Allan Pattison, a turner at Salt River Works, said that he had been on the fixed establishment since 1893. In 1688 Mr. Elliott had an interview with the men, and, in reply to a question, he told the men that when once a man was on the fixed establishment he could not be retrenched. It was in consequence of that reply that witness joined as a contributor.

By the Court: Witness thought that the Government, if a man's hours were increased, would reduce his rate per hour. The idea was that a man should receive so much per week, not so much per hour.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the plaintiff is right in his contention, and the men could be kept employed at increased hours without increased wages, the result would be that many would be dismissed?]

Witness: Yes. We look upon it like this, as members of the fixed establishment, we were not asked whether we would agree to this or not. Had we been consulted I have not the slightest doubt that 90 per cent. on the Fixed Establishment would have agreed, in fact, every man I have spoken to on the matter would have agreed to that. But we want the principle.

[That is really your objection—that you have not been consulted?—We were not consulted. We consider that the Government is asking us for a subscription towards the depression, and they are not asking for it, but they are taking it out of our pockets.]

[There is not sufficient work for all the men if they work 48 hours a week?—That is so.]

[If they continue to work 48 hours some will have to go?—That is so.]

[Is it not really in the interests of the body of the workmen that this should be done rather than that some should be dismissed altogether?—Yes, my lord, that is all right, but supposing we continue on the same hours as at present, unless things alter there are some men who will have to go, or else we shall have to work less hours than 43½. Where are we then? Supposing the Government say "we are going to knock off 20 hours"?]

[Well, that is a very strong argument.]

Edward Hopper, foreman at Salt River Works, also gave evidence.

Mr. Jones: The circumstances were no worse in 1886 than they are now?

Witness: I should say they were not so acute. There was no actual agreement on behalf of the men to work short time.

John Wm. Clemiston, a turner, said that he would be retired on pension at the end of the present month after 23 years' service. He corroborated the previous witnesses on various points. He naturally wondered what effect the reduction would have upon his salary. He had been paid at the rate of 1s. 8d. per hour.

Geo. Jones also gave evidence, and Mr. Schreiner then closed his case.

George McGrath, Locomotive Superintendent (called by Mr. Jones), said that there had been a great falling-off of traffic on the railways, and they were faced with the question of either retrenching men or reducing the hours. The working hours were reduced because it was considered the more merciful course to the men.

Hazlett M. Beatty, Chief Locomotive Superintendent, said that in 1886 there was severe depression, and he sent for the charge-men, and after a conference, it was decided to follow the same course as had been adopted recently. A great deal of overtime had been worked in the Government workshops, by which the men had benefited greatly. As to the question of pension, the men were allowed to contribute to the Pension Fund at the old rate after the hours per week had been reduced. This was done at the request of the men for their benefit.

By the Court: There were 140 men on the fixed establishment. The number of contributors to the Pension Fund was 450.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Mr. Schreiner quoted Acts 42 of 1885, 26 of 1886, 31 of 1888, and 32 of 1895 (sections 3, 25, 34, 35, 88, and 93). He contended that the plaintiff was a monthly servant, though for convenience' sake he received a "sub" of his wage every week. The position of every Civil Servant was involved in the Court's decision upon this case, because here they had a reduction of the emoluments of a person who was on the fixed establishment. Counsel quoted from the Regulations of the Service, as published in "Kilpin."

Mr. Jones said that the real question to be decided in this case was whether the Government was entitled to reduce the hours. The plaintiff was really receiving more to-day than he was receiving when he was first placed on the fixed establishment. He still received the same rate of pay as he did prior to January last, viz., 1s. 6d. per hour. Counsel quoted chap. "b," regulation I. of the Civil Service. He submitted that the Court would uphold any regulation which was not unreasonable. Plaintiff went on to the fixed establishment subject to all regulations made by the Government. The whole question was whether the number of hours directed to be worked under this regulation was reasonable or unreasonable? He submitted that on the admission of the witnesses for the plaintiff, it was a reasonable regulation, although fault was found because the men were not consulted by the Government. In 1886, when the conditions were less acute than they were to-day, the hours were, with the consent of the men, reduced by 6½ per week. Plaintiff's claim was that, whatever was done, he was to receive £3 12s. a week.

Mr. Schreiner, in his reply, said that the plaintiff as a Civil Servant was not entitled to stipulate what the hours should be that he worked, but he was entitled to get his £3 12s. a week, or say, about £18 a month on the average. He was entitled to say that that was his fixity. He looked upon that as his establishment. These men were entitled to just as much protection as any other branch of the Service.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 3rd).

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff is a turner employed by the Government in the Railway Locomotive Department, and was in 1888 placed on the fixed establishment of the Civil Service as from 9th February, 1886. His wages from 1886 to June 1, 1888, were 9 1-3 pence per hour for each hour he worked up to 54 hours a week, with an increase of 25 per cent. for overtime. From that time onwards there was a gradual increase of his wages per hour until the 1st July, 1906, when they were raised to 1s. 6d. per hour, at which they still stand. The working hours also varied from time to time. On 3rd April, 1886, they were reduced from 54 to 47½ per week, on 13th November, 1886, they were raised to 54, and on 15th January, 1887, again reduced to 47½, and on 27th April, 1887, again raised to 54. On the 5th of March, 1889, the plaintiff and other employees of the carriage department petitioned the General Manager of Railways for a reduction of the working hours to 48 per week, with an increase of wages, so that there might be no diminution of the weekly wages, and the request was in part agreed to. From the 1st July, 1890, the weekly hours were reduced to 48, but the weekly wages remained what they were. On the 17th of December, 1906, the following notice was given to the workmen by the Locomotive Superintendent: "Retrenchment.—Closing of workshops on Saturdays.—Owing to the persistent falling-off in traffic, and as there appears to be no immediate prospect of improvement, the Government have decided that the workshops are to be closed on Friday evening, 4.30, until 8.50, Monday morning each week. This course has been adopted in preference to discharging men, as it is felt to be the fairest course to take, and the one which will entail less individual hardship." The result was a reduction of the plaintiff's working hours from 48 hours per week to 43½ hours, and a consequent reduction of his wages from £3 12s. to £3 5s. per week. Even with this reduction, the wages of the plaintiff were considerably higher than what he received when first admitted to the fixed establishment, which were only £2 2s. per week. The plaintiff, however, objects to the reduction of the number of working hours and consequent reduction of weekly wages as being an infringement of his rights as an employee on the fixed establishment of the Civil Service, and the question to be decided is whether the Government could lawfully reduce his hours of work without a corresponding increase of the rate of wages which he was receiving per hour at the time of such reduction. Although the plaintiff and other artisans on the fixed establishment are paid by the hour and not by the month, there is no indication in Act 23 of 1895, or in the regulations framed thereunder, of any intention to confer on them a lesser degree of fixity of tenure than on other Civil Servants. The only disability that I can find is that they are not eligible, by reason merely of their appointment in one department, after ten years' service therein to hold office in any other department. When once, however, they have been placed on the fixed establishment they enjoy all the other advantages conferred on ordinary Civil Servants. According to the 31st paragraph of Government Notice No. 924 of 1895, the advantage of being placed on the fixed establishment is greater fixity of tenure, for the services of an officer not on the fixed establishment may be dispensed with at any time, while the services of an officer on the fixed establishment can be dispensed with only in certain contingencies. One of those contingencies is misconduct on the part of such officer. The 52nd of the Civil Service Regulations, framed under the Act, makes provision for a scale of punishments which the Governor may award according to the degree of such misconduct. Before the punishment can be inflicted, the Minister of the department must make a full inquiry and submit the matter to the Governor with his report thereon. The Governor may then either acquit the accused of the charge preferred against him, or, upon the charge being proved, may award such of the following punishments as the merits of the case may seem to require, viz.: (1) A reprimand; (2) a fine; (3) suspension for a period without deprivation of salary or emoluments; (4) suspension with such deprivation; (5) reduction of salary or emoluments; (6) reduction in rank; (7) enforced resignation; (8) dismissal. According to the regulations, therefore, reduction of salary or of emoluments is a punishment for breach of discipline or other misconduct, from which it is a fair inference that an official's salary or emoluments may not be reduced except in case of such misconduct on his part. The 34th section of the Act, however, provides for the grant of a retiring allowance in the case of the abolition of the office held by a person in the fixed establishment, and the 35th section provides for the removal from the service of any person on the fixed establishment in order to facilitate improvements in the department to which he belongs, but no such removal can take place without the previous concurrence of both Houses of Parliament. It appears to me that one or other of these sections would have been applicable to the position in which the Government found itself, in consequence of the persistent falling off in the railway traffic. If the Government found that there were too many employees in the department to which the plaintiff belongs for the work required to be done, the super-abundant offices might be abolished, but in that case, of course, the officers would have to be compensated, under the 34th section of the Act. If it was found that greater economy and efficiency could be effected without abolition of any offices, but by means of a re-organisation of the department, necessitating the removal of the plaintiff, then the Government could remove him, but only with the previous concurrence of Parliament. Neither of these sections has been applied in the present case. With the highly laudable object of avoiding the discharge of men who were not on the fixed establishment, the Government considered it the fairest course to all concerned to reduce the working hours all round, and thus retain the services of as many of the men as possible. I confess that I would have been glad to be able to hold that the more equitable course adopted by the Government is also the legal course, but the terms of the Act and the regulations framed by Government thereunder have forced me to a different conclusion. The safeguards provided by the Act for all Civil Servants would be completely nullified if the Government could reduce the emoluments of any Civil Servant without misconduct of any kind on his part. The plaintiff is paid at a certain rate per hour, whereas ordinary Civil Servants are paid at a certain rate per month, but his monthly wages, provided he works for the full month, are as much a known and definite quantity as the monthly salary of the ordinary Civil Servant. When in 1889 the plaintiff's working hours were reduced from 54 to 50, and again in 1890, when the working hours were reduced to forty-eight, the principle was accepted that such reduction should not entail a reduction of the monthly emoluments, for the rate of wages was correspondingly increased. Strangely enough, as late as July, 1906, when the falling off in traffic must already have begun, the plaintiff's wages were further increased from 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d. per hour. If the Government had refused this increase the plaintiff would have had no legal cause for complaint, but only five months after such increase the Government notified that there would be a decrease in another direction, namely, by a reduction of the number of hours during which the plaintiff would be allowed to work. At the time when he received this notice the plaintiff was in this position. There was a definite and recognised rate of pay per hour, and there was a definite and recognised number of working hours per week, the joint effect of which was to entitle him to the receipt of wages at £3 12s. per week, provided that he worked the full forty-eight hours. The effect of the change was to reduce his wages to £3 5s. per week. The reduction is not great, but if once the legality of the reduction is admitted it would be impossible to fix the point at which such reductions are to stop. Mr. Jones admitted that the Government could not reduce the number of hours beyond what is reasonable, but the reasonableness of the reduction, if legal, would depend upon the amount of work there was for the men to do in the workshops. If, with the full staff of employees, there would be only work enough for ten hours a week, it would not be unreasonable to reduce the working hours to that number, but the wages would be utterly insufficient for a respectable artisan to live upon. On behalf of the Government reliance is placed upon the Regulation (Chapt. B. section 1), which provides that, "All officers and employees will be required to attend at their offices, or other places of business, for such period or periods as may from time to time be ordered by competent authority." This cannot, however, mean that the period or periods may be altered in such a manner as to entail a reduction of the salary or emoluments enjoyed by any officer or employee. It could not, for instance, be held, in the case of an ordinary Civil Servant, that the competent authority may require him to attend at his office for ten months only out of twelve, and forego his salary during the remaining two months. He would justly maintain that his salary cannot be reduced without proof of misconduct, and that if there are too many officers in his department for the work required to be done, the Government should bring into operation either section 34 or section 35 of the Act. In the case of artisans paid by the hour for 48 hours in each week, the policy of placing them on the fixed establishment may well be open to question, but, when once they are so placed, the principle that their emoluments cannot be reduced without proof of misconduct must be equally maintained. The fixity of tenure referred to in the Regulations would be reduced to a nullity if the Government, while ostensibly retaining such artisans on the fixed establishment, may at will reduce the number of working hours upon which their subsistence depends. For better or for worse the policy of placing artisans of ten years' efficient railway service on the fixed establishment has been adopted, and until Parliament sees fit to alter the law the Court must give effect to that policy. In the present case, it would appear that, while the plaintiff's emoluments have been practically reduced by 7s. a week, there is no corresponding reduction of the amount paid by him for Pension Fund purposes. This course was adopted, according to the Chief Locomotive Superintendent's evidence, in favour of the men and at their request, the impression being that when the men's pensions came to be calculated, the basis would be as though they had actually worked 48 hours a week. Unfortunately, however, for the plaintiff, his superannuation allowance will have to be calculated not upon the basis of his payments into the fund, but upon the average amount of salary and emoluments received by him during the three years next preceding the commencement of such allowance. The 40th section of the Act is clear and precise upon this point. The plaintiff will be entitled to his allowance 2½ years hence. If there should be further reductions of the working hours per week or even if the existing reduction only should continue, it will be found on his reaching the age of 60 years that his pension is to be less than it would have been if the 48 hours per week had been maintained, notwithstanding that during the interval deductions may be made from his emoluments upon the basis of the 48 hours' pay per week. That such a result would follow is not conclusive upon the rights of the plaintiff in the present case, but it strengthens the view which I have already expressed as to the effect and meaning of the Regulations (chap. B, section 1) relied upon by the Government. That regulation was not, in my opinion, intended to enable the Government to deprive Civil Servants of any of the safeguards conferred on them by the Act. If, at any period of time they enjoy a fixed salary or other emolument, even though it be an increase in the salary or other emoluments with which they began their service, they are not bound to acquiesce in a reduction of such salary or emolument except on one of the grounds specifically stated in the Act. The emoluments enjoyed by the plaintiff when his hours were reduced were, in my opinion, as much fixed emoluments as the salary of an ordinary Civil Servant, and as the necessary effect of the reduction of his hours of work was a reduction of those emoluments, I am of opinion that the plaintiff must succeed in this action. A declaration will therefore be made in terms of prayer (a), with costs.

LYONS V. MANSON. { 1907.
Nov. 26th.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £21, rent of certain premises at Milnerton, with interest a tempore morae and costs.
Order granted.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V
WILD.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 329d, for £16 3s., for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.
Order granted.

SWART V. SWART.

This was an application for an order declaring the respondent of unsound mind, and appointing a curator of her person and property.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C. (with him Dr. Greer), was for applicant, and Mr. Burton, K.C., appeared on behalf of certain daughters, heirs of the respondent.

Mr. Benjamin said that when the matter previously came before the Court (17 C.T.R., 892), the Resident Magistrate of Gordonia was appointed curator ad litem, and leave was given to prove the insanity by affidavit, and the curator was authorised to report in writing. Counsel added that he could not now ask that respondent be declared of unsound mind, but he would ask the Court to declare her incapable of managing her own affairs, and appoint the curator suggested by the Resident Magistrate, viz., Mr. Carl Franks, of Keimoes. Affidavits were read, from which it appeared that respondent was about 82 years of age and was in a very feeble condition. The present application had been rendered necessary by reason of a favourable offer for the farm having been received from a prospecting syndicate.

Mr. Burton said that he did not oppose the application, but there were certain important facts which had been brought to notice by his clients, and he urged that their costs should come out of the respondent's estate.

Mr. Benjamin said that he did not object to the costs of his learned friend's clients coming out of the estate.

Order granted declaring respondent incapable of managing her own affairs, and appointing Mr. Carl Franks as curator of her property, costs (including costs of parties represented by Mr. Burton) to come out of respondent's estate.

Ex parte ESTATE SWART.

Dr. Greer moved for the removal of the above-named Miena Swart from her office as executrix of the estate of her late husband, and for authority to the Master to take the necessary steps for the election of an executor in her stead.

Order granted removing the said Miena Swart from office, and authorising the Master of the High Court of Griqualand to take steps for the election of a fresh executor.

DISTRIBUTING SYNDICATE FOR COLD STORAGE V. IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE, LTD. IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE, LTD. V DISTRIBUTING SYNDICATE.	} 1907. Nov. 26th. " 27th. Dec. 9th.
--	---

Sale and purchase—Cost—Invoice price—Construction of contract.

The defendants, being purveyors of meat, undertook to purchase all their meat from the plaintiffs and to pay for the same "a price equivalent to 12½ per centum in excess of the invoice price (which includes cost, insurance and freight)". For the purpose of obtaining their supplies of meat in Australia and the Argentine, the plaintiffs employed agents in London, to whom they paid a buying commission of 2 per cent., and the plaintiffs also paid exchange on remittances.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to debit the defendants with such commission and exchange in respect of supplies furnished under the contract.

Under another contract the defendants undertook to purchase all their supplies of meat from the defendants' cold storage works in Cape Town, and pay for the same "such sum as the said supplies should cost, laid down in the stores at Cape Town, plus ¼ of a penny per pound and 10 per cent." The plaintiffs did not, under this contract, charge the defendants with any buying commission, but as they had now found it necessary to have their own offices and officers in London as well as in Cape Town for the purpose of arranging freight and insurance, they charged the defendants with a proportionate share of the expenses.

Held, that such expenses formed part of the cost of supplies laid down in the stores in Cape Town.

Held further, that the 10 per cent. must be charged, not only on the cost of the supplies laid down in the stores, but also on the $\frac{1}{4}$ of a penny per pound which was charged to meet wastage and expenses of storage.

The Imperial Company brought an action against Charles Sonnenberg and David Smith, trading as the Distributing Syndicate. Plaintiffs, under cession of the rights to the De Beers Consolidated Mines, Limited, under an agreement between De Beers and the defendants, alleged that the defendants owed them £3,625 8s. 7d. for supplies of meat and poultry for the year ended 31st March, 1905. Plaintiffs also alleged that defendants were indebted to them in the sum of £7,428 17s. 7d. for supplies during February, 1906, in terms of a contract dated 15th November, 1902, between the South African and Australasian Cold Storage and Supply Company, Limited, and defendant syndicate. It was alleged that a further sum of £8,917 17s. 3d. was due from the syndicate to plaintiffs for supplies during March, 1906. Plaintiffs claimed the aforementioned sums, with interest.

Defendants, in their plea, said that the transactions between the De Beers Company, the Australasian Company, and the plaintiff, on the one part, and the defendant syndicate had been extensive and substantial, and the accounts were long and involved. They said that the accounts rendered by the plaintiffs were incomplete, incorrect, and misleading, not framed on correct lines, and unduly unfavourable to defendants, and proceeded to set forth, under twelve sub-clauses, the grounds for this allegation. They prayed that the claim be dismissed, and in reconvention claimed a full and true account of the transactions, rebate of such account, and payment of what may be found due to the syndicate.

To this plaintiffs filed a replication and plea to the claim in reconvention, in which the alleged inaccuracies were denied.

Defendants filed a rejoinder and replication in reconvention.

This was followed by plaintiffs' sur-rejoinder.

The matter was referred to Mr. A. T. Hennessy, as special referee, with certain powers. He held—First: That the plaintiffs were entitled to include a certain proportion of their London and Cape Town expenses in cost.

Second: That the intention of the agreement was that the 10 per cent. should be calculated on the cost laid down, plus one-eighth of a penny per lb.

On the 19th June last (17 C.T.R., 548), counsel were heard in argument before Mr. Justice Maasdorp on a special case, stated by the referee, at the request of the defendant syndicate, arising out of the construction of the sixth clause of the agreement between the South African and Australasian Syndicate and the defendants, viz.: "The said syndicate shall be bound and obliged to purchase and obtain all their supplies of frozen or chilled meat or articles of chilled or frozen food from the company's cold storage works and from no other person or company, and shall pay therefor such sum as the said supplies shall cost laid down in the company's stores at Cape Town or Woodstock, plus one-eighth of a penny per lb. and 10 per cent., and the said syndicate shall be credited with any trade discounts on cost price and freight, in respect of all goods purchased by the said company, and supplied to the said syndicate." The referee reported that he ruled that the intention of the agreement was that the 10 per cent. should be calculated on the "cost laid down," plus one-eighth of a penny per lb. As to the question of what was the cost laid down, the syndicate objected to any part of the London office or Cape Town administrative expenses being calculated in the "cost laid down." He considered that it was impossible to draw a line in the manner in which defendants proposed. The whole machinery in existence to handle these supplies, whether indoor or outdoor, must be included. Whether the whole of the men's time so employed was spent on the supplies coming under the contract or only a portion of it was purely a question of the proportion of their wages or salaries to be charged to the "cost laid down."

The defendants were dissatisfied with that view.

Maasdorp, J., however, upheld the view taken by the referee, and from his lordship's decision the defendants now appealed.

The referee had presented his report on the various questions in dispute between the parties. He found that the defendants were indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of £14,761 15s. 5d., and added that he thought substantial justice would be done between the parties by the Court ordering the defendants to pay their own costs, his fees, and two-thirds of the plaintiffs' costs. He assessed the plaintiffs' costs at £210.

The plaintiffs now applied for judgment in terms of the referee's report. The defendants disputed the correctness of the findings.

Two special cases were also raised on which the full Court were asked to decide as a Court of first instance. In the first case the question was raised as to whether the defendants were liable to pay 2 per cent. commission on the purchase of meat in Argentina. Defendants denied liability because: (1) Any commission paid by the plaintiffs to the original buyers was a charge which came out of the contract price; and (2) buying commission was only payable on the plaintiffs' contract with Messrs. Hughes and Houlder for military supplies, and no other. In the second case the question of exchange was raised. Defendants admitted that they had to pay exchange between the Cape and Argentina or London and Argentina, but they denied that they were liable for any exchange between Cape Town and London, on the ground that that came within the terms of the agreement.

Mr. McGregor, K.C. (with him Mr. Wallach) for appellants. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton, K.C.) for respondents.

Mr. McGregor submitted that the 2 per cent. was foreign to the contemplation of the parties to the contract. It was foreign to the meaning of the contract. It meant that they had to pay 2 per cent. in addition to the 10 per cent. paid on the contract price. As it happened, the company was a large company having large contracts with the military and also with Hughes and Houlder Brothers for purchasing, and how could the 2 per cent. commission come in on the invoice price? That was the kind of element in the case. They had not paid on a fixed tariff as the price of meat fluctuated so much, but they were to pay 10 per cent. on the invoice rendered.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Rendered by whom?]

Mr. McGregor: By the purchasers to the Imperial Company.

[Buchanan, J.: These invoices do not contain the insurance charges?]

Mr. McGregor said it was not clear what the insurance rates were at the other side, but according to the contract they had to be paid. Counsel quoted Ireland v. Livingstone (Law Reports, 6 H.L. 396) and Benjamin on Sales, 3rd ed., p. 575. He also dealt with the question of defendants' liability for exchange.

Mr. Schreiner contended that it was reasonable that the plaintiff company should have an agent in England or elsewhere to buy for them. Mr. McGregor had contended that the invoice sent in by Houlder Bros. was all they had to rely upon, but on the face of things that was not so, as no commission was therein charged. Nothing was shown that Houlder Bros.' invoice was the invoice to be relied upon.

Mr. McGregor said that the appellants objected to general management charges and salaries. They also objected to expenses of working, the company being charged to "cost laid down." They maintained that the one-eighth of a penny and the 10 per cent. covered all expenses after the supplies had been laid down. They also maintained that the general staff existed for the numerous purposes of the company, and that the agreement did not contemplate the allocation of either the salaries of any particular officials or a proportion of all salaries to the "cost laid down."

Mr. Schreiner in reply.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 9th).

De Villiers, C.J.: After an appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Maasdorp had been noted it was agreed by the parties and consented to by the Court that the full Court hearing the appeal should also decide the further questions arising out of a case stated by the referee. These questions were whether the plaintiff company is entitled to debit the defendant syndicate with a 2 per cent. buying commission in respect of supplies furnished to the defendants under the first contract, and whether, in calculating the cost to them of the supplies, the plaintiffs were entitled to include the exchange paid by them on remittances to London and to the ports of shipment. The decision of these questions must depend upon the construction of the fifth section of the contract, which, so far as relevant, reads as follows: "The said syndicate shall be bound and obliged to purchase and obtain all their supplies of meat and poultry from the said company's cold storage works, and from no other person or company, and shall pay therefor a price equivalent to 12½ per centum in excess of the invoice price (which includes cost, insurance, and freight)." It appears from the preamble to the contract itself that the company had for some time past been importing frozen or chilled meat and poultry from Australia, and, after storing the same in the company's storage works, had sold it by retail from sundry premises in the Cape Division, and that the object of the contract was to enable the syndicate to take over the business of retailing the meat and poultry from such premises. The contract accordingly provided that the company should hand over all such premises to the syndicate, and that the syndicate should sell the meat and poultry at the prices previously charged by the company. The company reserved to itself the right to sell meat and poultry by wholesale to butchers and others. For the purpose of purchasing the meat required by the company it employed agents in London, who effected the purchases in Australia or the Argentine, as the case might be, and who, of course, charged the company with a commission for so doing. The commission was 2 per cent. on the purchase price, and the referee has held that such commission forms a portion of the cost which could be included in the price. The defendants' counsel, however, contends that the governing words of the passage fixing the price are the words "invoice price," and that any charges which would not ordinarily occur in an invoice rendered by a seller to a purchaser cannot fairly be included in the word "cost" appearing within the brackets. But the words "insurance and freight" also occur within the brackets, although insurance and freight would not ordinarily occur in an "invoice" rendered as such by a seller to a purchaser. The fact, therefore, of the words "invoice price" being used should not prevent the Court from construing the term "cost" in its ordinary sense. The cost to the company of obtaining the meat would include the commission paid to agents in the usual manner for effecting the purchase of the meat. No evidence of custom seems to have been given before the referee, but the Court may fairly take cognizance of the general commercial practice under which commercial agents, who keep touch with the markets of the world, are employed by wholesale purchasers of commodities which they cannot conveniently obtain direct from the producers. The objection in the present case is not that the commission is too high, but that the syndicate should not have been charged with any commission at all. In my opinion, the commission paid by the company formed part of the cost upon the basis of which the price under the contract had to be ascertained.

As to the exchange paid by the company, it seems that the defendant does not object to the exchange on remittances from London to the Argentine, but that he does object to exchange between the Cape and London. The Court has not been referred to any evidence as to whether the exchange between the Cape and the Argentine direct would have been less than the sum of the exchanges between the Cape and London and between London and the Argentine, although the plaintiff company's counsel stated that it would really be more. Whether this be so or not, I am not prepared to dissent from the view of the referee that the exchange between the Cape and London should be allowed as part of the cost. The exchange was actually paid by the company, and the evidence does not satisfy me that the payment was unreasonable as part of the cost of obtaining the meat.

The decision of the questions raised on appeal depends on the construction of the 6th clause of the second contract. This contract, after reciting that the company was carrying on the business of importing frozen or chilled meat and other articles of food, provided that the company should supply the syndicate with such articles of good marketable quality, and that the syndicate should not buy from any other person or company any articles of frozen or chilled food. The 6th clause provides that "the said syndicate shall be bound and obliged to purchase and obtain all their supplies of frozen or chilled meat or articles of chilled or frozen food from the company's cold storage works, and from no other person or company, and shall pay therefor such sum as the said supplies shall cost, laid down in the company's stores at Cape Town or Woodstock, plus one-eighth of a penny per pound and 10 per cent., and the said syndicate shall be credited with any trade discounts on cost price and freight in respect of all goods purchased by the said company and supplied to the said syndicate." Under this clause, the company has not charged the syndicate with any agents' commission for the purchase of meat, but, on the other hand, the company has charged, as part of the cost, a proportionate share of the expenses of management in Cape Town and of the expenses of the London office, which had been maintained, inter alia, for the purpose of purchasing supplies and arranging freight and insurance on behalf of the Cape Town office. The referee has allowed the charge, and the learned judge has confirmed his ruling. It appears to me that if these expenses were necessary to enable the company to effect the necessary purchases on a large scale, they may fairly be held to be included in the cost to the company of the supplies laid down in the company's stores. It would have been wholly unreasonable to incur the heavy expenses of a London office if the work had to be done there by agents, to whom a commission was paid, but as such agents were not employed, or, at all events, are not charged for, I am not prepared to dissent from the view of the Court below that the expenses of the London and Cape Town offices and officers should be allowed as part of the cost.

The other question on appeal is whether the ten per cent. should be calculated on the cost of the supplies alone, or on such cost, plus one-eighth of a penny per pound. The referee has correctly observed that if it had been the intention of the parties to the contract to calculate the ten per cent. on the cost of the supplies laid down only, it would have been a simple matter to avoid misunderstanding by inserting the words "and ten per cent." before instead of after the words "one-eighth of a penny per pound." That eighth was admittedly charged to meet wastage and expenses of storage, and although it could not be included in the cost of the supplies laid down in the company's stores, it seems perfectly intelligible that the parties should have agreed that the ten per cent. shall be charged upon such eighth, as well as upon the cost of the supplies up to the time of their being laid down.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed, and that the direction of this Court must be given in terms of the referee's ruling in reference to the two other questions raised in this case.

Buchanan, J.: I concur in supporting the decision of the special referee and in dismissing the appeal.

Hopley, J.: I am of the same opinion. De Villiers, C.J., said that, of course, the appeal would be dismissed, with costs, but the question remained of the other costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the Imperial Co.), said that he would like to address the Court on the whole case. There had been the most protracted litigation in this matter, and here they were at the end of 1907 with a debt of nearly £15,000 owing since early in 1906 still unpaid. His learned friend had had an opportunity of putting his whole case before the Court, but the Imperial Company's case had not as yet been placed before the Court.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if the other side were ready, the Court would hear counsel on the whole case.

Mr. McGregor, K.C. (for the Distributing Syndicate), said that they were prepared to have the matter disposed of now.

Mr. Schreiner said that he would, therefore, move for judgment in terms of the referee's report. Counsel proceeded to argue that the plaintiffs were entitled to interest a tempore morae from the date of summons, the 18th July, 1906. The referee had gone into the question of interest as agreed between the parties, and had found that £881 14s. 2d. was due to the plaintiffs up to the date of summons. The plaintiffs originally claimed a total sum of £19,972 3s. 5d., and the referee reported that £14,761 was due and owing to them. In the latter figure the amount of £881 14s. 2d. was not included. Plaintiffs now asked for judgment for interest on £14,761 from the date of summons, and £881 14s. 2d. interest on that sum up to the date of summons.

Counsel proceeded to urge that the Court should take a strong view of the costs the referee had not dealt with, viz., costs of the cause. The plaintiffs had very substantially succeeded in their action. Of the difference between the claim and the amount allowed, £3,000 was entirely attributable to the finding that the plaintiffs were not entitled to charge weight of wrappers. On the whole, a greater vindication of the accounts rendered by a big company than the referee's report gave to plaintiffs' accounts it would be difficult to find.

De Villiers, C.J.: Would it not be fair that the parties should each bear half the costs of the reference, seeing that it was for the benefit of both parties?

Mr. Schreiner said that the reference saved a lengthy and intricate trial. The work had been entailed largely by the questions raised by the defendants. He submitted that the Court should direct, as suggested by the referee, that the defendants should pay their own costs of the reference and two-thirds of the plaintiffs' costs, which the referee had fixed at £210. All the costs of the cause should have been paid by defendants.

Mr. McGregor submitted that the defendants were not now prevented from raising the question of interest. Interest was always an integral part of the judgment. Interest was not included in the special cases which had been stated. Defendants, in their plea, claimed that the accounts were wrong. The referee's report supported them in that. There never was at any time any specific sum due which could be rightly claimed by the plaintiffs. The defendants could not, on all the claims, set out on page 9 of the record, have correctly paid interest, because not one of these claims was a correct one. Counsel was addressing the Court on the question of costs, when De Villiers, C.J., intimated that the feeling of the Court was that each party should pay half the costs of the reference, including the referee's fee. As to the costs of the cause, he did not see how the defendants could avoid those costs. The costs of the motions would, of course, be included.

Mr. Schreiner having been heard in reply on the point as to costs of the reference.

De Villiers, C.J.: The result is that there must be judgment for the plaintiffs for £14,761 15s. 5d., with interest thereon from the date of the summons. A further question has been raised as to whether the defendant syndicate should also pay the sum of £881 14s. 2d., interest computed by the referee as being payable. Now, I do not understand that the defendant syndicate was not entitled to raise any objection to the referee's report, except as to those matters that were specially referred back to the Court. For instance, he makes certain suggestions in regard to costs. It is quite competent for the defendant syndicate to come forward and object to the decision of the referee in regard to costs, and in the same way I think that the defendants were not foreclosed from raising an objection to bear any interest upon the amount awarded. The general principle in these cases is that interest runs from the date of the summons; a tempore morae, and there seems to be no special reason in the present case why the Court should depart from the general practice. Mr. Schreiner has called the attention of the Court to a passage in a letter, which, taken from its context, does not assist the Court very materially. It would appear from that letter that Mr. Sonnenberg on one occasion, on behalf of the syndicate, did admit that he was prepared to pay 6 per cent. interest and "vice versa we should expect a refund from you." That is under the first agreement, "K." There is nothing to show that the defendants were at all times willing and ready to pay interest in respect of the whole amount due. Then Mr. Schreiner has referred the Court to the third clause of the contract (Annexure "N"), where it is provided that "the said syndicate shall, on or before the 15th of each month, pay for any frozen or chilled meat and other articles of frozen or chilled food obtained from the said company during the preceding month." No doubt there is an obligation on the syndicate to pay, on or before the 15th of each month, for meat supplied by the company during the preceding month, but it might fairly be contended that there has been a waiver of that clause. In any case it does not seem to be such a clear case of custom or otherwise as to entitle the plaintiff company to interest, and, therefore, notwithstanding the suggestion of the referee, the Court is not inclined to award interest. In regard to costs, it is quite clear that the bulk of the costs must be borne by the syndicate, and that the defendant syndicate should pay the costs of the cause. The Court will give judgment for £14,761 15s. 5d., with interest from the date of the summons, and with costs, except that each party should pay his own costs of the reference. Then, as to the fees of the referee, the Court thinks that the plaintiff company was responsible for the action, and that it was mainly on their account that the referee was appointed, and that the plaintiff company should be liable in the first instance to pay the fees of the referee, which the Court assesses at £993 11s., but the defendant syndicate to refund to the plaintiff company one-half of the referee's fees and expenses which he has paid.

Buchanan, J.: In concurring generally in this judgment, I may say that, although as a matter of principle I think it is proper that the costs should follow the result, there are special circumstances, seeing that some of the items have been decided on the one side and some have been decided on the other, which make it only fair to say that each party should bear his own costs of the reference.

Hopley, J.: I concur.

De Villiers, C.J. (in answer to Mr. Schreiner) said that the costs of this motion and of the appeal must be paid by the defendant syndicate.

SUPREME COURT

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ESTATE STOLTENHOFF V. { 1907.
HOWARD. { Nov. 27th.
Dec. 5th.

Promissory note — Partnership debts—Insolvency of partner.

Two partners jointly gave a promissory note for certain partnership debts. Thereafter one of the partners became insolvent, and the solvent partner was sued on the note.

Held, that the creditor was entitled to provisional sentence, and that it was not necessary to join the insolvent partner as a co-defendant.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note, payable at the Bank of Africa, Cape Town, for £486 5s. 10d., with interest from the 30th September, 1907, and signed by Howard and Scott.

Mr. Bisset read an affidavit by defendant, who said that the amount was due by the firm of Howard and Scott, under which style deponent had carried on business in partnership with John Gibson Scott, whose private estate had been surrendered as insolvent. The note was a renewal of a promissory note given by the said firm during the erection of the City Hall buildings for materials supplied. The firm went into liquidation on the 15th November, 1904. Mr. Thomas Masterton was appointed liquidator, the liquidation had not yet been completed, and the partnership had not been dissolved. There were assets of the said firm of both movable and immovable property. Deponent submitted that the firm of Howard and Scott must first be excused before either of the partners could be sued upon the note. Counsel also read an affidavit by the liquidator of Howard and Scott, Mr. Thomas Masterton.

Mr. Watermeyer submitted that plaintiff was entitled to provisional sentence in this case. He quoted Maasdorp's Institutes (vol. 3, p. 354), Simpson v. Fleck (3 Menzies, 217), Blackburn v. McIntjes (1 Roscoe, 56), and Copestake v. Alexander (2 S.C., 146). Plaintiff could not sue the firm in this case, because the insolvency of one of the partners had dissolved the firm. Scott was insolvent, and the only person that could be sued was the remaining partner, Howard. Counsel quoted Maasdorp's Institutes (p. 337), Voot (17, 2, 226), Grotius (3, 21, 8), Van der Linden (p. 579; Juta's Trans., p. 404), Institutes of Justinian (3, 26, 8), Lindley on Partnership (Library Ed., p.p. 557 and 269), and Story on Partnership (Library Ed., p. 572).

Mr. Bisset said he admitted that in the ultimate result the individual partners were liable for the debts of the firm, but there were various intermediate stages which must first be gone through. This was a debt of the firm, the firm was still an entity, it had assets, and, so long as the firm remained in existence, the ultimate liability of the partners would not come into operation. He referred to the Insolvent Ordinance (section 9), and cited Luck v. Chabaud (1 Menzies, 531), King v. Porter, Hodgson and Co. (1879 Buchanan, 117), and Haarhoff v. Cape of Good Hope Bank (4 H.C., 304). In Simpson v. Flecke there was an insolvency of the partnership.

Mr. Watermeyer submitted that Luck v. Chabaud was clearly in conflict with all the cases, which said that a partner was liable in solidum for all the partnership debts. He quoted Lindley on Partnership, pp. 730 and 733. King v. Porter, Hodgson and Co. could be distinguished from the present case.

Mr. Bisset mentioned the recent case of Bell v. Estate Douglass (17 C.T.R. 810).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 5th).

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff sues "Thomas Howard, of Cape Town, hereinafter styled defendant, heretofore carrying on business as Howard and Scott, in co-partnership with John Gibson Scott, who is now insolvent," upon a promissory note made by Howard and Scott in favour of F. Stollenhoff. The defendant excepts to the summons on the ground that the debt is that of the partnership of Howard and Scott, and that the firm of Howard and Scott should first be excused before the individual partners are sued. It was clear from the authorities cited by counsel for the plaintiff that the insolvency of one of the partners of a firm has the effect of dissolving the partnership, and it is also clear that the partners are all of them liable singuli in solidum for the partnership debts, but it does not necessarily follow from that that they are liable to be sued separately and individually for the debts of the partnership. The question remains whether partners whose partnership has been dissolved by operation of law through the insolvency of one of the partners possess any privileges as defendants in a suit which are not possessed by joint and several co-principal debtors generally. It appears that in England the rule prevailed at one time of including the bankrupt partner as a defendant in actions at law by third persons against the partnership (Story on Partnership, 338), but under the present law, if some of the partners are bankrupt, the solvent partners only need be sued (Lindley on Partnership, 289; and 46 and 47, Victoria, ch. 52, section 114). Here we find that in the English law, the principles of which are the same as ours, as to the effect of bankruptcy of a partner upon the partnership, and the liabilities of joint and several debtors, it is still necessary to proceed against the solvent partners of a partnership jointly after the insolvency of one or more partners. We have no special rule in our law upon this point, nor is there any direct decision upon the question. It seems to follow that if the insolvency of one partner dissolves the partnership, that the partners after that cease to be partners, and become in their relation to the creditors debtors liable singuli in solidum in respect of the partnership debts. But even such debtors might be entitled to claim that they should be sued as joint defendants, as stated by Voot (4, 2, 4), where he draws a distinction between the Roman law and the law of Holland, upon the authority of Grotius amongst others. We find in Grotius, 3, 3, 8, and the following paragraphs, the law laid down as follows: "When there are several principals (correi debendi) to one promise, all must according to the latest Roman law be sued together. This necessity, however, of suing all together, as also the division of a debt, does not take place: if one of the principal debtors is notoriously unable to pay, or if the debtors have voluntarily renounced the privilege of being sued together, and of having their debt divided." It has been held that where a person in signing a contract describes himself as co-principal debtor, he thereby renounces the benefit of division and renders himself liable in solidum. (Trustees of Du Toit, as Executors of Smuts, 2, Men. 27.) Here, however, there cannot be said to be an express renunciation by, or special description of, the liability of the partner, they having merely by operation of law ceased to be partners, and become joint principal debtors. Such renunciation might be implied in their contract of partnership, or from their being as partners joint debtors upon the promissory note, but it is unnecessary to decide that point now or to go into the question whether in case there are more than one solvent partner they should be joined as defendants. That question came up in the case of Simpson and Co. v. Fleck (3 Men. 217). Here there are only two partners, and they are now two co-principal debtors, one of whom is insolvent, and upon the authority of Voet and Grotius, the plaintiff need not join the insolvent as defendant in an action against the solvent partner for the recovery of the joint and several debts due by the defendant and the insolvent, that is, of the debt due by the partnership. Provisional sentence is given for the plaintiff, with costs.

ESTATE McDONALD V. OSWALD AND NICHOLL.

Insolvency—Undue preference—Evidence.

Mr. Sutton moved, on the petition of Andrew Cunningham, in his capacity as executor testamentary of Robert McDonald, for the final adjudication of the partnership estate of defendants.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan appeared for defendants.

The petitioner alleged that defendants were indebted to the estate in the sum of £1,600 upon mortgage of certain property in Woodstock. The bond had become due and payable by reason of non-payment of interest, and demand had been made for the capital, but defendants said that they could not pay the money, and negotiations ensued with a view of avoiding a forced sale. Defendants made certain proposals, which were accepted, but they fell in arrear with their instalments, and in a letter they intimated that they were unable to keep to their promise owing to the bad times. Petitioner had been informed, and verily believed, that the defendants had parted with certain of their assets to one of their creditors in such manner as to constitute an undue preference, thus committing an act of insolvency. Petitioner believed that it would be for the benefit of the creditors that the defendants' estate should be sequestrated.

The defendant Nicholl denied that at the time he handed over the property that the estate was insolvent. He denied that they were insolvent at present, but that after paying liabilities on present valuations they would have a sum of £364 10s. to the good. He denied that the firm was indebted to plaintiff in £1,600, but admitted liability for £1,510. The property was valued by Messrs. Stamper and Zoutendyk at £2,835 on behalf of respondent, and the stock and plant at £600.

Mr. Sutton read an affidavit by a partner in the firm of Messrs. J. J. Hofmeyr and Son, who valued the property at £1,950, and the stock and plant at £450.

In the course of argument, Mr. Buchanan contended that the onus lay with the plaintiff to show that the respondents were insolvent, and from the affidavits that had not been done. He submitted that the valuations by Messrs. Hofmeyr were what could be called mortgagees' valuations, which meant valuations mortgagees would like to have fixed when advancing money. Although the stock was only valued at £380 by the plaintiff's valuers, it was held as security for a debt of £450.

Mr. Sutton contended that the giving of an undue preference was under section 4 of the Insolvent Ordinance an act of insolvency. The respondents had not endeavoured to prove that they had not given undue preference. Counsel quoted in support of his contention Trustees Estate Daniels v. Van der Byl and Co. (1 Roscoe), Van der Westhuizen v. Steyn (12 Juta, page 313). Counsel drew the attention of the Court to the fact that Messrs. Stamper and Zoutendyk's valuation was not under oath, and therefore not admissible.

Maasdorp, J.: "In this case the applicant obtained a provisional order upon the ground that the respondents had committed an act of insolvency in having parted with certain of their assets to one of their creditors in such a manner 'as to cause an undue preference.' On this ground the provisional order was made, and it now falls on the applicant to establish the allegations set forth in the petition. It would not be sufficient to prove that the respondents were actually insolvent. Such a statement is not made in the petition, but it may be said that it is involved in the allegation that an undue preference had been made by the respondents in favour of some of their creditors. The applicant has taken on himself the difficult task of proving that the respondents contemplated the sequestration of their estate, and parted with their goods—with the intention of preferring one of his creditors. A number of letters have been put in which passed between the applicant and the respondents in respect of an indebtedness by the respondents to the applicant, and they would be useful to show what the parties contemplated at the time, and what was the intention of the respondents. It would seem that the respondents were unable to meet their debt upon a bond held by the applicants, and the applicants were pressing them. They made several efforts to come to some arrangement, but the applicants had some difficulty in meeting their proposals, and it ultimately resulted in the applicants saying they would be unable to wait any longer, that they would have to press their claim, and, thereupon, the respondents intimated that they would have to let the matter take its course. What they were contemplating was a suit on the bond by the applicant, and that suit was in respect of a debt for which security had been given. The debt was for £1,600 and the property is valued by an appraiser at £1,600, so it may have been in contemplation of the respondents that when the action was brought the property would be declared executable, and it might meet the judgment debt, almost entirely. However, it was discovered that shortly after this correspondence closed the respondents had parted with certain property as security to another creditor. That was objected to on behalf of the applicant, and some other creditors. It was pointed out to the respondents that they were actually giving a creditor undue preference, and that being pointed out to them, they promised to make every effort to recover the property to save insolvency. That proves that at the time they parted with the property they had no insolvency in contemplation, because they arrived at the conclusion that on recovering the property they would be restored to the position they occupied before the parting, and there would be no likelihood of insolvency. But there is another circumstance. It appears that before the application was made by the applicants, the respondents had already commenced inquiries as to their actual position, and for that purpose had obtained the appraisal of their property by a firm of appraisers, from which it appeared that the estate was solvent. Under all these circumstances, I think the Court cannot come to the conclusion that there was a contemplation of insolvency and intention to prefer. In reference to the other question that has been raised as to whether this estate would ultimately prove to be insolvent, it is quite possible, but it is not a question which the Court has now to decide, because it is not on that ground that the application is made, and the application will be refused, with costs.

REHABILITATIONS. { 1907.
Nov. 27th.

Mr. Roux applied, under the Act 38, 1884, for the discharge from insolvency of Jacobus Izak van Aarde.

Granted.

Mr. Watermeyer applied, under section 117 of the Ordinance, for the discharge from insolvency of Frank Nicburg.

Granted.

Mr. Marais applied, under the 117th section of the Ordinance, for the discharge from insolvency of Charles Frederick Austin.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE DUTHIE.

Mr. Sutton moved, on the petition of the surviving executors of the late Archibald Hamilton Duthie, for an order authorising the amendment of a certain deed of transfer of the farm Belvedere, division of Knysna. The Registrar of Deeds recommended that a rule nisi should be issued.

Rule nisi granted in terms of prayer (1), returnable on the 4th February, publication once in the "George and Knysna Herald."

Ex parte ESTATE LE ROUX.

Mr. Marais moved, on the petition of the tutor testamentary of the minors Le Roux, for leave to join in the partition of certain landed properties, and to pass necessary mortgage bonds to enable the minors to take transfer of their defined shares.

Order granted as prayed, subject to Master's report.

Ex parte ESTATE PRETORIUS.

Mr. Sutton moved on the petition of Mrs. Botha, widow of the late Sarel Jacobus Pretorius, as mother and natural guardian of the minors Pretorius, for leave to raise a sum of £222 on mortgage of certain farm property in the division of Barkly East.

Order granted subject to Master's report.

Ex parte BEAHNISCHE.

Mr. Bisset moved on behalf of petitioner for an order authorising him to sue the executrix of the late Jacobus P. W. Odendal, and to attach a certain farm, Grootvlei, in the division of Albert, ad fundandum jurisdictionem, pending an action to be brought by petitioner to compel respondent to supply water to certain land according to conditions of sale and for damages.

Leave to sue by edict granted, and property attached ad fundandum jurisdictionem, personal service, citation returnable on the 1st February.

Ex parte ABELS.

Mr. Marais moved for a certain rule to be made absolute authorising petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis for divorce.

Rule absolute, Mr. Marais to be counsel, and Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne to be attorneys to the applicant.

VAN TONDER V. VAN DEN BERG.

Mr. Roux moved for a certain award of arbitrators to be made a Rule of Court, costs to be paid by the parties in equal shares.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE OOSTHUIZEN.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl moved on the petition of the executor for an order authorising transfer of certain property.

Order granted in terms of Master's report, purchase price obtained from the properties to be invested to the satisfaction of the Master.

Ex parte ESTATE HEDDING.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for an order relieving T. E. Hedding from his appointment as co-executor. Counsel explained that it had been arranged between applicant and his brother, who were co-executors in the will of their father, that applicant should retire from that position, and the present motion was brought for the confirmation of the Court.

The matter was ordered to stand over to enable his Lordship to look into the papers.

Ex parte CHADWICK.

Attachment of money due —
Meditatio fugae.

The Court refused to grant a rule for the attachment of money due to respondent. Applicant alleged that on receipt of such money he believed that respondent contemplated leaving the Colony, but gave no reasons for such belief.

Mr. Roux moved on behalf of applicant for an interdict restraining the Cape Government from paying to William Stott a gratuity of £37 until a demand by applicant for £36 had been satisfied. The applicant believed that the respondent on the receipt of this money would leave the Colony.

Maasdorp, J., said the applicant gave no reason to the Court for his belief that the respondent would leave the country. It would be rather hard if a bare statement like that would enable a creditor to attach property.

Mr. Roux: All I ask for is a rule nisi. There need be no costs incurred on the return day.

The Court declined to make an order.

Ex parte ESTATE DU PLESSIS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for leave to register a certain transfer. The applicant was executor in the estate in which the property was sold. It was sold by public auction at £550, the Divisional Council valuation being £550.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE VORSTER.

Mr. Marais moved for leave to pass transfer of certain property.

Order granted.

SUPREME COURT

Ex parte OTTO AND { 1907.
ANOTHER. { Nov. 28th.

Mr. Bisset moved, as a matter of urgency, on behalf of the petitioners, who are married in community to Rebecca Otto and Calrence Gertse respectively, for a temporary interdict against one Jacobus Adrian Louw de Waal, as executor dative in the estate of Jephtha Louis, who died intestate. Petitioners said that their respective wives were half-sisters of one Jephtha Louis, who died intestate about thirty years ago at Dysveldorp, district of Oudtshoorn. Jephtha Louis during his lifetime lived in concubinage with one Roos April, and there were certain illegitimate issue born to them. At his death he left two pieces of land at Dysveldorp. Petitioners' wives and one Abram Magerman, also a half-brother of the deceased, were the lawful heirs ab intestato of the said Jephtha Louis. At a meeting of next-of-kin and others held in the district of Unionsdale on or about the 28th June, 1907, the said Roos April and her illegitimate issue, who lived in that district, elected one Jacobus Adrian Louw de Waal as executor dative of the estate of Jephtha Louis, and the said De Waal had had letters of administration granted to him. Petitioners were poor illiterate coloured people, and knew nothing about the proceedings in the preceding paragraph set out, nor had they previously known that it was necessary to go through such formalities. The said De Waal now threatened to pass transfer of the land to Roos April and her illegitimate issue. The prayer of the petition was that Mr. De Waal be ordered to transfer one-third share of the property to each of the petitioners, and be interdicted forthwith from transferring the said property to Roos April and her children, or to anybody else, other than petitioners. Mr. Bisset said he recognised, of course, that he could not ask for such an order at the present stage, and that he could only apply for a temporary interdict, pending an action to be brought to establish the rights of the applicants.

Rule nisi granted, returnable on the 13th January, rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime.

are the creditors in the insolvent estate of Mahomed Khangool, shopkeeper, Cape Town, for the appointment of Wyndham Bishop as provisional trustee, with power to dispose of the perishables and collect and receive amount of certain promissory note, and, if necessary, take legal steps to recover same from the drawer.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court was prepared to grant the order asked for except as to the power to sue. The latter prayer could only be granted in case the petitioners were prepared to guarantee costs.

Dr. Greer said that he had no instructions on that point.

Order granted, with the powers sought, except power to sue.

REX V. MAGOGO.
REX V. QOPISO.

{ 1907.
Dec. 2nd.
" 9th.

Perjury — Evidence — Ordinance 72, Sec. 33—Two witnesses—Material but collateral fact.

The accused Q. was convicted of perjury in having falsely sworn in a Resident Magistrate's Court on an application to re-open a case in that Court, on the ground that the defendant M. had been absent when judgment was given against him, "I did not point to a man sitting on the floor and say that Magogo was there. Magogo was not there." Only one witness stated that Magogo was there, but more than one witness swore that the accused, pointed to a man sitting on the floor and said in effect it was Magogo.

Held, that the fact that the accused, pointed to a man sitting on the floor and said that it was the defendant, was a material, although collateral, issue, and that as such fact was deposed to by more than one witness there was sufficient to justify the conviction of the accused for perjury in denying that fact on oath.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the A.R.M. of Flagstaff, who had convicted appellants of contravening sections 106 and 107 of Act 24, 1886, and sentenced him to eleven months'

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

PROVISIONAL TRUSTEE.

Ex parte WIENER AND CO. { 1907.
Dec. 2nd.

Dr. Greer moved, as a matter of urgency, on behalf of petitioners, who imprisonment and a fine of £15, or an additional month's imprisonment.

It appeared that a civil case had been heard in the Magistrate's Court, in which provisional judgment had been obtained against one Magogo. Magogo subsequently applied to have the case reopened, under Rule 29, Schedule B of Act 20, 1856, on the ground that, by just and reasonable cause, he was prevented from attending the court. The question was then raised as to whether Magogo was actually in court when provisional judgment was given against him. In the end, both Qopiso and Magogo were prosecuted for perjury; they were both convicted, and both now appealed.

In Qopiso's case, it was alleged that on the 9th September last he went before the Resident Magistrate at Flagstaff, and falsely deposed and swore that at the hearing of the provisional case he had not pointed to a man sitting on the floor of the Court-house, and said, "There is Magogo." He did not see any one stand up and speak to the Magistrate. Magogo, he declared, was not in the court on that occasion. The perjury was alleged to have been committed in that accused (Qopiso) had at the previous hearing pointed out a man sitting on the floor, and said, "There is Magogo," etc.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Watermeyer), was for appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Schreiner said he believed that the Magistrate's mind was influenced by the previous proceedings. The only evidence to prove that perjury had been committed was that of the native constable, whose evidence was most unsatisfactory. There was absolutely no corroboration. As the Court knew, when on Circuit, the interpreter always knew the people round about, and he could not identify Magogo.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is the same point raised in the other case (Magogo's)?]

Mr. Schreiner: The record is not put in in that case, and that I will prove is fatal. Continuing, he contended that it would be nothing short of a miscarriage of justice if on such evidence as this a man were convicted of perjury. It was perfectly clear from the record that Qopiso was not called at the first hearing of the re-opening application. That re-opening application was postponed. Now, why was it postponed? In order to hear what Qopiso would say. Probably the evidence up to that stage left the Magisterial mind in doubt as to whether Magogo was present or not. As to the other case, the Magistrate gave the only evidence against the applicant, and did not produce any records. It had been held that a certified copy of the record was sufficient, but the idea of bringing a prosecution for perjury without producing the record was breaking away from the mode of procedure.

[Hopley, J.: But the record had been put in Qopiso's case.]

Mr. Schreiner: That may be, but I have nothing to do with that. In support of his contention that the records or a certified copy thereof must be produced, Mr. Schreiner quoted the cases of The King v. Schwartz (1 Appeal Court, p. 191), Willem v. The State (O.F.S. Court, Cape Law Journal, 1897, Vol. 14, p. 296), and Taylor on Evidence (Vol. 1, p. 362 of the 7th edition).

Mr. Nightingale contended that the point the Magistrate had to decide was whether or not Magogo was present in the court that day or not.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In Qopiso's case the technical point arises as to whether there were two witnesses to prove he has committed perjury.]

Mr. Nightingale contended that the fact that Qopiso had made several other wrong statements, supported the action taken by the Crown. With regard to the second case, it was admitted that the record was not put in, but the record did not speak for itself. It was necessary to call the Magistrate as well, and the record only refreshed his mind.

[Hopley, J.: But how do you get over the point raised by Mr. Schreiner?]

Mr. Nightingale said no serious objection had been taken to this matter at the original hearing. There was no doubt as to the correctness of the Magistrate's statement.

Cur. Adv. Fult.

Postea (December 9th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The case of Rex v. Magogo was tried before the Magistrate at Flagstaff. Magogo was charged with perjury. In that case it is admitted that there were two witnesses to prove the falsehood of the evidence given by the accused, but the objection is raised on behalf of the accused that, although oral evidence was given as to the statements made by him, which are alleged to amount to perjury, yet the record itself was not put in, and that, without the production of that record, there is not the best evidence before the Court. I find, however, on reference to the record, that the record was put in. On the 26th August the Magistrate gave evidence. Annexed to the record is the record of the case. As to the evidence, I confess I cannot imagine more satisfactory evidence if these two witnesses are to be believed, because they are two witnesses who positively swear that they saw Magogo in the Court when the provisional judgment was given. They positively swear that they saw him there, and the Magistrate believes these two witnesses, one of whom was an induna. Here there is clear evidence by two witnesses as to the perjury, and therefore this appeal must be dismissed.

Now, in the case of Qopiso, the charge against him was that he was guilty of perjury in that he did falsely depose and swear as follows: "I (meaning the said Qopiso) did not point out a man sitting on the floor, and say 'There is Magogo.' I (meaning the said Qopiso) did not see any one stand up and speak to the Magistrate (meaning the said John Mould Young). I (meaning the said Qopiso) did not hear the Magistrate (meaning the said John Mould Young) tell any one to go to the interpreter. Magogo was not here (meaning the Court-house at Flagstaff) on the day the case was heard (meaning the case in which provisional judgment was given)." Now, it has been argued that the ultimate fact to be proved in the present case, in order to prove perjury, was that Magogo was not in Court on that day, and that, inasmuch as there was only one witness who deposed to the fact that Magogo was not in Court on that day, the terms of the Ordinance were not complied with which require that on a trial for perjury there must be in addition to and independent of the testimony of any single witness, some other competent and credible evidence as to the guilt of the accused. But in the present case, although the ultimate fact to be proved was that Magogo was present in Court, there were collateral facts which, in my opinion, were quite material to the issue in this case, and one of those collateral facts was that Qopiso did point to a man sitting on the floor, and say "there is Magogo," or words to that effect.

There were not two witnesses who deposed that Magogo was actually in Court, but two witnesses swore that the accused stood up, and pointing to a man sitting on the floor, said in effect that it was Magogo. This was a collateral fact, but it was highly material to the ultimate issue to be tried in the original civil case, whether Magogo, the defendant in that case was present or not. The interpreter in his evidence said, "when judgment was being given the accused stood up and asked why judgment was given as Magogo was present, and pointed out with his finger to a man sitting on the floor." Blaje, another witness, said: "When judgment was being delivered, accused appeared and asked why the judgment was given as Magogo was present: accuser was asked who he was. He then ordered Magogo to stand up. Magogo then said he was present." Another witness, Pritchard, said: "A man stood up and said Magogo was before the Court and pointed to the man." The only man who, according to the rest of the evidence, pointed to another man saying it was Magogo, was the accused Qopiso. Clearly therefore upon the material but collateral fact that the accused did so point to a man and give the Court to understand that it was Magogo, there was more than one competent, and, as the Court below found, credible witness in terms of the 33rd section of Ordinance 72. The accused denied that fact, and such denial constitutes one of the charges of perjury in the present case. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

Hopley, J.: I am of the same opinion.

KRUGER V. MORGASEN.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £80, with interest from the 2nd November, 1907, and costs.

Defendant said that he had lost this amount to Mr. Harry Stodell, upon the races. It was a betting debt.

De Villiers, C.J., said that this allegation should have been embodied in an affidavit.

Defendant said that he had no means to employ an attorney. He handed in a number of cheques which he said he had paid to Mr. Stodell, who was a bookmaker, for losses on races. He had paid £359 16s. 6d,

Dr. Greer said that he had no knowledge of the allegation made by the defendant.

De Villiers, C.J., advised defendant that if he wanted to stop paying he had better stop betting.

The defendant then went into the box, and said that Mr. Stodell had sent him tips to Robertson by telegram. He gave Mr. Stodell the promissory note on account of bets. By means of the £359 paid he had won £35.

Dr. Greer said his client was legal holder of the promissory note for value.

De Villiers, C.J., asked whether Hyman Kruger was also a bookmaker?

Dr. Greer: I am instructed that, as far as my attorney knows, he is not a bookmaker.

De Villiers, C.J., said that there should be some explanation by the plaintiff as to whether he knew of the circumstances under which the promissory note had been given, and also as to the circumstances under which it had come into his (plaintiff's) hands.

The case was ordered to stand over until to-morrow.

Postea (December 4th).

Mr. Upington appeared for the defendant.

Dr. Greer (for plaintiff) said he recognised that he could not press for provisional sentence. Plaintiff was the brother-in-law of the original payee, Stodell; plaintiff gave valuable consideration for the note, and at the time he received it, he did not know it was in respect of betting transactions, though he surmised that it was. On the matter of costs, counsel asked the Court to direct each party to bear his own costs, seeing that the present plaintiff was not exactly in the same position as the original payee, and that both parties were in pari delicto.

De Villiers, C.J.: I consider that the plaintiff has gone to law without sufficient legal ground, and that he should bear the costs of the action. There may be a par delictum in regard to the original transaction, but there is no par delictum in regard to the action. Plaintiff is alone responsible for bringing the action, and, therefore, he should bear the costs. Provisional sentence will be refused. If he goes into the principal case, then costs may be recovered again. For the present, provisional sentence will be refused, with costs.

ANDREWS V. RAWBONE.

Mr. Palmer moved for provisional sentence on an acknowledgment of debt for £22 4s. 1d., and costs.

Defendant said that he was only liable for £14, having paid £20 off a debt of £34.

Ordered to stand over until later, no costs to be allowed to plaintiff's attorney for attendance.

At a later stage the case was ordered to stand over until to-morrow

Postea (December 4th).

Mr. Palmer said that the balance was made up of costs of a previous summons, which was settled on the return day.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant stated yesterday that he understood at the time that the balance of £14 odd included costs. I told him that he need not remain until to-day.

The matter was again ordered to stand over, the Court intimating that notice would be given to defendant when he must appear again.

TEUBES AND ANOTHER V. { 1907.
LOUWHENS. { Dec. 3rd.
" 4th.

Act of insolvency—Sec. 4 of Ord. 6 of 1843—Provisional order of sequestration—Writ of execution.

A provisional order of sequestration having been made upon the plaintiff's statement on oath that he had made repeated attempts without success to obtain satisfaction of a judgment against the defendant.

Held, that in the absence of any other proof of insolvency or of any statement that the defendant had been required by the officer charged with the execution of the judgment to satisfy the same, the order of sequestration should be discharged.

Mr. Sutton appeared for applicants and Mr. McGregor, K.C., appeared for respondent.

This was an application for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

Mr. McGregor said that before proceeding to read the defendant's affidavit, he would direct the attention of the Court to the summons, because he found that there was no act of insolvency set forth. The summons was one where the petitioners asked that the estate should be sequestered as they had obtained two judgments in the Supreme Court, neither of which had been satisfied, wherefore they prayed that the estate be sequestered. Provisional sequestration was granted in Chambers. There was no act of insolvency set forth. It was not stated that the man was insolvent, and the Act of 1884 did not come into operation here. Excluding the Act of 1884, there was no act of insolvency coming under the summons. There was nothing beyond the statement that judgments were obtained. The Court could not allow creditors to avail themselves of the extraordinary remedy of compulsory sequestration.

Mr. Sutton based his argument on section 17 of the Insolvency Ordinance. The petition set forth—

De Villiers, C.J.: The petition does not carry it any further. The petition does not state that there has been a return of nulla bona, nor does it state that the estate is insolvent. A man may not pay, and yet he may not be insolvent. There should be a return of nulla bona before the estate can be sequestered.

Mr. Sutton submitted that there were two distinct acts of insolvency. In support of his argument counsel quoted Webster v. Webster (3 Menzies, 220). There had been a judgment, and the respondent had been required to satisfy it, but had not done so.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 4th).

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case a provisional order of sequestration was made upon a petition by the plaintiff, in which he stated that repeated attempts had been made by him without success to obtain satisfaction of the judgment which he had obtained against the defendant. There was no statement that a writ of execution had been obtained, or that the defendant had been required by a competent officer to pay the amount of the debt, and on behalf of the defendant on the return day of the summons an objection has been raised that there is no act of insolvency committed in the present case. Counsel for the petitioner stated that another ground might have been urged that the defendant was actually insolvent, but he stated that there was a practice to the effect that two grounds of insolvency should not be stated in the same petition. I am not aware of such a practice. I have spoken to my brother Maasdorp, and he is not aware of such a practice, and even if such a practice did exist the Court can only deal with the case actually before it, and the question is whether the mere fact that a judgment debtor has not paid the amount of the judgment after being called upon by the creditor to pay is an act of insolvency. If it is, I must say it is the first case in my experience in which this law has been acted upon, but, in my opinion, it is not the law, and I have consulted Mr. Justice Maasdorp, who granted the provisional order, and he agrees with me after carefully reading the section that something more is required under the 4th section of the Insolvent Ordinance. The words are: "... or having against him the sentence of any competent Court, being thereunto required, shall not satisfy the same, or shall not point out to the officer charged with the execution thereof sufficient disposable property to satisfy the same." The plaintiff has relied upon the judgment in the case of In re Webster (3 Menzies, 220). All the Court there decided was that it is sufficient to allege that the defendant had not pointed out to the officer charged with the execution of the writ sufficient disposable property to satisfy the same, and that it is not necessary also to state that the Sheriff so required him to point out, etc., because the two clauses are separate. Well, I quite agree with that decision, but that is not conclusive. In the present case what the Court has to decide is whether the meaning of the word "required" is fully satisfied by the creditor himself asking for payment. If that were so, the number of insolvencies would be enormously increased. In many cases in which creditors had obtained judgment they would ask for payment, and if the debtor did not pay, although well able to pay, they would say here is an act of insolvency, and apply for a provisional order of sequestration. I am of opinion that "required" means required by the officer charged with the execution of the judgment. That view is by no means inconsistent with the case of Webster, and it is quite in accordance with the decision of the Transvaal Court mentioned yesterday, in which this point was decided. I fully agree with that decision, and I am of opinion, therefore, that in the present case there was no ground for the order, and that it should be discharged, with costs.

Mr. Sutton (for plaintiffs) submitted that the costs should not include costs of the affidavits filed by defendant, seeing that the case had been decided on a legal point. He quoted Hoffman v. Black (21 S.C., 23).

Mr. McGregor (for defendant) submitted that the ordinary rule should be followed as regards costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: In my opinion, this point ought to have been raised without any affidavits. The objection appeared on the face of the papers, and it was quite sufficient for the defendant to call the attention of the Court to it without any affidavit. I think, in ordering that the provisional order be discharged, with costs, the Court should direct that it should not include costs of any affidavits filed in the present case.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ESTATE MCGREGOR V. { 1907.
VON DORP. { Dec. 4th.

Mr. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for £2,000, with interest from the 2nd November, 1907, upon certain surety obligations upon conditions of sale.

Mr. Upington (for defendant) read an affidavit by G. W. Steytler (agent for defendant, stating that plaintiff had accepted from the Montagu Estates Co. a mortgage bond for £12,000, thereby novating their claim, and releasing the defendant from liability, if any, under the conditions of sale, the terms of which were in some respects varied by the said mortgage bond.

Mr. Bisset read a replying affidavit by G. M. Walker, attorney, stating that the defendant was one of the directors of the company who signed the power to pass the bond. There was no deviation from the agreement between the parties, nor had there been any novation.

Mr. Upington said that he did not think he could rely upon the defence of novation, but he submitted that there certainly had been a material variance in the present obligation, to the prejudice of the surety. This mortgage bond contained a stipulation that on non-payment of interest at the due date the whole debt was to become due and payable. There was no such provision in the original conditions of sale, and the surety contended that by the insertion of that condition in the mortgage bond he was prejudiced in his right as against the principal debtor.

Mr. Bisset submitted that this was a far-fetched defence, and one to which no substantial merit could attach. The plaintiffs were not suing upon the bond; they were suing solely upon the conditions of sale, and seeking to hold defendant liable on those conditions of sale.

De Villiers, C.J.: The objection is raised now that the bond that is passed is not quite consistent with the terms of the conditions of sale. This seems a somewhat extraordinary objection by Mr. Von Dorp, the defendant in this case, who, in his capacity as a director of the Montagu Estates Company, actually signed the power of attorney authorising a bond in the form which has been framed, viz., that on failure to pay off the interest the bond was to be called up. But the bond has not been called up. I understand now that what the plaintiff is suing for is for such amount as under the conditions of sale he could have sued for, so that there has been no possible prejudice to the defendant by the form in which the bond has been passed, so far as the present action is concerned. There must be provisional sentence, with costs.

FERREIRA V. FERREIRA.

Mr. Toms moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute admitting petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights. Counsel said that publication had been made in the "Kynena Herald" in terms of the order.

Rule absolute, Mr. Toms to his counsel, and the Messrs. Harold and Gie, attorneys to the petitioner.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Howes applied under section 14 of Act 38, 1884, for the discharge from insolvency of Johan Petrus Swart.

Application refused, with leave to apply again in three months.

Mr. Roux applied for the release from sequestration of the estate of Nicolaas Hendikus Schietekat. No creditors, he said, had proved against the estate, and all the creditors appearing on the schedules had consented to the release.

LEWIS AND CO. V. SWANICH.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl moved for a temporary interdict restraining respondent from disposing of his rights in a certain general dealer's business in the division of Malmesbury pending an action to be brought by applicants to recover a sum of £65 1s. 1d. on a promissory note. Applicants said that the respondent had gone to Buenos Ayres and that before leaving he gave them the promissory note. They did not know whether it was his intention to return to this country. The promissory note became due and payable about two months ago, and had not been met. On the 22nd November last a notice appeared in the "Cape Times" that it was intended to transfer the licence of the defendant's business under section 11 of Act 35, 1906, to one Wassenaar.

De Villiers, C.J.: The case is somewhat special, because it would look as if this man had given the promissory note merely for the purpose of getting out of the clutches of the law. The Court will, therefore, grant a rule interdicting G. W. Kotze or any other representative of the defendant from parting with any funds in his hands belonging to the defendant, and calling upon J. C. Wasseau to show cause why he should not be restrained from paying over to the defendant or his agent any sum payable by the said Wasseau to the defendant, pending further order of Court, the rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime, and to be returnable on the 12th January.

HOWARD, FARRER AND CO. { 1907.
AND OTHERS V. EAST { Dec. 4th.
LONDON MUNICIPALITY.

Perpetual interdict—Temporary interdict—Nuisance.

On an application for a temporary interdict, pending action, to restrain the respondents from depositing Town refuse within a radius of 600 yards from the business premises of the applicants, which they had hired from the respondents, some medical men stated that the filth was dangerous to the health of the applicants' employees, whilst other medical men stated that there was no danger whatever. The only means adopted by the respondents to render the refuse innocuous was by depositing street sweepings on the top.

Held, that as there was prima facie evidence of a nuisance, the applicants were entitled to a temporary interdict pending action, which was to be forthwith instituted without prejudice to any claim the respondents might have to recover damages sustained by reason of such temporary interdict.

This was an application upon notice to the respondent Municipality to show cause why a temporary interdict should not be issued debarring them and their servants from depositing rubbish and filth within a radius of 600 yards from certain property at East London known as the rough goods and timber site, pending the institution of an action on the part of the applicants to compel respondents to entirely abate the existing nuisance, and for damages arising out of the proximity of the rubbish tips to the said timber site, or, alternatively, cancellation of the lease entered into between applicants and respondents on the 24th April, 1903, and damages.

Mr. Upington was for applicants; Mr. Close was for respondents.

Mr. Upington, in argument, cited Bliss v. Hall (4 Bingham's New Cases, 163) and Gifford v. Hare (14 S.C., 255).

Mr. Close cited Beaufort West Municipality v. McIntyre (16 S.C., 541), Trill and Others v. Claremont Municipality (21 S.C., 362), and Colonial Government v. Mowbray Municipality (11 C.T.R., 605).

De Villiers, C.J.: There is considerable conflict in the evidence in the present case, and it certainly is not a case in which the Court will, without an action, grant a perpetual interdict restraining the Municipality from depositing this filth in the neighbourhood of the applicant's premises. But a strong prima facie case has, in my opinion, been made out by the applicants. It is true that the majority of the doctors who made their affidavits state that on the occasions on which they visited the premises there was no nuisance. But, on the other hand, doctors on behalf of applicants state that there was a decided nuisance, and if they were there at different times then the evidence would be perfectly consistent. It is true that the nuisance is not continuous, but even if it be intermittent only, it may be very injurious to the health and dangerous to the life of those who have to transact their business in the neighbourhood. It is said that at the time when the applicants first took occupation of their premises, the nuisance already existed, but I can well understand that it would be an increasing nuisance. When the rubbish heap was not very large, the nuisance might be less, but if there is a constant adding to this rubbish heap without sufficient deodourisation of the contents, I can quite well understand that there is an increasing nuisance, which might ultimately become intolerable. The stuff which was put on the top of the filth or refuse is not of such a nature as to prevent it becoming dangerous to health, and there is the statement of some of the witnesses that they actually suffered from the effects. Their symptoms were not so serious apparently as to necessitate medical advice, but for the purpose of constituting a nuisance it is not necessary that it should be so serious that a doctor has to be called in, but there was serious discomfort from the smell, and several of the witnesses traced their illnesses to their contact with these bad odours. It stands to reason if filth of this kind be deposited within a distance of 150, 200, or 300 yards of a place like the applicants, that the effect of it would be to cause injury to health. The distance at which the applicants claim that the filth should be deposited is not an unreasonable one, and I consider that, in refusing to grant a perpetual interdict and directing the applicants to proceed by action, the Court should grant an interdict in the meantime restraining the respondents from depositing rubbish, night soil, or any other filth of whatsoever kind within a radius of 600 yards from the applicants' rough goods and timber site. It is quite possible that when the parties go to trial it may be shown that there is no real nuisance. It is quite possible, on the other hand, supposing there is a real nuisance, that there might be a serious danger to the health of these people if in the meantime there is no interdict granted, and it seems to me it would not be a very serious inconvenience to the respondents then to have to deposit the filth at a somewhat greater distance from the applicants' premises. Judging by the plan there, I should think there must be sufficient space beyond the 600 yards radius. If there should be no space, the respondents might apply again to reduce the number of yards, but I should think that 600 yards would be about the nearest distance that would be quite safe. There is no statement here from either side that the Municipality have no space in which to deposit rubbish, except within the 600 yards, but, if there is no room there, I should think they will find room elsewhere. At all events, they have got the sea close to East London, where, I suppose, rubbish of that kind could be deposited pending the action. Costs of this application will be costs in the cause.

Mr. Close applied for leave to the respondents to claim in reconvention any damage to which they may be put by reason of the interdict in case they succeed in the action.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose that would be fair.]

Mr. Upington said he did not object to this being put in the order, though he thought it was unnecessary.

[De Villiers, C.J.: An interdict will be granted without prejudice to any right to damages which respondents may sustain by reason of the interdict. The applicants must go to trial next term. Notice of motion will stand as summons.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Ex parte LE RICHE. { 1907.
{ Dec. 5th.

Mr. Roux moved on the petition of S. A. le Riche for an order authorising the Civil Commissioner of Gordonia to accept a certain declaration of seller, which had not been signed in accordance with the section 10 of Act 5, 1834. It appeared that petitioner bought certain land at Saulstraat, and that transfer had not been completed. The declaration of seller should have been made before a Justice of the Peace, but it appeared that there was no J.P. within a distance of 200 miles of Rietfontein, and the declaration had been made before two witnesses. It was now impossible to get the signature of the seller, as his whereabouts was unknown.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What power has the Court to dispense with the law? Is there no section which will authorise the Court to do this?]

Mr. Roux explained that the brief had just been put in his hands, and he had not had time to look up the authorities. The petitioner had the declaration by the seller, but it had not been made before a J.P. No J.P. was available, and they had the evidence of two witnesses that it was solemnly declared before them. If the Court approved of the solemn declaration which was now produced—

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Court can only make an order in case you show that it is a legal declaration. The Court cannot authorise illegalities. The question is, have you complied with the law? The Court can direct the Civil Commissioner to grant you a receipt if you have complied with the law.]

Mr. Roux: My submission is that strictly under this section we have complied with the law.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When the Legislature speaks of a solemn declaration, does it mean anything but a declaration made before a J.P.?!]

Mr. Roux said that in the special circumstances the petitioner had brought the matter before the Court. There was an allegation that it was now impossible to get the declaration of the seller made before a J.P., because he could not be traced.

At a later stage, Mr. Roux again mentioned the matter, and called the Court's attention to section 12 of the Transfer Duty Act, which, he said, authorized the Civil Commissioner to dispense with a solemn declaration if he were satisfied that the seller had left the country.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the law authorized him to do it, let him do it. If the case is represented to him, no doubt he will do it. No order will be made.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE BARRY { 1907.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl moved for a certain rule authorising the issue of a certified copy of a certain bond to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte Y.M.C.A., STELLENBOSCH.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl moved on the petition of Nicolaas J. Hofmeyr, as president of the Board of Managers, Y.M.C.A., Stellenbosch, for an amendment of a certain deed of transfer by the elimination of a special condition, which provided that in case the Y.M.C.A. ceased to exist the property should go to the Students' Christian Association, and in case the latter body should cease to exist to the professors of the Theological Seminary and the minister of the Dutch Reformed Church, Stellenbosch. Counsel stated that it was entirely at the wish of the petitioner himself that this special condition was inserted in the deed, and that the estate from which the property was acquired had not specified any conditions that must be inserted in the deed. It appeared that the Students' Christian Association did not exist at Stellenbosch. There was a body called the Victoria College branch of the Students' Christian Association. Petitioner had obtained the consent of the theological professors and the Dutch Reformed Church minister to the elimination of the special condition. It was now considered that other arrangements should be made. Such other arrangements had actually been made, and the Court was now asked to grant an order for the elimination of the special condition in order that certain other conditions might later on be inserted which would meet the object the petitioner had in view.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why not insert them at once?]

Mr. Van Zyl: The idea was to have these other conditions registered against the title deed of the property. Petitioner desires to get clean transfer now, and then have the fresh conditions registered in the ordinary course.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think there should be a rule in this case. It may be that somebody will come forward to represent the Students' Christian Association. A rule nisi will be granted calling upon all concerned to show cause why the condition mentioned in the deed should not be expunged therefrom, rule returnable on the 12th December, one publication in "Ons Land" and an English newspaper circulating in Stellenbosch.

Ex parte ESTATE RIGGE.

Mr. Sutton moved, on behalf of the curator bonis of Mrs. Rigge, for an amendment of the order granted on the 15th August, 1907, so as to vest petitioner with the custody and administration of the estate, with power to do all things necessary for the maintenance of Mrs. Rigge, and invest such moneys as may be received by him on mortgage of immovable farm property in the Colony, provided that the approval of the Master to such investment be first had and obtained, and for authority to the Master to pay out moneys from the Guardians' Fund for such purpose.

Order granted as prayed, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte ESTATE LATE MCGREGOR.

Mr. Bisset moved, on the petition of the executors of estate McGregor, for leave to sue by edictal citation one Henning, who was believed to be in German South-west Africa, upon a certain mortgage bond, and to attach 1,700 shares belonging to respondent in the stock of the Montagu Estate Co.

Order granted as prayed, citation returnable on the first day of next term, personal service to be effected.

ESTATE STEYN V. ESTATE ERITZ.

Mr. Howes moved, on the petition of the executor dativo of the estate of H. R. de Vos Steyn, for cancellation of certain mortgage bond. The respondent set out certain facts on affidavit, and submitted to the order of the Court. Counsel stated that some 30 odd creditors of the respondent estate had consented to the application.

Rule granted calling upon all concerned to show cause on the first day of next term why an order should not be granted as prayed, rule to be published once in English and once in Dutch in a newspaper circulating in Oudtshoorn.

Ex parte ESTATE DE WIT.

Mr. Roux moved, on the petition of the curator, for leave to pass a mortgage bond for £450, to pay debts, etc., and empowering the Master to authorise the passing of such other bonds as may be necessary.

The Court granted an order authorising the raising of a loan of £460, and of such further loans on mortgage, and for such amount as the Master of the Supreme Court shall deem necessary.

Ex parte SCHARFF.

Mr. Roux moved, on behalf of petitioner, as guardian of his two minor daughters, for leave to sell certain property which had been donated to the said minors. Petitioner was proposing to leave Keimoes, division of Gordonia, and to settle in North America.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN WYK.

Mr. Roux moved, on behalf of the tutors testamentary of the minor children of the late Mr. Van Wyk, for an order authorising transfer of certain property.

Order granted in terms of Master's report, Mr. E. M. J. van Rensburg, J. son, to be curator ad litem to represent the minors in the proposed division of the property, costs to be paid by the legatees in equal shares.

Ex parte ESTATE ROSSOUW.

Mr. Gutsche moved for cancellation of a certain mortgage bond registered against property at Diep River in 1846. Counsel said that all efforts to trace the mortgage creditors or their heirs had failed.

Rule granted, returnable on the 12th January, one publication in an English newspaper, and one in a Dutch newspaper circulating in Cape Town.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE AITKEN.

Mr. Roux moved, on the petition of Geo. Wallis, jun., as sole trustee in the insolvent estate of Alexander Aitken, of Oudtshoorn, for leave to pass transfer of certain erven in the estate, sold at public auction to Mr. Wallis.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE LLOYD.

Mr. McGregor, K.C., moved, on the petition of the executors testamentary, for the appointment of Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, K.C., as curator ad litem to represent certain minors in an action instituted by petitioners against the estate of the late Frank de Jong, and for the joining of the curator as co-defendant with the executors of the late De Jong.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SCOTT.

Mr. Roux moved for cancellation of certain sales of lots of the farm Kroenendal, Hout Bay, effected in 1903. Four parties—Thomas McCourt, Norman Taylor, Samuel Bodell, and Joaquim da Silva—had failed to carry out the conditions of sale, and could not now be traced. Counsel said that he only applied at present for a rule, and he referred to the recent cases of Frielander Bros., Albrecht, and the Fernwood Estate. In this case, only two instalments of the purchase price had been paid. It was true that the conditions did not contain a forfeiture clause.

Rule granted, calling upon all persons concerned to show cause on the 12th January why the sales mentioned in the petition should not be cancelled, and why transfer dues should not be paid out of the amounts paid to the petitioner in respect of any sales, with leave to petitioner to deduct from any balance in his hands the costs of these proceedings and any interest that might be due to him in respect of any sale, rule to be published once in a Cape Town newspaper.

Ex parte ESTATE FOURIE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on the petition of the executrix testamentary, for an order authorising registration of certain mortgage bond of £600 against landed property at Philip's Town.

Order granted as prayed.

MACKIE, YOUNG AND CO.		Dec. 5th.

Priority--Proof of debt--Insolvency -- Covering bond -- Novation.

The respondents, under an agreement with C., a supporting creditor of M. on open account, satisfied his debts to C. and received bills drawn by C. upon M., accepted by M. and indorsed by C., and as security for these and other debts which M. might thereafter incur to the respondents, obtained cession from C. of two covering bonds of £5,000 and £3,000 passed the mortgagees, they are entitled to the same preference in respect of the bills thus proved by them as Creswell, Sons and Co. would have had in respect of the debts originally incurred in their favour by the insolvents. In support of this contention they rely upon the order of this Court that "a fresh distribution account be framed according to which preference under the different duly registered covering bonds shall be awarded according to priority of the dates when the debts respectively proved were originally incurred." It is clear, however, that the Court referred only to debts still subsisting and not to debts which had been extinguished by payment or by novation or by any other means. The original debts owing by the insolvents to Creswell, Sons and Co. were book debts. According to the affidavit of Henry John Gardiner, one of the second respondents, his firm was in December, 1903, induced by Creswell, Sons and Co. to take over the account of the insolvents, and he adds that the firm satisfied Creswell, Sons and Co. in respect of their claim against the insolvents. It is reasonably clear from the evidence that what took place was this. Until November, 1903, Creswell, Sons and Co. had been supporting the insolvents; and it was now arranged that they should transfer the securities which they held for the debts owing to them by the insolvents to the second respondents, who, on their part, should satisfy the claim of Creswell, Sons and Co. against the insolvents. No cession was, however, effected of Creswell, Sons and Co.'s claims on open account, but bills drawn by them for the amount on the insolvents, accepted by the latter, and indorsed by the drawers, were given to the second respondents as security for these bills, and for any other debts which the insolvents might thereafter incur to the second respondents, the firm of Creswell, Sons and Co. ceded their rights under the bonds of £5,000 and £3,000 to the second respondents, subject to the prior claim of the Standard Bank, but the only cession appearing on the face of the bonds is the cession to the Standard Bank. It is noteworthy that in the letter of 18th November, 1903, whereby Creswell, Sons and Co. agree to instruct the Standard Bank to transfer these bonds to the second respondents on certain conditions, they state that the bonds are to be held as security for the amounts owing by the insolvents to the second respondents. There is no statement in that letter, or in any of the correspondence produced, that the original debts owing to Creswell, Sons and Co. were to be ceded to the second respondents, or that the bonds were to be considered as security for such debts. The bills drawn on the insolvents were duly accepted, and as they were dis-honoured they were proved upon the insolvent estate of the acceptors. Notwithstanding such proof made by the second respondents, they now claim a preference as if they had obtained a cession of Creswell's original claim, and had afterwards proved in respect of such ceded claim upon the insolvent estate. If there had been a cession of the original claim, it might fairly have been contended that the parties intended to keep alive the original claim on open account, which Creswell, Sons and Co. had against the insolvents. In the case of Evans v. Resident Magistrate of Oudtshoorn (Foord, p. 32), it was held that the mere fact that a debtor has given his own promissory note to his creditor does not lead to the necessary inference that the parties intended to substitute the note for the debt. In the present case, the drawing and endorsement of the eleven bills by Creswell, Sons and Co., and the acceptance thereof by the insolvents, formed part of a transaction which evidenced the intention of all the parties thereto that there should be a complete novation of the original debt. The original creditors, it is true, ceded the covering bonds which they held to the second respondents, but they did so to secure the fresh obligation which the debtors incurred to the cessionaries of the bond by accepting the drafts that became payable to such cessionaries. If it had been intended that the original debt should be resuscitated on failure of the payment of the bills, the parties would have taken care to provide for such an event by means of a cession of the original debt to the cessionaries of the bond. After the acceptance of the bills, the original debt was wholly ignored by all parties, including the insolvents, whose subsequent arrangements with the second respondents, to which I shall presently refer, were wholly inconsistent with a continued liability for the original book debts. It is said that those book debts had been purchased by the second respondents, but if there was a purchase at all, it was a purchase of the bills which were to be substituted for the original debts. When the second respondents themselves came to prove their claims they proved as holders of the bills and not as purchasers or cessionaries of the rights which Creswell, Sons and Co. had previously possessed in respect of the original book debts. There had, in my opinion, been a novation of those debts, and as they were no longer subsisting debts, no preference could be awarded in respect of them. Even, however, if there had been no novation of these debts, there is a further difficulty in the way of such preference. The bonds of £5,000 and £3,000 under which such preference was claimed and awarded had, by arrangement between the parties, been superseded by a later bond of £15,000. This bond was passed on April 29, 1904, and was later in date than three of the covering bonds passed by the insolvents in favour of the applicant. The negotiations for the passing of the bond of £15,000 had begun in November of the previous year. On the 18th November, 1903, Croswell, Sons and Co. wrote to the second respondents as follows: "In consideration of your giving a guarantee to the Standard Bank in respect to our outstanding bills on Mackie, Young and Co., we hereby agree to instruct them to transfer to you upon payment of the said bills, the bonds which we have handed to them, to be held by you as security for amounts owing by Mackie, Young and Co. to you, until such time as they are cancelled or replaced by a new bond, which we understand you will obtain consequent on your decision to take over their account from us." The agreement for the passing of such a bond was made between the insolvents and the second respondents on the 4th of December, 1903. The amount was to be £15,000, and the fresh bond was to be held as security for all acceptances, advances, bills, interest, commission, and other indebtedness that may at any time be owing by the insolvents to the second respondents. It is then specially provided that until the bond for £15,000 is passed, the two bonds of £5,000 and £3,000 shall be a security to the second respondents for the indebtedness of the insolvents, subject to any prior claim of the Standard Bank. This provision clearly shows that the bond of £15,000 to be passed directly in favour of the second respondents was intended to be in substitution for any claims which they might have in respect of the two prior bonds ceded to them. On the 29th April, 1904, the bond of £15,000 was duly passed, and special reference is made in the bond to the agreement of 4th December, 1903. After the passing of that bond, it is difficult to see how the second respondents can, in justice to the other preferent creditors of the insolvent estate, be allowed to claim the benefit of the two prior bonds. It is said that these bonds have not been cancelled, but by accepting the bond of £15,000 the second respondents relinquished all claims to preference under the two prior bonds, whether those bonds were cancelled or not. It may well be that the Standard Bank may take advantage of the non-cancellation of these bonds, but the second respondents could not claim as against the insolvents, and cannot now claim as against other preferent creditors that these bonds are still in force. The only argument which at first raised any doubt in my mind is that, as no objection was raised by the applicant to the second respondents' proof of debt, he is now foreclosed from objecting to the distribution account. In that proof of debt the two earlier bonds are mentioned along with the bond of £15,000 as part of the security held by the second respondents for the debts proved by them. On full consideration, however, I am of opinion that the admission of the proof of debt in that form is not conclusive as to the right of the proving creditors to preference in respect of every one of the bonds mentioned in the proof. After such proof, it would still be competent for the trustee, upon finding that the latest of the three bonds had been accepted by such creditors in substitution for the two earlier bonds, to award preference only under the latest bond. There is no evidence to show that the applicant knew at the time when the second respondents' proof of debt was filed that the bond for £15,000 was in substitution for the second respondents' rights as cessionaries of the two earlier bonds, but even if he did know it, he was not bound to raise any objection until he could ascertain from the distribution account under which of the bonds preference would be awarded. Under all the circumstances, I am of opinion that the distribution account should be so amended as to award to the second respondents such preference only as they would be entitled to under the bond of 29th April, 1904, in respect of the bills proved by them, according to the dates thereof. The second respondents will bear the applicant's costs, but the first respondents' share of the costs will be borne by the estate.

APPEALS.

ALLIE V. CHRISTIANSE. { 1907.
 { Dec. 5th.

Mr. P. S. Twentymjn Jones appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Benjamin, K.C., for respondent.

This was an appeal against the judgment of the A.R.M. at Piquetberg, delivered in connection with any exception taken to a summons in which Pieter Christianse, a painter, sued Sheik Allie to recover £18 12s. 6d. for work done.

It appeared that respondent, who was plaintiff in the Court below, sued Sheik Allie in the Assistant Resident Magistrate's Court at Piquetberg on August 12, to recover £18 12s. 6d. for work done. Allie did not appear, and judgment went by default. On September 10 Allie summoned Christiansse to show cause why the case of August 12, when Christiansse was plaintiff, should not be reopened. The reason why he claimed the reopening of the case was because the service of the summons was not in accordance with law, Allie at the time being outside the jurisdiction of the Court, he being in Cape Town, and the summons being served on a clerk, who was not authorised to accept service of the summons, and judgment went against him in default. He wished to reopen the case on these grounds, and the Magistrate would not allow him to do so. The Magistrate questioned if the application to reopen the case was in time, but the Act 20 of 1856 as to Magistrates' Court Procedure laid down that application could be made within a month from the date of the judgment.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the point raised was a technical one, and if it were wished to raise a technical point, the appellant should have complied with the technicalities, and that he had not done, because he failed to supply the respondent with a copy of the judgment. In support of his argument, counsel quoted the case of Kriel v. Kriel (15 S.C.L., p. 369). He submitted that there was great laxity shown in the whole of the proceedings.

Masendorp, J.: In this case it appears that the plaintiff has very carefully and fully set forth in his summons all the grounds that he intends to rely upon in his action. It is there stated that the judgment was obtained on a certain day by the present defendant in the case, and gives the date of the summons on which that judgment was given. It alleges that a writ was taken out, and that he now claims to have the judgment set aside, on the ground that he was not resident within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate's Court, and also alleges in his summons that the original summons in the case in which he was defendant was not served on him, but was served at a place other than his residence, and upon a person who had no authority to accept service of the summons, and alleges that the return of the Messenger was annexed to the summons. So it is quite clear what Mr. King refers to when he admits that a copy of the service of the summons was served on the present defendant with the other summons. Without going into the question at any length as to what documents might or might not have been under ordinary circumstances required to be served on the defendant in this case, it is only necessary to decide whether he has suffered any prejudice through the want of service of the documents which are mentioned in the exception. The documents referred to are the judgment given in the original case. Now it is quite clear that the defendant could suffer no prejudice from the absence of the service of the judgment which he had himself taken out of the Magistrate's Court, and which formed part of the record of the Court in which action was then brought. The summons in the original case and the writ of execution are all matters within the knowledge of the plaintiff himself, for whose benefit these processes were issued. The Magistrate himself in one part of his judgment states: "That defendant in this case would not be really prejudiced by the want of these documents, but that by some possibility it might appear that the time might have elapsed in which he should have reopened the case, and that certain documents should have been put in, in order to clear up the point." On the question as to whether he had moved in the matter, before thirty days had expired, from the service of the subsequent writ of execution, the Magistrate seems to have overlooked this fact, that the judgment in the original case was given on August 12, and that the summons to reopen the case was issued on September 9, and consequently it was impossible that the required period could have elapsed, which would bar the defendant from re-opening the action. It is quite clear that when he issued the summons on September 9, within a month after the judgment was given, it must necessarily be within a month of the writ of execution. The question the Magistrate has to decide is whether the defendant lives beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and for the purposes of his decision on that question all the necessary documents were before the Court. Under all the circumstances, I think the defendant could not have suffered any prejudice on any of the grounds alleged in his exception, and the exception must be overruled, and the matter referred back to the Magistrate to be dealt with on its merits.

The appeal will be allowed, with costs, including the costs of the day in the Magistrate's Court.

MAOMINN V. MACAZIMI.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Resident Magistrate at Flagstaff. Originally the plaintiff (appellant) sued the defendant on a promissory note for £18. The Resident Magistrate gave judgment for £11, and the plaintiff appealed on the grounds that the judgment should have been for £18, and not for £11. From the evidence given in the Court below, it appeared that the respondent agreed to work on the mines for nine months in consideration of which appellant gave him a cow, for which respondent gave a promissory note for £18, to be met in three months. Respondent did not work his full time, and when applied to for the amount of the note refused to pay it, or return the cow. The respondent admitted entering into the agreement to work, and receiving the cow, but denied that he had signed the promissory note. He owed the appellant six months' work for the cow.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for his judgment, was satisfied that the respondent had signed the note, and that he received a cow valued at £13 as an advance, and that for the period he worked the appellant drew £6. The appellant also paid £4 for respondent's travelling expenses to the Rand, which added to the value of the cow made £17, from which had to be deducted the £6, which left a balance of £11, for which there would be judgment.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., for appellant; respondent in default.

Maasdorp, J.: The Magistrate admits in the reasons given for his judgment that he has gone outside the summons, but he says he considered it right to do so, with a view to arriving at an equitable finding. On the whole, I think it would have been safer for the Magistrate to have confined himself to the contract which was actually proved to have been made between the parties. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant made a promissory note in his favour for £18, to fall due on August 15. The defendant denied that he had made this promissory note, and in evidence he stated positively that he had never been a party to this note, but the Magistrate found that that was not true. Upon that finding of fact by the Magistrate, the defendant became liable on August 15 for the payment of this £18. If any portion of it had been paid off by the defendant, such payment should have been pleaded; but without going into the question whether the plea of payment was actually necessary, the Court will take into consideration the evidence given before the Magistrate, which amounts to an admission on the part of the plaintiff that he actually received at one time £6 from the defendant, but then he states that, on the other hand, he had also made an advance to him of £4, so that the actual amount to the credit of the defendant would only be £2. It seems that the defendant was on the point of going to the Transvaal to work at the mines, and he required some assistance. The assistance rendered to him by the plaintiff was what seems to amount to the gift of a cow, which apparently would be made use of by his family during his absence. For the assistance rendered by the plaintiff, he naturally wanted some profit, and although the cow is valued at £13, there is nothing illegal in the plaintiff contracting with the defendant that he should receive in three months from the defendant the sum of £18. The plaintiff is liable upon his promissory note, and the only set-off that can be taken into consideration is the part payment of £2. The Magistrate was wrong in allowing other equitable considerations in favour of the defendant and reducing the claim to £11. The appeal must be allowed, and judgment altered for the plaintiff for the sum of £16, with costs (including costs in the Court below).

COOPER AND ANOTHER V. TRUTER.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Resident Magistrate at George in an interpleader action. The defendant in the Court below was Truter, who had seized and taken in execution certain property (donkeys) belonging to George and Johannes Cooper. After these things had been attached in the suit of Truter v. Cooper, George Cooper brought this action to prove that the donkeys were the property of him and his brother. The Magistrate held that the appellants were wrong in their action, and that the property should be declared executable. From this decision, the present appeal was brought.

The evidence read by counsel was of a most contradictory nature.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for the appellant, and Mr. P. S. Twyman Jones appeared for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: I do not see how the Court can interfere with the finding of the Magistrate in this case. He has decided mere questions of fact, and according to the credibility of the witnesses. His decision is supported by very strong circumstances in this case. It appears that an action was brought by Truter against George Cooper for debt, and the donkeys in question and harness were seized in execution of the judgment. Now there is evidence that at the time this debt was incurred George Cooper gave as security for the debt the donkeys and harness in question. George Cooper is now called as one of the principal witnesses for the defence to show that the property belonged to his brothers. There is a written document put in, in which he alleges that the property is his, and that he gives it as a pledge to Mr. Truter as security for the debt. He states he was unaware of the contents of that document, but the magistrate disbelieved him. I do not think the Court can go further than to say that the magistrate was justified in disbelieving him. The result is that George Cooper represented that the property belonged to him, and that cannot prejudice his two brothers, but when we refer to the evidence of his brother James we find he says that the property was sold to him. He says, in his evidence, "Mr. Truter took my donkeys, as George had sold them to him. I did not come into town at once. I went home. I did not say anything to Mr. Truter." I did not say anything to my brother." Now, it was clear that if James stood by while George represented that the donkeys were his to obtain credit, then he would be guilty of fraud. The magistrate came to the conclusion that he said nothing, because the property was not his. I think the magistrate was justified in his finding. Later, when the donkeys were required for use by George, Mr. Truter allowed him to have them back upon his giving a promissory note, to which James and Johannes were sureties, and it was only on that document being signed that Mr. Truter gave the donkeys back to George, and it was understood at the time that if at any time the donkeys were needed they should be restored under this pledge to Mr. Truter. That disposes of the credibility of George Cooper. With regard to James Cooper, I will say that the magistrate also disbelieved him. Johannes was away from the farm for a considerable time, and never exercised any control over these donkeys, and the magistrate considered that there was no proof that the donkeys belonged to Johannes. The donkeys and harness were in the possession of George when he agreed that they should be pledged, and when he pointed them out as his property in the presence of James. Under all the circumstances, the magistrate came to the conclusion that James and Johannes were people of no means at all, and that James was merely a servant of George. Therefore there is strong evidence to prove that the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

KOEN V. MASKE AND CO.

Purchase and sale—Acceptance— Inspection — Merchantable condition of goods.

This was an appeal from the Resident Magistrate, Aberdeen, in which plaintiff claimed £20 16s., less 16s., waived to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the Court, being the purchase price of 26 bags of mealies, which were sold as good and sound. Defendant delivered the mealies as agreed on, but in such a bad and unsaleable state that they were useless. Plaintiff demanded a refund of the purchase price, or the delivery of 26 bags of good mealies, with both of which demands the defendant refused to comply.

The Magistrate, in awarding the plaintiff £19 4s., held that the plaintiff was entitled to return the mealies, and to recover the purchase price, or the equivalent of sound mealies.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for appellant (defendant in the Court below); Mr. P. S. T. Jones appeared for respondent (plaintiff in the Court below).

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts:

Maaasdorp, J.: It appears that the plaintiff in this case ordered some mealies from the defendant. It is alleged in the summons that it was guaranteed that the mealies should be in a good, sound and merchantable condition, but no evidence of any special warranty was given at the trial. In my opinion, where, under such circumstances as the present, an order for mealies is given, the contract between the parties at least embraces the condition that the mealies shall be merchantable. The Magistrate has found on personal examination, and also on the evidence given by the witnesses, that the mealies were in a very bad condition, that the mealies were unsaleable. And from the condition in which the mealies were found to be when first inspected by the plaintiff, I come to the conclusion that the mealies must have been in a bad and unmerchantable condition at the time of the delivery. It appears from the evidence that the defendant, when he brought the mealies into town, went to see the plaintiff. Taking the evidence of the plaintiff, together with that of the defendant, it appears to me that at the time that the mealies were brought in and placed in the store there was not a full acceptance of delivery by the plaintiff. It was quite understood by the defendant that the mealies were still open to inspection by the plaintiff, and it must be implied that the plaintiff intended afterwards to inspect the mealies, and to see that they were in a merchantable condition. The mealies were delivered on May 25, and were in the store a few days before being actually inspected by the plaintiff. On such inspection he discovered that they were in a bad condition. The Magistrate has found that the evidence given by him is correct. Now, on the authority of cases quoted, it would seem that when articles which had to be merchantable were delivered, and had been received by the purchaser without inspection, but were inspected within a reasonable time, and then discovered not to have been merchantable at the time that they were delivered, the purchaser would be entitled to the return of the purchase price on delivering up the articles sold. The inspection was made within a week, and it appears to me to be a reasonable time. If there was evidence in this case that the damage might have occurred after the mealies were delivered, without any fault of the defendant, then it might have been held that it had not been proved that at the time of delivery the mealies were in an unmerchantable condition. The Magistrate was justified in finding that the mealies were not in a merchantable condition at the time they were brought in the store, and under all the circumstances of this case there is no evidence to show that there was no final acceptance of the mealies, but that the final acceptance awaited the further inspection by the plaintiff, and the defendant was very well aware of that. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

STOFFELS v. JAMES. { 1907.
Dec. 6th.

Magistrate's Court—Jurisdiction
—Set off.

When a plaintiff submits himself to the jurisdiction of a Magistrate within whose district he is not domiciled by suing in his Court, the Court has jurisdiction to deal with all liquid claims or sets-off between the parties exactly as if they were both resident within the jurisdiction.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Lusikisiki in an action brought by respondent against appellant to recover £80 for cash advanced, commission on a certain sale of tobacco, and purchase price of a horse.

It appeared that in the Court below Mrs. James sued the present appellant for £80, and that appellant pleaded the general issue and counter-claimed for £61 for certain oxen lent, etc. Mrs. James was resident at Umtata, and Stoffels was resident at Lusikisiki. Objection was taken to the claim in reconvention, on the ground that the defendant in reconvention resided beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and that the Court had therefore no power to hear the claim in reconvention.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that, according to section 23 of Proclamation 112, 1879, a magistrate had jurisdiction only over such persons as resided within his district. The plaintiff in the action, Mrs. James, resided at Umtata, beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. He allowed the exception to the claim in reconvention, in which Mrs. James was defendant.

Mr. Sutton was for appellant, August Stoffels; there was no appearance for respondent, Flora James.

Mr. Sutton submitted that where plaintiff was rightly before the Court, and had submitted to the jurisdiction, the defendant must be allowed to raise any defence that he could raise, and that the claim in reconvention in this case was by way of a defence. He cited Rennette v. Stanford (3 Searle, 225), Morat and Co. v. Hickson and Co. (12 S.C., 448), Walmsley v. James (8 C.T.R., 149), and Ozland v. Key (15 S.C., 315).

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that the plaintiff in this case is resident at Umtata. The defendant resides in the district of Lusikisiki. Plaintiff brought an action against defendant in the Magistrate's Court of Lusikisiki for the recovery of certain moneys. To this claim the defendant pleaded what amounts to the general issue, and he also put in a counter-claim for the value of certain oxen belonging to him, which he alleged had been in the plaintiff's possession, and which had not been restored to him. There is a further claim for the price of certain cattle sold by the defendant to the plaintiff. The claim in reconvention put in by defendant was taken exception to by plaintiff's agent, on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction over the plaintiff, who was resident in the district of Umtata. Now, it seems to be quite clear from the authorities that when a plaintiff submits himself to the jurisdiction of the Court, as was done by the plaintiff in this case, the Court would be entitled to deal with all disputes between the parties, at least such as would amount to a liquid claim on the part of the defendant or to a set-off. It is not necessary now to go any further. It is not necessary for the Court to decide that all kinds of cases might be set up in reconvention by defendant as against the plaintiff. Plaintiff claims a certain sum of money. Now, it is quite clear that if defendant's claim is sound, he has a right of set-off against this amount, which would in itself reduce the claim of the plaintiff, and so far as that amount is concerned, it might have been pleaded as a set-off. But I take it that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to deal with the further liquid claim put in by the defendant for the restoration of his oxen, or their value, and the Magistrate was wrong in holding that he had jurisdiction to decide plaintiff's claim, but that he had none so far as the defendant's claim is concerned. The appeal will be allowed, with costs, the exception overruled, and the case sent back to the Magistrate to be tried on its merits.

BIEL V. STEENKAMP.

Tacit emancipation — Trade or business—Transport rider.

In order to show that a minor has been tacitly emancipated, it must be proved that he carries on some trade or business on his own account.

To be "engaged in transport riding" as a driver or in any other subordinate capacity is not to carry on a trade or business.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Gordonia, sitting at the Periodical Court, Keimoes, in an action brought by respondent against appellant for £20, alleged to be due upon an exchange of horses.

In the Court below, exception was taken to the summons on the ground that defendant was a minor.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the defendant was in his nineteenth year. He was living apart from his father, and in no way under his control, and was undoubtedly earning his own livelihood. He found for plaintiff for £20, with costs, or delivery of the horse exchanged by the defendant, in which latter case plaintiff was to pay the defendant £5.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for appellant, Philippus Ernest Biel; Mr. Close was for respondent, Johannes A. J. Steenkamp.

Mr. De Villiers said that the Magistrate seemed to have held that there was tacit emancipation of the defendant, who was 18 years of age. There were two essentials to constitute tacit emancipation—the minor must be living apart from his parents, and he must be carrying on business independently on his own account. Counsel cited Grotius (Maasdorp's Trans., p. 20), and Van Leeuwen (Kotze's Trans., Vol. I., p. 89), and submitted that appellant had not been tacitly emancipated. He also quoted Maasdorp's Institutes (p. 247).

Mr. Close submitted that defendant was clearly living apart from his father, and that he was trading on his own account as a transport rider. The horse was required for his own business, and he had actually given a promissory note upon purchase of the horse.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff sues the defendant in this case for the specific performance of a contract for the exchange of horses, and the defendant sets up the plea of minority. This is answered by the plaintiff saying that the defendant is not entitled to the benefits of the plea of minority, because he has forfeited them on the ground that he carries on a trade or business by himself. Now, it is quite true that if that had been established the defendant would have lost the benefit of that plea in respect of business carried on by him, and transactions of his in respect of that business. It is now for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant carries on a trade or business, and to my mind there is not a tittle of evidence that he does so, with the exception of a casual remark or answer given by his father in cross-examination. The other evidence amounts to this, that from time to time he bought some little articles at different shops. What trade or business can he be said to carry on? What specific business would you call it? The witnesses go so far as to say or imply that he carried on that independent business when he was of the age of 13, because the purchases made from one storekeeper, who was called, were purchases made five years ago, and then he was of the age of 13. The only thing the plaintiff can lay hold of in this case is some indication that a separate business was carried on, is, as I say, the remark of the father that the son had left him, and was engaged in riding transport. Well, that expression is altogether too vague to establish a business. It is contended that that proves that he is by trade a carrier. It may mean so many things. A man may be said to be engaged in transport riding when engaged as a driver for the purpose, or in some other subordinate capacity. If you asked him what he was doing, he would say riding transport, but that does not constitute the trade or business of a transport rider. There is no evidence of any kind that the defendant possesses the plant to carry on the business with. The least one would have expected was evidence that he is the owner of a wagon and oxen, or that he is the hirer of a wagon and oxen, and that he has the control of a wagon and oxen, and in that way has become a transport rider carrying on that trade. The whole of that is to be implied, as I have already said, from the statement by his father, that he is engaged in transport riding. I think the Magistrate was wrong upon the facts. The facts do not support his finding that this boy is engaged independently in a trade or business, and I think this is one of the cases which show the benefit of a protection of this kind. Counsel have not gone into the merits of the case, and it is not now necessary to do so, but I may say it appears from the evidence of the witnesses for the plaintiff himself that he exchanged an unsound horse with the defendant. I do not say that it was fraudulently done, but still it shows that a minor should be protected from such a transaction, whether bona fide or not. The Magistrate should have allowed the exception. The appeal will be allowed, with costs in this Court and the Court below, the exception being allowed.

ISMAIL V. ISMAIL.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg in an interpleader suit to determine the executability of certain goods.

From the record, it appeared that the goods had been attached in satisfaction of a judgment obtained by respondent, Haroon, against one Mahomet Berry, for £4 18s. 9d., or for restoration of certain goods. Certain sweet jars, scales, etc., found in the possession of Berry were attached. These the claimant, Adam, alleged had been deposited by him with Berry for safe keeping.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said he was not satisfied that the applicant's evidence was sufficiently strong to rebut the presumption that the goods attached were the judgment debtor's property.

Mr. Merais was for appellant, Adam Ismail, a general dealer, of Retreat; Mr. Bisset was for respondent, Haroon Ismail.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J., allowed the appeal, with costs in both courts, and declared that the goods attached were not executable, with the exception of a box and bedstead.

REX V. GIBISELA.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Elliotdale, who had convicted appellant under Act 35, 1893, as amended by Proclamation 109 of 1900, Act 7, 1905, and Proclamation 401 of 1905, of the theft of a red stallion, the property of Duna, a headman. Accused had been sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour.

Mr. Swift was for appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Swift, who appeared at the request of the Court on behalf of appellant, read a letter received from Gibisela, in which he stated that the witnesses were mistaken as to his identity.

Counsel briefly put the appellant's case before the Court.

Without calling upon Mr. Nightingale, Maasdorp, J.: In this case the evidence is very strong and clear against the accused. This horse was taken away from its owner, and very shortly afterwards prisoner was seen in possession of it by at least four witnesses. He denies that he was seen by them. As the Court believes the evidence of these witnesses, the conviction must stand, and the appeal must be dismissed.

REX V. BOTHA.

Cattle—Infected area—Acts 27 of 1893 and 16 of 1906.

To negligently allow cattle to stray from an infected to a non-infected area is not a criminal offence either under Section 12 of Act 27 of 1893 or under Act 16 of 1906.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Riversdale, sitting at the Periodical Court, Albertinia, who had convicted appellant of contravening section 12 of Act 27 1893, as amended by Act 16 of 1906, and sentenced him to pay a fine of £1. The charge against accused was that he wrongfully and unlawfully removed or caused to be removed from Brakfontein, district of Mossel Bay, to the farm Cauca, district of Riversdale, a certain number of horned cattle, the said district of Mossel Bay having been proclaimed an infected area (Proclamation 420 of the 14th December, 1904), and the said district of Riversdale having been proclaimed a non-infected area (Proclamation 248 of the 19th August, 1905).

Mr. Louwrens was for appellant (Marthinus Botha); Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Louwrens (in answer to the Court), said that one of the grounds of appeal was that the section under which accused was charged and convicted provided no penalty, and another ground was that there was no evidence that the accused removed or caused to be removed the cattle from the one district to the other.

Mr. Nightingale explained that, after the record had been read, it was his intention to leave the matter in the hands of the Court. The evidence was that the cattle were left in an infected area unguarded. These cattle then apparently got across the river into an uninfected area.

Maasdorp, J.: It is quite clear upon the admission made by Mr. Nightingale in this case, who appears on behalf of the Crown, that no act has been proved to have been committed on the part of the accused, which amounts to a removal of cattle from an infected to an uninfected area. The evidence really amounts to this, that the cattle, through what is taken by the Magistrate to have been carelessness by the owner, wandered or strayed from the one district into the other. Well, the regulations made under this Act do not provide for such a case, and the offence here charged has not been proved. The conviction and sentence must be quashed.

REX V. KLEIN.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, who had convicted appellant of contravening section 31 (clause 2), and section 33 (clause a), of Act 36, 1902, and sentenced him to 17 months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

Accused was charged before the Magistrate upon two counts with (1) procuring, or attempting to procure, a woman or girl to become a common prostitute, viz., Maud Smith; and (2) living wholly, or in part, on the earnings of prostitution. He was found not guilty on the first count, but was convicted on the second count.

Dr. Greer was for appellant, L. Klein; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Dr. Greer said that in the notice to the Attorney-General two grounds of appeal were set out, viz., (1) that the charge in the summons was vague and embarrassing, and bad in law; and (2) that the conviction was against the weight of evidence. He intended to rely solely on the second ground.

Dr. Greer submitted that the evidence for the prosecution was tainted and untrustworthy.

Postea (December 9th).

Counsel having been heard in further argument,

Maasdorp, J.: There is no doubt that Dr. Greer has given very strong arguments in dealing with the evidence in the Court below, which will have to be duly weighed before any decision can be arrived at in this case. He has pointed out very weighty considerations, which the Court will have to bear in mind in disposing of the case, but it must be borne in mind that arguments similar to these have already been placed before the Court when disposing of this matter in the first instance. In the Court below, the accused was represented by an attorney of this Court, and, judging from the cross-examination to which he subjected the witnesses, it is clear that he directed the attention of that Court to the very same difficulties which have been raised in the arguments by Mr.

Greer. He may not have gone as fully and as clearly into these matters in the arguments which he advanced to the Court, but, at the same time, it is a fact that the Court that dealt with this case in the first instance dealt with it by the same light by which it is put before this Court. It is also the case, as stated by Mr. Greer, that the Magistrates, in dealing with these cases, have very difficult and responsible duties to perform, and with the considerable magnitude of the jurisdiction that is conferred on them, it should appear quite clear that these duties are performed with a due sense of the responsibility. The Legislature had that in view when the Act was passed, by which this jurisdiction was placed in the hands of the Magistrates, because it is provided by section 42 of the Act that no Magistrate shall preside over such trials, except such as have had a considerable experience. It is specially provided that they should have been on the Bench for at least five years, and they can only have risen to the Bench after a considerable experience. Now, not only that, but we know, as a matter of fact, from the cases which have come before the Court before, that the Magistrate who presided in this case possesses long experience, and possesses large judicial experience in similar cases. Under these circumstances, I must come to the conclusion that the matter was dealt with by a competent judicial officer. Now, the arguments which are advanced in this case, in order to induce the Court to come to the conclusion that the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution is not reliable, is partly of this character, for although it appears that at least five witnesses have given most direct evidence of money that had been earned by prostitution, and some of these witnesses say that it had been handed over directly at different times to the accused in this case; if their evidence must be regarded with suspicion, because it has been elicited that they were not on very friendly terms with him, it is not surprising that people who associate themselves in this way should at times fall out. That is only what one can expect from the nature of their occupation, and the Magistrate knew that at times these unpleasantnesses had taken place, but he declined to come to the opinion that the evidence for the prosecution was incredible, and it is impossible for me to say that this Court should differ with him on that finding. Some part of the argument was addressed to the question whether the accused in this case is a man who had a visible and honest means of subsistence. Now, it does not appear by any reasons placed before the Court that the Magistrate has found that he has not, and consequently I must take

It that it has not been proved that he is not a man who lacks visible means of subsistence, and therefore I will take it that he had some visible means of subsistence. In this same clause of the Act which deals with that matter it is provided that where it is proved that the accused lives habitually in the company of prostitutes, and has no visible means of subsistence, that he shall be deemed to be existing on the earnings of prostitution, but the opportunity is given to him of satisfying the Court to the contrary. These two circumstances are taken as conclusive evidence that he lives on the earnings of prostitution unless he rebuts the presumption. Now, I may take it that the fact is admitted by him that he has habitually for years lived in the most close companionship with prostitutes, is a circumstance that tells strongly against him, although that is not conclusive evidence. Seeing that he so associates with these characters, he can hardly complain that his actions should be borne witness to by the very people with whom he so constantly associated. It is only the evidence of these people that can operate against him. Five of them have sworn that they have seen the money handed to him—the direct proceeds of prostitution—and I come to the conclusion that when he received the money he did so for the purpose of living partly on the proceeds of prostitution. In all the points, the Court must uphold the decision of the Magistrate in the Court below. If the arguments advanced by Mr. Greer had been put to a jury, and the jury had found him guilty, nobody could have questioned it. Therefore, the appeal must be dismissed.

SUPREME COURT

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

BERGMAN V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

1907.
Aug. 21st.
Dec. 2nd.
" 9th.

Sheriff—Writ of execution—Attachment—Debtor of execution debtor—Crown Liability

ties Act (37 of 1888)—Execution against Government.

The applicant, having obtained judgment and a writ of execution against one F., for the value of merchandise taken by F. out of the plaintiff's stores, applied for leave to attach certain moneys alleged to be in the hands of the Treasurer of the Colony, in satisfaction of the judgment. The money had been taken from F. when arrested for a raid on the Colony, and the Treasurer objected to the attachment, on the ground that he had a counter claim against F. for moneys stolen from the post, part of which consisted of remittances sent by Government by post. F. had not been convicted of the theft, but he had been tried for murder and sentenced to death, the sentence being commuted into imprisonment for life.

Held, that as the Treasurer would have the same defences against the applicant or against the Sheriff or against a purchaser of F.'s claim as he would have against F. himself, the order of attachment should not be granted.

This was an application upon notice to the Treasurer to show cause why the Sheriff should not be authorised to attach certain moneys lately in the hands of one Jan Hendrik Ferreira, in satisfaction of a judgment of this Court at the suit of the present applicant against the said Ferreira.

The case arose out of the raid on the north-western border, led by Ferreira, in November last. Jacob Bergmann (the applicant) had a store at Karos, near Upington, from which he alleged that the freebooters led by Ferreira took away goods of the value of £73 2s. 6d. In June last he issued summons against Ferreira, and on the 5th July he obtained judgment against him for £73 2s. 6d., with interest and costs. A writ was taken out, to which a return of nulla bona was made. Applicant now said that when Ferreira was captured a sum of £75 was found upon his person, and taken possession of by the police. This sum, he claimed, should be attached in execution of the judgment he had obtained against Ferreira.

For the Government, an affidavit by the Postmaster-General was read, from which it appeared that the Government had considerable claims against the raiders, including those of individuals whose goods had been stolen. The mails were robbed by the freebooters led by Ferreira, and a number of registered letters and parcels and remittances were stolen. A few of the articles were recovered. Amongst the registered goods missing were rings, silver watches, etc. The total value of the articles which had been stolen was £104 16s. 1½d. For certain of these the Government was liable, up to a certain amount. When the freebooters were captured a sum of £101 13s. 6d. was found upon the persons of Ferreira and one of his followers, Jooste. This money was handed to the Civil Commissioner of Gordonia, who deposited it in his supplementary cash, and he was instructed to transfer same to deponent as a set-off against the amount stolen.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones, for applicant; Mr. H. Jones, K.C., for respondent.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones said supposing Bergmann had first caught Ferreira and relieved him of the £100, and other persons prior to Bergmann had got judgment against him, surely Bergmann could not be heard to say that he had recouped himself for the amount he had lost. What preference could the Government establish in the matter? The Government found the money in his possession, and instead of holding it for such persons as it might concern, they took the money to meet indirect claims they had against Ferreira. That was altogether wrong in principle. The Government could not take the money and distribute it between such claims they might have without regard to the other person. There was no judgment creditor before the Court except the applicant.

Mr. Howel Jones said that there was no proof whatever that this money belonged to Ferreira. The applicant had to satisfy the Court that this money was part of Ferreira's assets. The other presumption was that the property was not that of Ferreira. Here was a notorious freebooter and robber who robbed a mail. He took a large quantity of jewellery, merchandise, and cash, and shortly afterwards he was found in possession of large sums of money. Surely all the circumstances went to show that the presumption that this property belonged to Ferreira was wrong. Assuming the property belonged to Ferreira, that it was his bona fide property, and that he sued the Government for the recovery, then the Government could put up a counter-claim for moneys due by him to them, in an action. On an application of this sort it was impossible for the Court to find that this was Ferreira's money and that the Government had not right of set-off.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones, in reply, said that the only case he knew of to show the rights of a judgment creditor as to moneys lying in the hands of a third party was that of Macintosh v. Both (13 S.C.R.). Until the Government identified the money and proved satisfactorily that it could have been no other money, he contended that money found in the possession of Ferreira was his own.

Hopley, J., said counsel had better see if they could find any authorities in the matter. It seemed to him to be a legal point which required a certain amount of investigation. He would be glad if either counsel could find authority, as it seemed to him to be a point which could not be settled off-hand, and one which would require looking into more deeply.

Postea (December 2nd). The case was again argued before De Villiers, C.J., and Hopley, J.

The Chief Justice: Has any action been brought by the Government against Ferreira?

Mr. Howel Jones: No, my lord; practically we could not take action after the application was made to the Court.

Mr. Justice Hopley: Is your position at present that you are holding the money for Ferreira?

Mr. Howel Jones said that the Government position in regard to this claim was that Bergmann had to show that it was Ferreira's money. Then, if the money did belong to Ferreira, the Postmaster-General was in the position of a bailee of this money. If it had been stolen he had an action against Ferreira, and if Ferreira were to bring an action the Postmaster-General would meet him with a counter-claim. The applicant could have no greater right over the money than Ferreira had.

Mr. P. Jones said that this money was found in the possession of Ferreira. The presumption was that the money was his until it was definitely shown that that identical money was stolen by Ferreira. Until that be proved by the Government, any judgment creditor of Ferreira was entitled to say that he should be allowed to execute upon that money. When they made application for leave to execute upon that money it was for the Government to show that it was not Ferreira's money, but money stolen from other persons and in the possession of postal officials. The presumption was in favour of the contention that this was Ferreira's money until it was shown that it was not his and belonged to other persons. Counsel referred to Act 34, 1902.

The Chief Justice: The case stood over for authorities to be cited. Has the Court ever attached moneys in the hands of the Government?

Mr. P. Jones said he must admit that he had not been able to find any particular case. Proceeding, he submitted that until the Government could show that they were holding the money for and on behalf of anybody else, the applicant was entitled to attach it. Respondents were really claiming a preference as against a judgment creditor. They had no judgment; they had simply an indirect liability to third parties who had entrusted certain goods to them. Counsel cited Rez v. Barnett (3 Carrington and Payne, 600). The Government had not traced any of the articles sent by the post into the hands of Ferreira. The most that their affidavits went to show was that £32 in money had been stolen from the post-bags. The affidavits were not clear even on the point that the remittances were in cash.

Mr. Howel Jones said that his learned friends' case was based on the allegation that this money found upon Ferreira belonged to him. Unless he proved that, he could not succeed in this application. He had given no proof at all that this was Ferreira's money. Applicant might have got an affidavit from Ferreira as to the original ownership of the property, but he had not done so.

Cur. Adr. Fult.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How much was there really in Ferreira's possession?]

Mr. Howel Jones said that, according to the applicant's affidavits, the amount found in Ferreira's possession was £75. Proceeding, he said his learned friend had argued that the presumption was that this was Ferreira's money. In looking at the presumption in a case like this, they must have regard to the surrounding circumstances. Here was a notorious robber out on a free-booting errand, and in the course of his free-booting he robbed the Post Office, and got jewellery and cash into his possession. Even assuming that this was Ferreira's bona fide property, he submitted that Bergman had not got any better claim to the money than Ferreira himself. Of the amount of £104, representing the losses of the Post Office, there was an amount of £41 which was actually Post Office money. Counsel cited Melville v. Hooper (3 Juta, 261), and In re the Winkfield (L.R., Prob. Div., 1902, p. 42). The Postmaster-General would have a right to retain this money as a set-off against any claim that Ferreira might bring, and Bergman could have no greater rights than Ferreira.

Mr. P. Jones having been heard in reply,

Cur. Adr. Fult.

Postea (December 9th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application for an order authorising the Sheriff to attach certain moneys in the hands of the Treasurer of the Colony, in satisfaction of a judgment granted by this Court in an action brought by the applicant against one Ferreira. The action was for the value of goods taken from the applicant's store by Ferreira and his accomplices during their recent raid. At the time of his capture, Ferreira had a sum of money in his possession, which, under the Prison Regulations, was taken possession of by the Government, and it is that money which the applicant now wishes to attach. The Treasurer opposes the application, on the ground that the Government has a claim against Ferreira for robbery of the post, containing a number of registered letters and parcels, as well as remittances sent by the Government itself acting through the postmaster at Upington. The Postmaster-General in his affidavit states that "when the free-booters were captured, money to the extent of £101 was found upon the persons of Ferreira and Jooste, and that this money was handed to the Civil Commissioner of Gordonia, who deposited it in his supplementary cash, and has been instructed by the Assistant Treasurer to transfer the same to the Postmaster-General, as a set-off against the amount stolen." It is unnecessary at this stage to decide whether a set-off does in law exist in respect of the whole amount of the loss sustained by the Government through the post robbery. As to the remittances made by the Government itself, it is clear that if the Government were sued by Ferreira for restoration of the money taken from him on his capture, it could compensate against such a claim its counter-claim for the amount of remittances proved to have been taken by Ferreira from the post-bags, but it is not equally clear that such a right of compensation would exist in respect of any counter-claim the Government might have by reason of its having to pay the senders of valuables or remittances by the post. The position, therefore, is this, that the Government does not admit that it is liable to return to Ferreira any portion of the money taken from him, and the question to be determined is whether the Court should, against the will of the Government, attach the money in execution of the applicant's judgment. Although ample time was allowed to the parties for the production of authorities, no case was cited in which this Court has ever ordered an attachment of moneys in the hands of the Government in execution of a judgment. All moveable property of the execution debtor may, under section 8 of Ordinance 37 of 1923 be attached, and there is no reason why debts owing to the debtor should not be so attached. Even under the cumbersome process of execution which formerly existed in the Netherlands, the attachment of the debt was complete when the sheriff had given notice to the judgment debtor, as well as to his debtor, that the debt was attached, and that the amount thereof was not to be paid (Matt. De auctionib. 1-6-17). I understand that under our practice the sheriff does not attach debts without an order of Court, nor does he attach moneys in the hands of the debtor of the execution debtor without such order. It is clear, however, that whether the sheriff himself calls upon the debtor of the execution debtor to pay the amount, or whether the purchaser of the debt in execution does so, it is competent for the debtor or the execution debtor to raise any defences against the claim that he might have raised against the original claim. The Court is asked in the present case to decide on motion the important question whether the Government would have a valid defence to an action brought by Ferreira to recover the amount in the hands of the Government. Such an action could be instituted under the Crown Liabilities Act, 1888, but, even if it were decided against the Government, no execution or attachment or process in the nature thereof could be issued against the defendants or against any property of the Crown. The execution creditor in the present case has no greater rights against the Government than the execution debtor would have enjoyed. If the debt owing by the Government be attached and sold, the purchaser would be entitled to sue the Government for the debt. The Government could then set up any defence which it had as against Ferreira, and if judgment should be given against the Government, the Treasurer of the Colony would have authority to pay the amount awarded, but no execution could issue against him. By granting the order now asked for the Court would in effect order execution against the Government, because the coins taken from Ferreira have been paid out, and the Government has expressed its unwillingness to pay the amount to the applicant. The application must, therefore, be refused, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

HOWARD FARRAR, ROBINSON & 1907.
AND CO. V. CLARKE. { Dec. 9th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate, at Port St. John's, on an action which came before his Court, and in which Messrs. Howard Farrar, Robinson and Co. of East London, sued the defendant, Lancelot Clarke, jun., of Lissikwisi, to recover £6 11s. 1d., balance of an overdue account, with interest thereon. The action was dismissed, with absolution from the instance, by the Magistrate.

The defendant is a farmer, residing in Pondoland, and had dealt with the plaintiffs for some time. In September, 1905, he required some belting for some machinery, and ordered it from plaintiffs, who, being unable to supply it from East London, communicated with their Durban branch, who supplied it, and, in due course, forwarded an account for it, amounting to £7 10s. This amount the defendant in due course forwarded to the East London branch, who replied, stating that the cost of the belting was £12 10s., and that they had placed the £7 10s. to his credit, and demanded the balance of £5, which he declined to pay. A sum of 15s. freight on the rubber was overlooked, and after some correspondence had passed, defendant tendered the 15s., but it would not be accepted without the costs to date, which he refused to pay.

Mr. Bisset appeared for the appellants (plaintiffs in the Court below); Mr. P. S. T. Jones appeared for the respondent (defendant in the court below).

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the defendant ordered belting from the plaintiffs' firm at East London, and the plaintiffs sent on the order to their firm at Durban. From there certain belting was supplied to the defendant at St. John's. Shortly after receiving the belting the defendant also received an account from the firm at Durban, from which it would appear that he was charged for the belting at the rate of 9d. per foot, amounting in all to £7 10s. On receiving that account he settled that item, together with others, by a remittance to East London. Upon the East London firm receiving the remittance they informed the defendant that the charge made for the belting was incorrect, and that it should have been the usual charge, and that the true charge should have been £12 10s. The defendant, however, refused to pay, saying he had already settled the former account. Now, without deciding the question at all as to whether the plaintiffs' firm, having sent an account, which was subsequently found to be incorrect, were or were not entitled to correct that account by subsequently charging the correct indebtedness to the defendant, I may say that the question rather takes the form in which it was treated by the Magistrate. It is quite possible that it would have been in the power of the plaintiffs subsequently to send in a correct account. It does not quite appear for what purpose the first account was sent. It is said that it was not intended to represent the amount due by the defendant to the plaintiff, but was only sent for Customs purposes. However, the defendant took it that it was a correct account, and he settled it. The plaintiff then comes into Court, and it lies with him to prove that he has sent belting to the defendant for which the right charge is £12 10s. and not £7 10s. No witnesses, however, appeared on behalf of the plaintiff, who saw the belting which was despatched from Durban, and only the person who supplied the article could swear to the usual charge that the firm made for such an article. It appears from the evidence for the defendant that really a very inferior article was sent, and that it was not what he expected. Now, it is quite possible that the plaintiff's bookkeeper in East London may be under the impression that quite a different article was sent to the defendant from what the defendant says he received, but the result is that there was no evidence before the Magistrate to prove that the article sent from Durban was one usually charged at £12 10s., which would in this instance be a contract price between them and the defendant. If a person orders an article without agreeing to the price, he is supposed to contract for the usual price charged by the shopman. We must, therefore, have evidence as to what the usual charge is for the article sold but there is no evidence of any witness who has seen the article supplied to the defendant. Therefore there is no evidence before the Court as to the usual charge for the article. Under the circumstances, I think the Magistrate was perfectly right in his judgment, considering the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence. It appears that when this claim was made by the plaintiffs a small item was lost sight of by defendant, to which his attention was only called after some expense had been incurred. That was a charge of 15s. for the shipping expenses, but on discovering that he tendered to the plaintiff 15s., with the costs of summons. Now, it appears that, besides the summons, other sums were due for costs. There was no question raised as to whether the tender was sufficient in view of the costs, but it was immediately rejected by the plaintiff. It is quite clear that the plaintiff would not have accepted it together with costs up to date. I think the plaintiff was entitled to the order which the Magistrate offered to make at the trial, and which I think he should have made without any reference to the plaintiffs' agent, that was judgment for 15s., with costs up to the date of the tender. The Court will now alter the judgment to one of 15s., with costs up to the date of tender, and of absolution with respect to the rest of the plaintiffs' claim, and as I come to the conclusion that the difference between the parties as to the tender of 15s., was not a material consideration, in bringing this appeal, the appellant will be ordered to pay the costs of appeal and the costs subsequent to the tender.

LYONS V. WHEELER.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate at Woodstock, dismissing an action, in which Sol. H. Lyons sought to recover from Thos. H. Wheeler, promoter of the Maitland-Belville Tramway Co., the sum of £50, commission due under a certain agreement.

It appeared that when defendant got concessions from the Divisional Council to run the tram between Maitland and Belville, he agreed to pay plaintiff 5 per cent. for services rendered in floating the company. The scheme fell through, and the plaintiff sued the defendant to recover the sum of £50, fees due, but the Resident Magistrate dismissed the action.

The Magistrate, in his reasons, stated that defendant pleaded no consideration, the services referred to not having been rendered. After giving the evidence careful consideration, he felt convinced that though the document sued upon contained the words "in consideration of services rendered," as a matter of fact, no services had been rendered by plaintiff excepting the drafting of the memorandum of agreement, and possibly some few interviews with different people. The position of affairs was recognised by both the parties, and the £50 was not to be paid until the £1,000 was raised, and the purchase of the half-share commenced. This part of the scheme was abandoned by mutual consent, and a fresh arrangement was made. For these reasons plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment for the £50.

Mr. Upington appeared for applicant and Mr. Bisset for respondent.

Maasdorp, J.: Some time before the 29th of February, 1907, Wheeler got a concession from the Cape Divisional Council for the construction of a certain tramway, but found it necessary, in order to carry out his scheme, to raise some money, and he proposed doing so by disposing of half a share in this concession. Amongst others, he seems to have spoken to Lyons, and Lyons and Wheeler together made an effort to obtain purchasers for this half-share. It is quite possible that the services of other persons were also utilised for this purpose. By the 28th of February, it appeared that some substantial services had been rendered by Lyons, and he must have considered himself therefore entitled to some remuneration. The document which is now sued upon was consequently executed. In it Wheeler promises, in consideration of the services rendered by Lyons in connection with the raising of capital for the purchase price of half a share of the Tramway Concession, to pay the sum of £50, and the sum was to be paid on the completion of the purchase. In my opinion the document must be construed to mean for past services, which were to be paid for upon a certain condition happening. The Magistrate in his judgment refers to it as embracing future services, and that payment depended on the performance of such services. Now, that is not necessarily so. The money has to be paid on the completion of the said purchase of a half-share. Now, that may have happened without Lyons rendering any further services, and he would have been entitled to his £50, but confusion has arisen, because this document is associated with another, which was drawn up on the same day, and in taking these two documents together, it will be found that the Magistrate's conclusion, although it is not stated in strictly legal terms is, on the whole, correct. On February 27 it was found that Lyons had already performed some service for which he had to be paid, but at the same time it was necessary to secure his services for the future, and that was done by Wheeler giving a further promise to pay Lyons £200 for services he may render in securing the necessary purchasers to purchase the half-share for £1,200. That is how it comes about that in order to perform the condition upon which the first promise to pay becomes due, some services are expected from Lyons himself. The position then was this, not that the completion of the contract depended simply on Wheeler passing the purchase through, and thereupon becoming liable to Lyons for the £50, but the two together undertook to endeavour to bring about the success of this scheme. That is why the Magistrate seems to regard the future service of Lyons as a condition precedent to payment, although it was not necessarily so, since the mere fact of the purchase being brought about would entitle Lyons to payment. Still, now, Lyons becomes a party to the endeavour to secure this purchase, and if he had succeeded, he would have been entitled to both his £200 and £50. He has failed to bring about the purchase, and that failure stands in his way. The failure is not due to Wheeler, but merely because the circumstances would not allow of success to either party. Later on a stage was reached when Wheeler and Lyons understood that it was no longer profitable to try and push the matter through. Under the circumstances, the Magistrate has based his decision on the ground that the payment depended on future consideration—yet his ultimate decision is right, because, although the payment did not depend on future consideration, still the conditions which had to be performed virtually amounted to future services to be rendered, and in my opinion, therefore, the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

EATON, ROBINS AND CO. V. S. 1907.
MEYERS. (Dec. 10th.)

Mr. H. S. van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £65 2s. 1d., with interest from the 30th September, and costs.

Order granted.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V.
DUMBLETON.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £33 18s., with interest from the 15th September, and costs.

Order granted.

CHADWICK V. STOTT.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on an I.O.U. for £36, defendant having paid two instalments of £3 10s. a month, and failed to pay further instalments.

Defendant said that he had lost his employment, and had been unable to pay further instalments.

Final judgment granted.

AFRICAN HOMES TRUST, LTD. V. ROHM.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £624 13s. 9d., with interest from the 1st August, 1906, less £35 2s. paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable and the rents attached, and also for certain certificate for £800, ceded to and held by plaintiffs as collateral security, to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE SMITH V. SADIE.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for £89 19s. 6d., being interest on a certain mortgage bond for £1,300.

Order granted.

BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. SADIE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,700, with interest from the 8th June, 1904, less £38 5s. paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

HERHOLDT V. THERON AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,400, with interest from the 1st November, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

HOFMEYER V. HOLLOWAY.

Dr. Rainsford moved for a provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, with interest from the 1st January, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

QUINE V. COHEN AND } 1907.
ANOTHER. } Dec. 10th.

Mr. Alexander moved for judgment under Rule 319, in default of plea, for £109 3s. 2d., moneys lent and expended on behalf of defendants. Counsel explained that, after the defendants had been barred and the case had been set down for judgment, a plea was tendered to plaintiff, but without any offer to pay plaintiff's wasted costs. The first defendant had been committed for trial on a criminal charge.

Mrs. Cohen, who appeared, said it was not her debt, and that she was married by ante-nuptial contract.

Mr. Alexander said the defendants had carried on business together, the licence being in the name of the second defendant.

Judgment entered as prayed, subject to being set aside on defendants paying to plaintiff's attorney £5 towards costs. If the amount be paid, defendants to be given leave to purge default and file plea, payment to be made before the 31st December next.

ETTLINGER V. SHOCKER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of defendant in the action (Ettlinger), for leave to sign judgment against plaintiff, with costs in this court and the Magistrate's Court, for not proceeding with his action within the time fixed by Rules of Court. Counsel explained that the case had been removed from the Magistrate's Court, under section 3 of Act 21, 1876. He quoted Rules 25 and 330 (a).

Respondent Shocker stated that he was too poor to proceed with the action, and that there had been some negotiations with a view of arbitrating on the matter in dispute.

Mr. Jones said he believed Shocker had already applied for leave to sue in forma pauperis, but that counsel, on looking into the petition, declined to certify probabilis causa.

Judgment granted, with Magistrate's Court costs, and costs of this motion, and leave reserved to plaintiff to apply for such costs in any future action or arbitration proceedings.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Palmer applied, under section 117 of the Ordinance, for the discharge from insolvency of Richard Page.
Granted.

Mr. Gutsche applied for the discharge of John Wolstenholme.
Granted.

Ex parte KELLERMAN.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Jacobus J. Kellerman, of the Worcester district, for an interdict restraining the Messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Worcester, from proceeding with execution against his movables pending an application by petitioner for leave to surrender his estate as insolvent. It appeared that judgment had been taken against petitioner by J. W. Jagger and Co., and another creditor, and that his movables had been attached in execution. He had, however, given notice to surrender his estate on the 9th inst. to one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, but, owing to an informality, an amended notice had been issued for surrender on the 16th inst. Before that date the period allowed by section 11 of Act 17, 1876, for stay of execution would have expired, and petitioner desired to restrain the Messenger from selling or disposing of his movables pending sequestration.

Buchanan, J., asked whether notice had been given to the judgment creditors.

Mr. Van Zyl said that the application was made ex parte. He quoted sections 1 and 2 of Act 38, 1884, and section 11 of Act 17, 1876.

Buchanan, J., said that it would be a pity to stop the sale now if the expense of advertising had been incurred. An order would be granted restraining the Messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court from paying over the proceeds of any sale held by him until the 17th inst. He also directed that, should the sequestration of applicant's estate be granted, costs of this application be paid out of the estate as part of the costs of sequestration.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN { 1907.
HEERDEN. { Dec. 10th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on the petition of the executor testamentary in the estate of the late Aletta M. van Heerden, for leave to sell certain property in the division of Cra-dock. Certain minors were interested.

It appeared that an advantageous offer had been received for the property. The Master's report was favourable.

Order in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte ESTATE KOTZE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on behalf of the executor testamentary, for leave to pass a bond of £1,000 on mortgage of farm property in the district of Colesberg, in order to pay off certain liabilities, etc.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE EXLEY AND CO.

Mr. Howes moved, on the petition of Harry Hands, as trustee in the insolvent estate of Charles Exley and Co., for recognition of his appointment in the Transvaal, where certain of the assets in the estate were situated.

[Buchanan, J.: There has been no reciprocity established yet under the Act of Parliament?]

Mr. Howes said he thought not.

Buchanan, J.: We have recognised Transvaal trustees, and the Transvaal Courts will recognise ours. An order will be granted asking for process in aid.

Ex parte MURDOCH.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on behalf of petitioner, for leave to sue her husband by edictal citation, and in forma pauperis, for divorce.

Referred to counsel for report petitioner to appear personally before the Court on the 12th December.

Ex parte INTRONA.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the amendment of certain deeds of transfer and mortgage bonds by the substitution of petitioner's correct name. Petitioner was an Italian residing at East London, and he stated that the mistake was due to the fact that he was illiterate, and did not know what was the correct spelling of his name.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte FRYER.

Mr. Burton, K.C., moved, on the petition of R. C. Fryer, of Calvinia division, for an order for the attachment of the persons of respondents for contempt of Court by reason of their non-compliance with an order granted by the Court on May 1, 1907, for transfer of certain land purchased by applicants from the late Jacobus Adrian Louw on the 25th August, 1893. The respondents were Maria Anna Louw, Adrian J. Louw, Jacobus W. Louw, and Wallace L. Louw, of the division of Calvinia, and Bismarcke von Mollate Louw, as executrix and executors testamentary in the estate of the late Jacobus Adrian Louw. Counsel said that no explanation was given as to why the respondents had failed to give transfer as directed.

Rule granted in terms of prayer "B" of the petition, personal service to be effected, rule returnable on the 12th January.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE JENKS.

Mr. Inchbold moved for an order authorising the registration of a certain transfer.

Granted.

VAN ZYL V. VAN ZYL.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the appointment of a commission de bene esse at Christiana, Transvaal.

Granted. Commission to be held by Magistrate at Kimberley. Notice to be served on the defendant of the date of the sitting of the commission.

Ex parte ESTATE MYERS.

Mr. Payne, on behalf of the trustee, moved for leave to sell certain property.

Granted.

Ex parte VAN DER WALT.

Mr. Wallach moved for an order authorising the amendment of a certain deed, for the purpose of inserting the second name of the applicant.

Granted.

Ex parte DE WET.

Dr. Greer moved for leave to mortgage certain property, for the purpose of educating applicant's son, Cornelius de Wet. The Master, in his report, stated that the School Board Act provided for the education of a child of eight years for some years. He suggested that if the order was granted, the money should be placed in the hands of the Board of Executors, and paid out from time to time. Counsel contended that the section of the School Board Act referred to by the Master would not be applicable in this case.

In view of a clause in the transfer to the effect that the land should not be hypothecated for debt, Mr. Greer said he did not see how he could ask for the application.

No order for the present was made.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

HALL V. INSOLVENT ESTATE { 1907.
KLAASSEN. { Dec. 11th.

Lease—Hire—Suspensive condition—Passing of dominium.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be interdicted from selling certain goods. The applicant claimed the goods in question, which were on a farm in the Laingsburg district, hired by one Klaassen from the applicant. The respondent was the trustee in the insolvent estate of Klaassen, and he claimed that the goods belonged to the estate of Klaassen. Applicant said that Klaassen agreed to buy the goods in question, comprising an oil-engine, mill, stock-in-trade, etc., and to pay for same by instalments, but it was agreed that the dominium should not pass until all the instalments had been paid. Applicant held a covering bond over the movables, but the respondent contended this was in the nature of an undue preference. Respondent further referred to a judgment of the Resident Magistrate in a certain matter, in which it was held that the goods were sold by applicant to Klaassen, and that the dominium had passed. In replying affidavits, it was stated on behalf of the applicant that the bond was passed in the ordinary course, and after the applicant had paid all the claims which Klaassen said his creditors had against him, and after the judgment of the Magistrate.

Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant; Mr. Molteno for the respondent.

Mr. Molteno, in argument, contended that there could be no change of ownership by agreement, that no change could take place without handing over delivery of the goods and taking possession of them. He referred to the cases of Orson v. Reynolds (2 Appeal Cases, p. 102), Hofmeyr v. Gous (10 Juta, p. 115), and Payne v. Yates (9 Juta, p. 497).

Without calling upon Mr. Gardiner, the Court made the rule absolute, with costs.

Buchanan, J.: The affidavit that was before the judge in Chambers sets forth that the applicant had leased certain landed property, together with a certain oil-engine and other movables to one Klaassen, whose estate has since been sequestered. The petition goes on to say that after this lease Klaassen permitted certain of his creditors to attach certain of the property so leased, that thereupon an interpleader action was brought before the Resident Magistrate of Laingsburg, who decided that the goods were executable at the instance of the creditors, and that, thereafter, without contesting the matter any further, Hall settled with these creditors, and entered into a new agreement with Klaassen, who, of course, was not then insolvent. The objection that the facts were not sufficiently disclosed in the first instance therefore falls away. In this agreement it is stated that these are the goods of the lessor, and did not belong to the lessee, now insolvent. Learned counsel for the respondent has quoted cases which lay down the law that there could be no valid pledging of movables without delivery, but in this case the goods were not the goods of a pledgee pledging them to a creditor. They were goods which belonged to a creditor, and which were leased on what is known as the lease-hire system in this country. The dominium of the property never passed from the owner of the goods, and they were leased under the express condition that the dominium was to remain with the owner of the goods until they were paid for. The present creditors were not parties to the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court, when the interpleader action was heard, so that they are not in position to take advantage of any benefits which accrued to the execution creditors in those proceedings. The applicant is entitled to oppose such goods being sold in the insolvent estate, and the rule nisi must be made absolute, as regards so much of the goods as are the property of the applicant, with costs, but this order will not affect the applicant's lien as landlord, or his claim under his bond to preference on the rest of the estate; or to prejudice any further legal proceedings the trustee may take.

FINKELSTEIN V. FINKELSTEIN.

Costs — Discretion of taxing officer.

This was an application for a review of taxation.

The application arose out of proceedings in the Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn, in a case in which the present applicant—the wife—sued for judicial separation. The learned judge (Sir John Buchanan) granted the order, with costs, but with regard to the costs of two applications—one for alimony and one for an interdict—the Court made the following order: "Defendant to pay costs of suit, to include the costs of only one application to the Supreme Court for alimony and interdict."

The taxing officer disallowed all costs in connection with the application for an interdict, but applicant contended that there were costs which should be allowed, inasmuch as they were costs which would have been incurred even if the applications for alimony and interdict had been made in one application. The taxing officer reported that as the application for the interdict was made on the assumption that there was community of property, and as at the trial it was shown that there was not marriage in community, the application for the interdict was unnecessary, and he interpreted the order of Court as meaning that the costs of only the application for alimony should be allowed.

Mr. Alexander was for the applicant; Mr. Bisset (with him Mr. Howse) was for the respondent.

After hearing counsel in argument, the Court refused the application, with costs.

Buchanan, J.: This is not an appeal from the judgment given in the Circuit Court, but is only a motion for a construction of that judgment as regards costs. In the action between husband and wife, two applications were made in the Supreme Court, one for an interdict and the other for payment of money in advance as alimony. Both these applications were granted in the Supreme Court, costs of these applications being made costs in the cause. That, I take it, means, generally, they were referred to the Judge to deal with when deciding on the question of costs at the trial. There were several matters in dispute between the parties at the trial, and after dealing with all the different issues, the judgment goes on to say, as recorded by the Registrar: "The defendant to pay costs of suit, to include the costs of only one application to the Supreme Court for alimony and interdict." I was the Judge at the Circuit Court, and my own note in the book is: "Costs to include costs of only one application in the Supreme Court," with a note which specifies that the applications referred to were the two for the interdict and for alimony. Now, the Master, to whom this has been referred for taxation, exercised his discretion, as I think he ought to exercise his discretion, in determining what costs were necessary. He has followed the strict letter of the order and allowed costs on only one of the two applications in the Supreme Court. In deciding which of the two applications he would allow the costs of, he takes the application for alimony, and the reason he gives is that when the matter came on for trial it was discovered that it was not necessary to have made any application as all for an interdict. The application for an interdict was founded on the idea that the parties were married in community of property. As there was no community of property, the taxing officer held, and I think properly held, that there would have been no interdict granted if it had not been for the allegation that there was marriage in community. The taxing officer has strictly followed the judgment in allowing the costs only of one application, and I do not think he was wrong in the course he followed. The ground which influenced me in giving the order was that altogether unnecessary costs were incurred in making two applications when one could have been made. In this case I cannot say the taxing officer was wrong, and the application must be refused, with costs.

Ex parte DE WET.

Dr. Greer moved, on behalf of the petitioner, for leave to mortgage certain property at Gubenxa, Elliott, belonging to his son, a minor, Cornelius de Wet, in order to pay for the minor's education.

The Master reported that the minor was only eight years of age, and the School Board Act probably provided for his education, but if the Court granted the application, then the money should be paid into the Guardians' Fund.

The matter had been before the Court on the previous day, and adjourned for further inquiry. Counsel now referred to section 2 of Act 40 of 1906.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

CRIMINAL APPEALS.

REX V. SCHARFF. { 1907.
Dec. 11th.

Public place—Abusive of obscene language—Act 27 of 1882, Sec. 5, Sub-sec. 18.

S. had been convicted of "using abusive and obscene language" to G. to the annoyance of the inhabitants in a public place. S., when using the language complained of, and also G. were standing on their respective stoeps which adjoined each other, and both abutted on the public road.

Held on appeal, that S. had been rightly convicted.

This was an appeal by Annie Scharff from a decision of the Resident Magistrate at the Keimoes Periodical Court, fining her £1 for contravening subsection 18, section 5 of Act 27 of 1882, in that on August 23 she wrongfully and unlawfully made use of abusive, obscene, insulting, or threatening language to the annoyance of the inhabitants in a public street or road.

From the evidence it appeared that Mrs. Goldberg, a neighbour of appellant, was sitting with her child on her own stoep when appellant's child joined her. Her husband called the child back, and as he did not come, beat him, when defendant made use of the language complained of. She was sitting on her stoep at the time.

Dr. Greer for applicant; Mr. Nightingale for respondent.

Dr. Greer submitted that, under section 10 of the Act the action of the defendant must be to the annoyance of the inhabitants and in a street, road, or public place. He contended that the stoep was part of the house, and, therefore, not in a public place.

[Hopley, J.: Under section 18 of the Act, if one stands inside his drawing-room window and uses abusive language that can be heard in the street, he would come under the 18th section.]

Dr. Greer, in support of his contention that a stoep was not a public place, quoted the cases of Rex v. Cullie (22 S.C.R., page 614), where it was held that a shop was not a public place; Rex v. Muller (16 S.C.R., page 534); Rex v. Steynersdelt (19 S.C.R., page 39); Rex v. Crozier (22 S.C.R., page 182), and further contended that the language complained of was not to the annoyance of the inhabitants, as Mrs. Goldberg was the only inhabitant called who made any complaint of the language used, and she was the party most affected.

Mr. Nightingale submitted that the language was perfectly audible to anybody in the vicinity, and, as proof of it, a gentleman passing through the street at the time stopped to listen. He submitted that the stoep of a house abutting on the road was a public place, although it might be private property.

[Hopley, J.: The difficulty I find is, is it a public place? Take the literal meaning of the section. Does it mean swearing or causing annoyance in any street, road, or public place, to the annoyance of the inhabitants, or does it mean causing annoyance to the inhabitants in a street, road, or public place by swearing, etc. ?]

Mr. Nightingale said they had an analogy in the case of indecent exposure.

[Hopley, J.: That is Common Law, and this is one of the Statutes.]

Mr. Nightingale submitted that for a place to be public, it was not required that there should be no private ownership. A public place was a place to which the public had access. In England a railway carriage was held to be a public place.

[Hopley, J.: How is the bar of a canteen treated?]

Mr. Nightingale: That is provided for in section 10.

Dr. Greer submitted in reply, that in the case of Her v. Crozier it was held that a shop was not a public place, and that was very strong evidence in support of making the stoep of a man's house not a public place.

[Hopley, J.: But a man can shut his door and make his shop private.]

Hopley, J.: In this case the accused was charged with contravening sub-section 18 of section 5 of Act 27 of 1882 in that upon the 23rd day of August she made use of abusive, obscene, and threatening language to the annoyance of the inhabitants in a public street or road. Then the words are given. The words as given in the charge, and believed by the Magistrate, on sufficient evidence to have been uttered, are of an extremely abusive, obscene and insulting nature, and it is perfectly clear that this woman in her rage made use of such intemperate and prohibited language. The only two points that arise are as to whether she made use of them in a public street or road, and whether it was to the annoyance of the inhabitants or not. Now, as to the annoyance of the inhabitants, the person to whom the remarks referred was an inhabitant, as was also her little boy, who was on the stoep with her, and even if no other inhabitants heard it, they must have been annoyed. Even the person who was with the defendant said he never heard anything like it before, but he does not say he was annoyed, but if he was a decent-minded man, he must have been. There is quite enough evidence to show that these people were annoyed, and that they were inhabitants intended by the section, and that there were other people in the street, but it is quite unnecessary to call everybody within ear-shot. The only point left is whether this was a public place or not. The language was used from one stoep to another, and both of these stoeps abut on the street. Can it be said that because words are shouted from one stoep to another along a street, instead of across, that it is not just as likely to be heard. Sound is not confined to the place from which it emanates. Although language may be used by a person stationed or in motion at a place which is his private property; still, if the sound travel to and the words can be distinguished at a place, road or street which is public, then it appears to me that the language is used in such public place quite as much as if the person uttering it were actually there. The other cases that have been decided seem not to touch the exact point we have to decide at present, as the real point the Court has to decide was whether the language used was such as to provoke a public breach of the peace." In the case of Crozier, which was quoted, the Chief Justice, at the conclusion of the judgment, said: "In the case of Brown, the person to whom the words were addressed was in the street, and the words were used in a public place, because they were intended to reach the person outside. Now, if two people are standing on adjoining stoeps, and the words used can and do reach the street, all I can say, as a matter of commonsense, is that I am prepared to hold that such behaviour comes under the mischief aimed at by the sub-section with which we are now dealing. The Magistrate has held the same view, and I do not see any reason for interfering with his decision. The appeal will be dismissed."

HEX V. GRONBECK.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Resident Magistrate at Upington fining Michael Cronbeck £3 for contravening section 250 of the Cape Police Regulations.

Under Regulation 250 it was the duty of the defendant to enter reports of occurrence in the occurrence book or diary immediately it was possible to do so, but in the case of a man Gertse, although removed from a farm to Rietfontein, and there given a pass to another part of the country, this matter was not entered in the occurrence book, and for this breach of the regulations Cronbeck was fined.

Mr. Wallach appeared for appellant; Mr. Nightingale appeared for respondent.

Mr. Wallach having been heard in argument,

Hopley, J., without calling on Mr. Nightingale. Accused was a policeman in charge of an out-station called Biesjespoort, on the borders of Gordonia, and as such, it was his duty to keep a diary at that out-station, properly written up. On a certain day he went on patrol with another white constable, who was under him, and a native constable. The evidence shows that they went on patrol to search for Hottentots who had come from German territory over our colonial border, the Germans having complained that rebels were escaping from them in that manner. They went to Saulstraat, some miles off, and there found a Hottentot named Gertse, whom they brought back to Biesjespoort with them. There were two versions as to how he was brought back. One that he came under compulsion, which was believed by the Magistrate, and this was borne out by the evidence of Philander, the interpreter, who had accompanied them. He says this man was actually arrested at Saulstraat, and brought to Biesjespoort. The other version, as given by the accused, was that the man came simply because one Petrus, who lives at Saulstraat, said that he was a nuisance, and he wanted him removed, and that Gertse agreed to go to Biesjespoort, where he could get a pass to go away. The Magistrate does not believe that, nor do I think it necessarily follows, as argued by Mr. Wallach, that we must believe all that Gronbeck said, because he was not cross-examined. It may be that nothing of importance could be extracted from him. Often witnesses are not cross-examined because of the palpable untruthfulness of their evidence. The Magistrate held that Gertse was brought under compulsion to Biesjespoort, but whether he was brought under compulsion or not, the fact remains that he travelled several hours' journey, and that was an occurrence that should have been entered in the diary, as every matter of importance should. That is what the policemen are given diaries for. Otherwise these policemen might do all sorts of atrocious things which they would not enter in the diary; they might hustle people about from farm to farm, and cause a lot of trouble and inconvenience, which would never be entered in the occurrence book. It is for that reason that the diary is kept, so that the inspector can see that they have been doing their work properly. To take a man from a farm and order him about the country are things which are not the duty of policemen, and which they have not the power to do, and if they have acted in that way, it should be entered in the diary. The Magistrate held that view, and found the accused guilty, and I cannot disagree with him. The appeal will be dismissed.

REX V. HEALEY.

Liquor licence — Indictment — Evidence of accomplice —
Act 28 of 1883, Sec. 73,
Sub-sec. 7.

This was an appeal from the decision of the A.R.M. at Cape Town, fining the appellant £3 for a breach of the Liquor Licensing Laws.

In the Court below, Patrick Thos. Healey, proprietor of the Hope Hotel, Hope-street, was charged on two counts with the crime of contravening sub-section 7 of section 73 of Act No. 28 of 1883 of the Liquor Laws, 1883-1904, in that, about June 30 and July 7, he did wrongfully and unlawfully sell certain intoxicating liquor to George Matthews and William Castledine Jones. There was a third count, but, on appeal, this was abandoned.

Mr. Close appeared for appellant, and Mr. Nightingale for respondent.

Mr. Close contended, in the course of argument, that there was no allegation that the accused sold drink without supplying either lunch or dinner, and, according to his licence, he was empowered to supply liquor with meals. The onus of proving that he did supply lunch or dinner did not lie with the accused, but with the Crown, and that onus they had not discharged. In the second count, he was charged with selling at a time when he was not authorised—at about 8 p.m. on Sunday. According to his licence, he was entitled to sell at that hour. The only material evidence was on the first count, and on that the witness, it was admitted, had a grudge against the defendant, and in his evidence was contradicted by Jones and the positive evidence for the defence.

Mr. Nightingale having been heard in reply,

Hopley, J.: In this case the accused, who is a publican, is charged on two counts, with contravening the 7th subsection of the 73rd section of the Liquor Licensing Act, in that upon a Sunday—the first count says—June 30, he sold at his licensed premises to one Matthews a certain quantity of intoxicating liquor, to wit a bottle of whisky for 7s. and a glass of whisky for 6d., at a time when under his licence he was not entitled to sell, to wit, in the morning. The second count charged him similarly with selling a week later to Matthews and Jones four bottles of stout at a time that he was not authorised by his licence to sell, and there is an alternative charge in connection with the same offence. As to the second of these counts, it seems to me that it must fail, because it is contradicted by the licence put in. The charge says that the accused, a licensed publican, sold at a time when he was not entitled to sell, to wit, at 8 p.m., and when you look at the licence it appears that he is licensed to sell between the hours of 7 and 9 to any person who pays for and consumes a bona fide luncheon or dinner. Now, when a licensed victualler is charged with supplying people with liquor on a Sunday between the hours during which he is entitled to supply a customer with liquor, provided he has luncheon or dinner, then the charge should state that a bona fide dinner or luncheon was not obtained, but when the accused is charged simply with selling at a time when he is not entitled to sell at, he may get confused, and the exact nature of the charge he has to answer may not strike him, so that he might neglect to call the evidence which would prove that the law and the terms of his licence had been complied with. I think, therefore, that that charge was badly drawn, and that it does not set forth the crime with which it was intended to charge the accused, and that it must fail for want of proper expression. The first count is also of rather an unsatisfactory nature. Although, strictly speaking, it states what the licence does not contradict. It states that the accused sold to Matthews a bottle of whisky and a drink at a time when he was not authorised to sell to witness on Sunday morning. Well, that is very vague. "During the morning" may have more than one meaning, and as the many people might think morning ran on until one o'clock, which would be within the time when accused was allowed to sell to bona fide travellers or diners, between 12 and 3 o'clock. The essence of the charge in this case ought to have been more satisfactorily stated, and there is no reason why it should not have been stated that the sale was at 10.30 in the morning, as was afterwards given in evidence, but they have not drawn it like that. I am not saying it is wrongly drawn, but I am just pointing this out. It is supported by the evidence of Matthews, and his is the only evidence in this case, that on the morning of Sunday, June 30, at 10.30, he went to the hotel private entrance and purchased a bottle of whisky from Mrs. Healey, and a glass of whisky, for which he paid 7s. 6d. on the Monday. It must be on that evidence alone that the Magistrate found the defendant guilty, and I think that there is much force in the contention for the appellant that the terms of section 12 of Ordinance 72, 1830, should apply to this case, and that there should be proof of the crime aliunde before the Magistrate was entitled to act upon the evidence of Matthews. It is indeed argued by the Crown that this man Matthews was not an accomplice in the commission of this crime, since the purchasing of liquor is not a crime, but that of selling is. But surely the purchaser must be an accomplice, because if he did not go there to purchase the crime would not have been committed. In this case there is not the slightest evidence of the crime being committed beyond the evidence of Matthews. He therefore stands as the sole prop of the whole charge. He comes and proves—if he proves it at all—that the crime was committed, and he says that the prisoner's agent was the person who committed the crime, therefore the whole case rests on him, and him alone. The question then resolves itself into whether Matthews must be regarded as such an accomplice as is contemplated by the 12th section aforesaid, because, if he is, the case against the accused must fail. The 10th section of the Ordinance defines an accomplice as one who has been either a principal in, or accessory to, the commission of a crime. One species of accessory is a person who procures the commission of a crime, and if a person goes up to another, who ought not to sell liquor, and procures him to sell, he is an accomplice as an accessory to the commission of crime. Matthews confesses himself to be an accessory, for he says he sneaked in at a private door and got the liquor and sneaked out again. Mrs. Healey denies that. There is no evidence to corroborate this man, and he must be looked on as an accomplice, and a conviction should not have taken place on his evidence only. I think the whole of the circumstances are so exceedingly unsatisfactory that I should not feel myself safe in confirming this decision. The Magistrate seems to have accepted his evidence, but I think any judge would have told a jury to be very careful before accepting the evidence of a person who appears most probably to have a grudge against the defendant, for he has been prosecuted for not leaving the premises of the defendant. Under such circumstances, I think the evidence in itself is tainted, because it is very possibly spiteful, and might very easily have been trumped up for the purpose of the case, and is exceedingly unsatisfactory. I think the only safe course to adopt, especially considering the grave circumstances to the defendant, and considering the nature of the evidence, the way the charge is drawn and the class of man Matthews is, is to quash the conviction and allow the appeal.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MICHAELSON V. WORBE. { 1907.
Dec. 12th.

Provisional sentence — Foreign judgment—Undue delay.

The plaintiff sued for provisional sentence upon a judgment obtained 15 years ago in the Court of Hamburg.

Held, that as facts were in dispute and plaintiff had unduly deferred the prosecution of his claim, provisional sentence must be refused.

Semble, the Court will recognize a judgment obtained in any competent court of a foreign friendly power.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence for £277 16s. 4d., on a judgment of the Hamburg (Germany) Divisional Court, with interest from the 9th May, 1892, in terms of judgment, and for £8 3s. 3d., taxed costs.

Mr. Benjamin, K.C., was for the defendant.

This matter was before the Court in September, and was then postponed in order that further affidavits should be filed.

An affidavit by the defendant was now read. He stated therein that in 1892 the plaintiff issued a summons against him, but agreed to withdraw the same, on his (defendant's) mother becoming surety for the debt. They agreed on the amount owing, and defendant's mother became surety. Defendant came to South Africa in 1893, and did not know until 1907 that judgment had been taken out against him.

The plaintiff, in answering affidavit, stated that the defendant's mother became surety only in respect of an old debt, which was subsequently liquidated. Thereafter Wobbe became indebted to him in a further amount, for which plaintiff obtained judgment in 1892.

Mr. Jones, in argument, referred to 4 Nathan's Common Law, p. 2,080, and to the cases of Hackett, Blaine and Co. v. Colonial Marine Insurance Co. (1 Sup. Court, 406), Jaffe v. Salman (Transvaal Sup. Court, 1904, p. 317), on the point of the jurisdiction of the Court in regard to the judgments of foreign Courts. On the question of whether the judgment was prescribed, counsel said that the point was whether the German law or the Cape law applied. If the Cape law, he would admit it was superannuated, but in that case he contended it could be revived, either by getting judgment in the way now taken, or by proceeding on notice of motion. Mr. Jones referred to the German Civil Code, paragraph 218, to show that the period of prescription in German law is thirty years, and to Nathan, p. 2,396, par. 2,457.

Mr. Benjamin said he would draw the Court's attention to the fact that there appeared to be no authentication of the judgment of the Court of Hamburg. The judgment was signed by the Registrar, but there was no authentication of his signature, as appeared to be usual, by some official, certifying that the person signing the judgment was the Registrar. Counsel referred to Benjamin v. Benjamin (1 E.D. Rep., 273). On the law point raised with regard to the prescription of action, counsel quoted section 2 of Act 6 of 1861. He contended, further, that before a judgment of a foreign Court could be enforced here, it must be revived in the country in which it was given. This was a stale judgment, and if the plaintiff had any claim, he should be made to go into the principal case.

Buchanan, J.: This is an application for provisional sentence upon a judgment of the Court of Hamburg, obtained by the plaintiff against the defendant. This judgment was obtained as far back as the year 1892. Our prescription Act prescribes a butcher's account, among other things, within a period of three years. Where a written document is obtained upon which provisional sentence can be obtained, the second section of the Act extends the period of prescription to eight years. The original debt arose in respect of cattle sold to a butcher's business, and really would stand more in the position of a debt for goods sold and delivered than as a butcher's account; but the second section of the Act, which prescribes claims upon documents, upon which provisional sentence can be obtained, expressly states that nothing in the Act contained shall extend to or affect any mortgage bond, general or special, or any judgment of any Court in this colony or elsewhere. The judgment sued upon is not a judgment obtained in this colony; it is a judgment obtained elsewhere, and in pursuance of the comity which exists between friendly nations, this Court has on previous occasions recognised, and would, I have no doubt, in this instance recognise the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction in Germany. But the defence set up is that this judgment has been obtained without the knowledge of the defendant, and against an agreement entered into at the time. The defendant alleges that when the summons was served upon him, when he was still in Germany, it was arranged that his mother should interpose as surety for the debt and pass a bond, and that the summons should be withdrawn. The mother, it is admitted, did interpose as security, and she did pass a bond, and did pay certain moneys to the plaintiff. But the plaintiff now says that the moneys so paid and the bond so given by the mother were in relation to an antecedent debt, and not to the debt which is sued upon in this case. Here is a disputed fact which it is difficult to decide upon affidavit, and there is also the question of the antiquity of the claim, and it is said that certain official certificates of the validity of the document sued upon is wanting. Under these circumstances I think it is a case in which the principal case should be gone into. Where there has been this delay in enforcing a judgment, and as a question may possibly be yet raised as to whether the judgment is prescribed in this country or not, I think that the delay of 16 years without any proceedings requires that the Court should hold its hand, and not grant provisional sentence. If the principal case is gone into, the costs will abide the result; otherwise plaintiff will pay the costs.

FALSE BAY QUARRY CO. V. HIRSCH.

Mr. Close moved for a writ of civil imprisonment against the defendant.

The defendant appeared and said he did not owe the money. Judgment was given in his absence. He was sued as a partner in an insolvent partnership estate, but he pleaded that he was not a partner at the time.

Mr. Close said that judgment was given by default.

Buchanan, J.: You had far better put your case in the hands of an attorney, Mr. Hirsch, and have things done in proper order.

Defendant said he had no funds.

[Will you go into the box and swear you have no property?]

Defendant: Yes. The defendant then entered the witness-box, and said he had no property. He was employed on the railway in German West Africa at a salary of £25 a month, and he had to maintain his family in Cape Town. He had very little furniture.

By Mr. Close: He had £2,000 in the bank in his name within the last nine months, but that belonged to the railway firm.

Buchanan, J., said he would make no order at present. The matter would stand over.

HASKINS V. DE GOUVEA.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

Order granted.

TRILL V. JOHN JAMES WESSELS (TRADING AS THE BEACH ESTATE SYNDICATE).

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence against the four defendants Wessels, trading as the Beach Estate Syndicate, for £3,000 on a mortgage bond. Counsel said that the return of service by the Sheriff stated that, being unable to find any of the defendants, he had, at the request of the plaintiff's attorney, served summons upon certain Cape Town attorneys as agents for the defendants. Except in one case, however, these gentlemen had refused to accept service.

An affidavit was read in which the plaintiff sought to show the agency of the several gentlemen in question. Various transactions were described in which the attorneys had acted on behalf of the defendants.

Provisional sentence granted, as prayed.

REHABILITATIONS.

Ex parte HENSLEY.

Mr. De Waal, on behalf of the petitioner, asked for a postponement sine die.

Ordered accordingly.

Mr. Marais moved for a decree of divorce, the defendant having failed to comply with a rule nisi ordering him to return to or to receive the plaintiff.

Rule made absolute, as prayed, with costs.

Ex parte MURDOCH.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis for divorce.

Mrs. Murdoch gave evidence. She said she had no means. The trustees of her husband's father's estate allowed her children £100 a year for only one year. Her husband held property in trust. He was now in Canada.

Rule nisi granted, to be served personally, if possible, failing which by registered letter to defendant's attorneys in Scotland, and by one publication in a newspaper circulating in Litchford, Ontario, Canada; returnable March 12.

Postea (December 13th).

Leave was granted to serve intendit together with notice of trial.

Ex parte PEYPER.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act.
Rule made absolute.

MAXWELL AND EARP V. DREYER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved to make absolute a rule nisi to attach a certain inheritance.
Rule made absolute.

Ex parte DE MARILLAC.

Mr. Watermeyer moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling on respondent to show cause why a certain sale should not be cancelled.
Rule made absolute.

TRUTER V. TRUTER.

Mr. Long moved to make absolute a rule nisi. The rule called upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be declared a prodigal, why he should not be interdicted from dealing with his property, and why a curator should not be appointed, but counsel said he only asked for the rule to be made absolute in respect of the last two prayers, and for the appointment of applicant, who was respondent's wife, as curator bonis.
Rule made absolute accordingly, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte Y.M.C.A., STELLENBOSCH.

Mr. H. J. van Zyl moved to make absolute a rule nisi in respect of the amendment of a certain deed of transfer.
Rule made absolute.

Ex parte ESTATE GOUS.

Mr. Upington moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem in proceedings de lunatico inquirendo in regard to one Jacob Marthinus Gous, an heir in the estate.
The Court appointed the Resident Magistrate of Prince Albert curator, with instructions to make a special report to the Court upon the mental condition of the alleged lunatic, leave being given to take evidence by affidavit.

HUNKIN V. KING.

Mr. Bisset moved for an order in terms of a rule nisi calling on respondent to deliver up a certain diamond ring.

In her supporting affidavit, the applicant, Annie Hunkin, said that on the 19th August, 1907, the respondent agreed to advance her £10, on which advance she was to pay interest at the rate of 10s. per month. As security she deposited with him a ring which had been valued by several jewellers at between £70 and £75. Respondent informed her that as he did not hold a pawnbroker's licence he was unable to give her a receipt. She had received from him £8 10s., and she now asked for an order compelling him to deliver the ring against payment of the amount owing by her.

King appeared, and produced a receipt for the purchase price of the ring. He said the applicant still owed him £4 on account of goods she had from him for sale. He gave evidence on oath, saying he bought the ring from Mrs. Hunkin.

The matter was ordered to stand over, in order to enable the plaintiff to file replying affidavits.

Ex parte EQUITABLE MARINE AND FIRE ASSOCIATION CO., LTD.

Dr. Greer moved for an order placing the company under final liquidation, and for the appointment of Mr. Francis Chiappini as liquidator.
Order granted.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

PROVISIONAL CASE.

SCOTT V. FRAME. { 1907.
{ Dec. 13th.

Insolvency—Compulsory sequestration—Opposing creditors—Ordinance 6 of 1843, Sec. 5.

S. had applied for the compulsory sequestration of F.'s estate. Certain creditors opposed, on the ground that the sequestration would not be for the benefit of the creditors in general.

Held, that under Sec. 5 of Ord. 6 of 1843, the petitioning creditor could claim an order of final sequestration.

Mr. Howse moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. A provisional order was granted on the 4th inst.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers opposed the application on behalf of certain creditors, Bennett and Heydenrych.

Answering affidavits were filed on behalf of the opposing creditors, in which it was stated that these creditors had obtained writs of civil imprisonment against Frame, which were suspended on payment of certain amounts per month. A petition by Frame for leave to surrender his estate had previously been refused by the Court. It was further alleged that the respondent was in receipt of an income from the estate of his father, and that the respondent's wife had become surety in respect of the debt due to the petitioning creditor. The opposing creditors asserted that the sequestration would not be in the interests of creditors.

In a replying affidavit, the petitioner said he had a guarantee from the respondent's wife for payment of the debt, but the validity of this had been impugned, and the document had been repudiated by the wife.

Buchanan, J., said that an act of insolvency had been committed, and the question of whether sequestration was for the benefit of creditors did not come into the case.

Mr. De Villiers referred to Section 18 of the Insolvency Ordinance, and quoted the case of De Vos v. Borchill and Co. (1 Buchanan, 1866, p. 1). He submitted that the Court would exercise its discretion, even where there had been an act of insolvency. Counsel also referred to the case of Keefer and Others v. Von Ron (2 High Court, p. 436). Another point, he said, was that there were practically no assets in the estate. There must be something to surrender. If the estate were sequestrated, the creditors would have to contribute to the costs, as they had been obliged to do on the occasion of a previous surrender by Frame in 1897. To sequestrate an estate when it must result in a contribution account was not, counsel contended, a legitimate use of the Ordinance.

Buchanan, J.: There are two enactments dealing with the compulsory sequestration of a debtor's estate. Act 38 of 1894 provides for cases where no act of insolvency has been committed. In such a case the 3rd section requires the petitioning creditor to show that the debtor's estate is insolvent, and that the sequestration of the estate will be for the benefit of creditors. But where an act of insolvency has been committed Ord. 6 of 1843 applies. Section 5 of the Ordinance provides that when any creditor has a claim against the debtor and the debtor has committed an act of insolvency, he may then, on proof of these facts, apply for the sequestration of the debtor's estate. In this case the debtor has committed an act of insolvency, and the application is made under this section of the old Ordinance. The debtor does not oppose the sequestration, but other creditors come in, and say the sequestration will not be to their benefit or for the benefit of other creditors. The fact that other creditors may be damaged by the sequestration does not, however, deprive the petitioning creditor of the right expressly given to him by the Ordinance to apply for sequestration. In this case, there being an Act of Insolvency and the provisions of the Ordinance being complied with, applicant is entitled to have the final sequestration of the estate of his debtor adjudicated. The only question that arose in my mind was this: The opposing creditors allege that the applicant has security for his debt. If he had such security and failed to comply with the 30th section of the Ordinance, he would, of course, not be entitled to ask for sequestration, but in his answering affidavit he explains the circumstances and swears he has no security of any kind. The security referred to was supposed to have been given by the respondent's wife, but she has repudiated that, and it has been abandoned altogether by the plaintiff. An order will be granted for the final adjudication of the respondent's estate. The costs of the application will, of course, have to come out of the estate, but the costs of opposition must be paid by the opposing creditors.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

DOORNBRACK V. INSOLVENT } 1907.
ESTATE DOORNBRACK. } Dec. 13th.

Insolvency—Trustee—Costs de bonis propriis—Ordinance 6 of 1843, Sec. 98.

The trustee of D.'s insolvent estate, previous to the third meeting of creditors, advertised a sale of the property in the estate. At the third meeting the majority in number and value of the creditors refused to sanction the sale as to certain household furniture. A rule nisi had been obtained, interdicting the sale of the furniture.

Held, that the rule be made absolute, and that, as the trustee had contravened Sec. 98 of the Insolvent Ordinance by attempting to force the sale contrary to the wish of the majority of the creditors, he be adjudged to pay costs de bonis propriis.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi restraining the respondent, who is the trustee in the insolvent estate of Doornbrack, from proceeding with the sale of certain immovable property and household furniture, and calling upon him to show cause why he should not be ordered to give effect to certain resolutions passed at a meeting of creditors.

The applicant's affidavit set forth that he represented a majority in number and value of the creditors. At the third meeting in the estate he moved resolutions instructing the trustee to place the immovable property in the hands of Messrs. A. B. de Villiers and Co., of the Paarl, for sale, and allowing the insolvent to retain possession of her furniture, and to trade in her own name. These were passed, but respondent had refused to act on the resolutions, and had advertised the sale of the immovables and of the furniture.

The respondent (the secretary of the Paarl African Trust Company, Ltd.) stated in an affidavit that at the second meeting of creditors, the applicant attempted to prove debts on behalf of the children of the respondent, but on deponent objecting these claims were rejected. At the third meeting, however, they were accepted, but the insolvent was unable to be present at that meeting, and deponent was unable to examine her as to her insolvency, and especially as to her dealings with her children. Deponent intended calling a special meeting for the purpose of examining the respondent. He admitted advertising the auction sale, which had been interdicted, but said he did so with the consent of all the creditors (including the only preferent creditor), with the exception of those represented by the applicant. Excluding the claims of the children, applicant did not represent a majority in number and value of the creditors.

The applicant, in a replying affidavit, said that the sole reason for the rejection of the claims of the children at the second meeting, was that the amounts in respect of the claims were not sufficiently specified. This was rectified, and the claims were admitted at the third meeting.

Mr. Russell for applicant; Mr. McGregor, K.C., for respondent.

Mr. McGregor submitted that the best course would be to order the matter to stand over until there was an opportunity of examining the insolvent and ascertaining further as to the claims of the children.

Without calling upon Mr. Russell, the Court made the rule absolute, with costs against the respondent de bonis propriis.

Buchanan, J.: At the second meeting of creditors in this estate certain claims were proved, and the respondent was elected trustee in the estate. He proceeded to take out letters of confirmation, and after he got letters of confirmation he prepared a report, which he presented to the third meeting of creditors. Up to that time no resolutions of any kind relating to the disposal of the property in the estate had been passed by the creditors. In his report the trustee says he has advertised the sale of the fixed property, and of the household furniture. The 98th section of the Insolvent Ordinance is clear as to the trustee's duties. It requires the trustee, subject to the direction of creditors to make sale of the property in the estate. At the third meeting the trustee moved the adoption of his report. This was not carried, but certain other resolutions were carried in lieu of this. The trustee's report proposed to sell the immovable property as well as the household furniture. This 98th section says that the trustee shall not sell, among other things, the household furniture until the creditors have resolved upon that. The creditors have never resolved upon the sale of the household furniture. On the contrary, the majority of the creditors in number and value passed a resolution that the insolvent be allowed to retain the household furniture. In these circumstances, the insolvent's trustee is wrong, and is directly contravening the Ordinance in attempting to force the sale of the furniture in the estate. The trustee, notwithstanding the resolution of the majority of the creditors, wishes to force the sale of the immovable property in the same way. In spite of the resolutions of the creditors, and without any appeal to the Court objecting to these resolutions, the trustee insists upon going on with the sale. I am of opinion that he is not justified in so doing. He is wrong in compelling the applicants to come to the Court in order to force the trustee to carry out the instructions of the creditors. It is said now that the claims of particular creditors who have proved may be upset afterwards, but so long as these claims remain as proved, the votes of these creditors must be regarded by the trustee. Until the claims are struck out, the trustee's duty, as the officer administering the estate, is to follow the instructions of the creditors, and, as he has refused to carry out the instructions the applicants were justified in coming to the Court. The rule nisi must be made absolute, and as there was no justification at all for the trustee acting in violation of the resolutions of the creditors, the costs of the application must be borne by the trustee de bonis propriis.

After hearing Mr. McGregor further on the question of the costs, Buchanan, J.: It appears, from the record, that when the trustee stated he would carry out his own views, his attention was specifically directed on the 90th section of the Ordinance. Notwithstanding that, he still persisted, and when the creditors succeed in compelling him to carry out their instructions in accordance with the Ordinance, he wishes them now to pay the costs of disobeying their instructions. I think this is especially a case where the trustee should pay the costs de bonis propriis.

Ex parte SPILHAUS.

Dr. Rainsford moved for the appointment of a curator in the estate of the respondent.

The Court appointed Mr. E. Schroeder, of Upington, curator, with power to sell the perishables at the risk of the petitioning creditor.

REX V. COOK.

(1907.
{ Dec. 43th.

Liquor licence — Absence of licence-holder — Act 28 of 1883, Sec. 76, Sub-sec. 1.

The holder of a retail liquor licence, who allows his business to be conducted by a manager without the permission of the R.M. and visits the premises frequently, is not guilty of contravening Sub-sec. 1 of Sec. 76 of Act 28 of 1883, unless he absents himself for an entire continuous month from the premises.

This was an appeal from a conviction and sentence by the A.R.M. of Herbert.

The appellant was charged before the Assistant Resident Magistrate with a contravention of section 76, sub-section 1 of Act 28 of 1883, in that, being the holder of a retail wine and spirit licence on the premises known as the Albania Hotel, at Douglas, he wrongfully and unlawfully permitted one James Charles Gilchrist to manage, superintend, or conduct the business of the said licensed premises during his absence for a period longer than one month, without the consent in writing of the Magistrate. The Magistrate convicted the accused, and ordered the forfeiture of the licence, which was the penalty provided for by the Act.

Mr. Upington was for the appellant; Mr. Howel Jones, K.C., was for the Crown.

Mr. Upington said that one of the points for decision was whether the words "for a longer period than one month" qualified the words "during his absence," or qualified the words "manage, superintend, or conduct the business of the licensed premises"—qualified these words alone. The accused was never absent from the hotel premises for a period of one month—there was no dispute on the evidence as to that—and the next point for decision—at least, the important point—was whether the section meant that if a person were appointed to manage, superintend, or conduct the business of the licensed premises in the event of the licensed proprietor being absent for a couple of hours a day, and if that appointment continued for longer than one month—whether that would be a contravention of the section. The contention of the appellant was that the section meant that if the licensed holder went away for a period of more than a month, and left someone behind to manage and conduct the business for him for that period, he must get permission in writing from the Magistrate. The facts might possibly constitute an offence against the second sub-section, but did not constitute, he would submit, a contravention of sub-section 1.

The evidence showed that Cook, who is the editor of a paper in Douglas, received 10s. a month from the owners of the hotel—Messrs. A. W. Cumming and Co.—for allowing his name to be on the licence as the licence-holder. Gilchrist was employed at the hotel, and in his evidence, he said that Cook never came on duty in the bar, but only occasionally visited the hotel as a customer. Cook, in his evidence, stated that he had never been absent from the hotel premises a month at a time. He visited the hotel at least half a dozen times a month. Mr. Cumming instructed him to inspect the premises occasionally. Cumming stated that Gilchrist was engaged as a barman.

The Magistrate, in his reasons, said he believed Gilchrist managed the licensed premises for the period stated in the summons, accused being a mere figurehead. In the advertisement in the "Griqualand West Observer," published by Cook, and on the billheads of the hotel, Gilchrist was styled manager. The defence made no endeavour to produce the testimony of independent witnesses to prove that accused did actually exercise supervision over the licensed premises. He (the Magistrate) was satisfied that accused did not exercise control and supervision over the premises, and he considered it absurd to suppose that occasional casual visits from the licence-holder was all that the law required.

Mr. Upington said that the point was what was the construction of section 76. It was a penal section, and its construction was important to a large number of people throughout the country. He submitted that it must be construed apart from the special circumstances of this particular case. There were two possible constructions, the one contended for by the Magistrate and the other contended for by the applicant. Counsel submitted that the ordinary rules of interpretation should be followed and that the words "during his absence for a period longer than one month" qualified all the words that preceded them, or, at the most, that they qualified the words which immediately preceded them. If the Magistrate's view were taken it would result in a large number of licensed victuallers having laid themselves open to forfeiture of their licences. He urged that the proper construction of the section was that if a licence holder went away from his premises, left the place for an extended period of one month or more, then he committed an offence against the Licensing Act if he allowed another person to take his place there and to conduct the business entirely without any kind of supervision on his (the licence holder's) part. The test that must be applied was not whether the supervision or control of the licence holder was sufficiently elaborate, but whether in fact he was absent from the premises for a period of one month or longer.

Mr. Jones submitted that if the Court had any doubts upon reading the sub-section in question, those doubts would be dispelled by considering the object of the Act and the intention of the Legislature. It must have been intended that the licence-holder should be the person who should manage the business. He contended that in the meaning of the Statute Gilchrist was managing the business for more than a month, and the licence-holder was absent. If the contention of his learned friend was right, then it would have been sufficient for Cook to go to the licensed premises once a month. If that were the case, the section was absolutely valueless. He submitted that it could only have been the intention of the Legislature to secure that the licence-holder, being a man worthy to hold the licence, should exercise proper supervision and control over the premises.

Buchanan, J.: The accused was charged with contravening section 76, sub-section 1, Act 23 of 1883, in that, being the holder of a retail licence on the premises known as the Albania Hotel, in the township of Douglas, he did wrongfully and unlawfully permit one James Charles Gilchrist to manage, superintend, or conduct the business of the said licensed premises during his absence for a period longer than one month without the consent in writing of the Resident Magistrate. The evidence as to the absence of the licensee from the hotel is very unsatisfactory. The Chief Constable says that between the dates specified in the summons he was frequently at the hotel, and never saw the accused there. He admits that the accused was in the village during the period in question, but he never saw him at the hotel. The next witness is William Anderson, who said in cross-examination, "Cook has never been away for a month from the town or the premises." That is a witness for the Crown. Then Gilchrist says: "I have several times seen the accused in the bar drinking. He never came there on duty as licensee. I warned him not to come to my bar," and he says he took no orders from anyone. The sergeant of the police says: "From the 8th July to the 21st September I have seen the accused in the bar occasionally." Then the Magistrate was called, and said: "I have received no application from accused for permission to have any manager upon his premises at any time." The Magistrate in his reasons has not found that the accused was absent from his premises at any one time for a month, but says, "I believe that Gilchrist actually did manage the accused's premises, known as the Albania Hotel, and the defence did not by independent witnesses prove that he exercised reasonable control and supervision." That is the offence of which the Magistrate found him guilty, and for which he sentenced him: that he did not exercise reasonable control and supervision over the conduct of the premises. Now we must turn to the Act to see what provisions of the law the accused is charged with having contravened. The language of the section may be obscure, but I think that its grammatical meaning can be ascertained. It says that the holder of any licence shall be liable to forfeit such licence if he shall permit any other person to manage, superintend or conduct the business of the licensed premises during his absence for a longer period than one month without the consent, in writing, of the Resident Magistrate. It is contended for the Crown that if a licence-holder appoints a man as his manager, say, for six months, to manage the hotel during his absence, and if the licensee should happen to be absent, say, for a week at a time during those six months, then taking all those absences together, if the total was for more than a month, he would be guilty of a contravention of the section and thus render his licence liable to forfeiture. I think the intention of the section is that a person shall not allow another to manage or conduct the business of his premises for a longer period in his absence than one month at a time without getting the permission for a longer absence from the Magistrate. If there is any doubt as to the construction of the section, then such construction as is most favourable to the accused would have to be placed upon it. Other parts of the Act, as pointed out by Mr. Uppington, show that the Legislature does contemplate the appointment of managers, because another section provides that any such manager convicted of contravention of the Act shall be liable to the penalties under the Act, but that this liability shall not relieve the holder of the licence also from liability. If a manager has been appointed the Act says that such manager, as well as the licensee, shall be liable for any contravention of the Act; and this section, I think, is intended to mean that if a manager is absent for more than a month at a time without obtaining the permission of the Magistrate he then renders his licence liable to forfeiture. The contention of the Crown that if a man has been appointed as manager for six months, and if during those six months the collective absence of the licensee should amount to a month he is liable to have his licence forfeited, is not, I think, the intention of the Legislature as expressed in this subsection. The Magistrate has not found that the accused was absent for more than one month from the premises, but that the licensee has not exercised the requisite and proper control over the premises. That may or may not be an offence under another section, but we are confined to the strict letter of the charge, and the charge laid under this subsection no crime has been proved. There may be other provisions of the Act more applicable to the circumstances of this case, but if so, the proper charge must be laid under such provisions. The conviction and sentence will be quashed.

EGERTON PARK ESTATE CO. V.
WILLIAMS.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £57, together with £2 4s. costs.

Defendant did not appear.
Decree granted, with costs.

ESTATE GORDON V. SILBERBAUER, WAHL AND FULLER.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl moved for provisional sentence for £117, upon a certain agreement. Counsel said that in the summons credit was given defendants for £30 and £3, but it was found that the former credit had been wrongly allowed, and that the amount actually due was £117, and not £87, as shown in the summons. He, therefore, applied for an amendment of the summons by striking out clause (a) referring to the credit of £30. A letter had been written to defendants pointing out the mistake, but no reply had been received from them.

The amendment of the summons was allowed, and provisional sentence given for £117, with costs.

OSBORNE AND CO. V. LAWRENCE,
TRADING AS E. J. LEE.

Mr. H. G. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a dishonoured cheque for £41 2s. 1d., with interest from the 2nd December, 1907, and costs, plaintiffs being legal holders of the cheque.
Order granted.

REHABILITATION. { 1907.
Dec. 17th.

Mr. Inchbold applied, under section 117 of the Ordinance, for the rehabilitation of Henry Distin.

Ex parte ESTATE THEUNISSEN.
Executor and tutor—Unauthorized expenditure.

The applicant had expended certain moneys on the construction of buildings on a farm, the property of his wards, without the previous sanction of the Court, and now applied for an order on the Master to pay out from the funds in the estate the costs of the said buildings.

Held, that under the special circumstances of the case, the Master be authorized to pay out the moneys so expended.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on the petition of J. C. Theunissen, as guardian of the minors Theunissen, for an order authorising the Master to pay out certain money. Counsel said the matter had previously been before the Court. The tutor built a house on the minors' property, in the district of Beaufort West; he had lived in the house as a lessee, and had paid a fair rent. The only point in the Master's report was as to the item of £604 paid for the erection of the house. The Master said he was not aware of any similar case in which the Court had sanctioned such expenditure without express authority having first been obtained. He was not prepared, he added, to say that the property had been improved to the extent of the value of the house erected thereon. When the present application was originally mentioned, it was ordered to stand over for further information on certain points. This information was now embodied in supplementary affidavits, read by counsel.

Hopley, J.: I think the executor took a great risk when he built to the extent he did build, incurring large expenditure without an order of the Court authorising him to do so. He seems to have looked after the minors, and to have lived at this very building, and it may very well be that he would have had no decent house to occupy, and certainly there would not have been much sense in paying a large rental for a farm on which there were no proper buildings. It may have been a matter of necessity, but, as far as I can see, this is just one of those things in which the Court would have authorised a prudent expenditure of moneys in the estate, if the facts had been properly laid before the Court. The executor seems to have taken matters into his own hands, and he has put on the farm buildings which have, as far as I can now follow from the affidavits, enhanced the value of the farm by the full amount which he claims. The enhancement is placed by people who seem to be credible witnesses at £700, whereas the executor asks for £600 odd. The house seems to be kept in good repair, according to the affidavits, and it might very well be that it is one of the elements that the present tenant took into consideration when he took the lease of the farm. Under all these circumstances, although it is not a course that the Court should encourage executors to adopt in the future, and although it is a thing that the Court must warn executors not to do, I think the Court may pass the account with this item in it, and authorise the Master to pay out the deficiency, as shown in the account.

Ex parte UNITED FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

Free Church and United Free Church (Scotland)—Transfer duties.

The Court has no power to sanction the transfer of immovable property from one religious body to another free of transfer duties.

The Free and United Free Churches (Scotland) are different religious bodies.

This was an application for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain immovable property free of transfer duty. The petitioners were the Revs. James Henderson, principal of Lovedale Missionary Institution; John Lennox, M.A., secretary of the Kaffraria Missionary Council; David Duncan Stormont, principal of Blythwood Missionary Institution; Wm. Gavin, secretary of the Transkei Missionary Council; and John Bruce, secretary of the Natal Mission Council, as representing the General Body of Trustees of the United Free Church of Scotland.

The petition was as follows: "In or about the year 1899 steps were taken in Scotland with a view to effect a union of the Free Church of Scotland and the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, under the name of the United Free Church of Scotland. This was ultimately carried with a small number of dissentients of the Free Church of Scotland, locally designated the "Wee Frees," who initiated legal proceedings to maintain their rights. Matters eventually became so complicated that the Imperial Parliament passed the Churches (Scotland) Act, 1905 (5, Edw. VII., ch. 12), appointing Commissioners to deal with all the property of the original Free Church of Scotland. The Commission duly reported on the 18th February, 1907, as per certified copy annexed marked "A," dealing with foreign missions in South Africa, and in such report all the properties belonging to the Free Church of Scotland were allocated to the United Free Church of Scotland (not including the "Wee Frees"). The properties so allocated include, inter alia, those set forth in the schedule annexed marked "B." In consequence of the union of the two bodies aforesaid, and the change of name and the allocation of properties under Royal Commission, it has become necessary to change the name of the trust in which the said properties have hitherto been held in the deeds of grant and transfer. There has been no change in the objects for which the said properties have been granted, acquired, and used in the past. These objects will in no way be affected by the change of trust. Wherefore your petitioners pray that your lordships may be pleased to grant an order authorising the Surveyor-General and the Registrar of Deeds in Cape Town and King William's Town respectively to endorse on the grants and transfers of the properties as per schedule "B," the change of the name of the trust to that of the United Free Church of Scotland.

From annexure "A" (Order No. 2, Foreign Missions, South Africa), it appeared that the Commissioners, acting under the Act, had allocated to the United Free Church of Scotland, "the whole property, heritable and movable, real and personal, situate in South Africa, which belonged to or was held for the said Free Church of Scotland, and any interest in property situated in South Africa which the said Free Church of Scotland possessed, all as at the thirtieth of October, nineteen hundred, including the following properties, which are hereby allocated to the said United Free Church of Scotland, videlicet—the Missionary and Educational Institution of Lovedale, with all buildings, houses, churches, and schools, whether at the central institution or at out-stations, and lands, water rights, and others attached to or in connection with the said central institution, or any of said out-stations; the whole schools, churches, mansees, and other buildings and lands at or in connection with the stations and their out-stations in Cape Colony, known as

Burnside, Pirie, Macfarlan, Cunningham, Main, Duff, Somerville, Ross, Rainy, Port Elizabeth, Tora, Ugie, Dontrill, Stuartville, and Smeas; the Missionary and Training Institution at Blythwood, Cape Colony, with all houses, buildings, schools, farms, lands, and water rights in connection therewith; the manse, schools, and churches at Pietermaritzburg, and out-stations, Natal; the mission house, schools, churches, farm, and others known as Kalibasi and Renier, and out-stations at Dundee and Ladysmith, Upper Natal; the buildings and farm in connection with the Gordon Memorial Mission, Natal, and the Overtoun and other out-stations in connection therewith; the land on which the mission house and church is being built at Potele, Bulwer, Natal; the property at Johannesburg, in the Transvaal; and all other property which belonged to the said Free Church of Scotland or institutions connected therewith, in the colonies of Cape Colony (with Bechuanaland and Basutoland), Orange River Colony, Transvaal, and Natal (with Zululand). The Commissioners then go on to state that in order to carry the allocation into effect they transfer the property from all persons in whom it is vested to certain persons residing in Glasgow, Edinburgh, and elsewhere, "who shall hold the same for the purposes of the missions of the said United Free Church of Scotland in South Africa, or for similar purposes, and shall, as regards the management and disposal of the said property, be subject to the regulation and direction of the General Assembly of the said United Free Church of Scotland for the time being, etc."

The following report on the petition has been prepared by the Registrar of Deeds under date December 12: "This petition is presented as the result of an award made by a Royal Commission appointed under the provisions of the Churches (Scotland) Act, 1905 (5 Edw., 7 Ch., 12), in terms of which the United Free Church of Scotland became entitled to the properties enumerated in the annexure to the petition, some of which at present stand registered in the name of the Free Church of Scotland and others in the name of officers, who apparently represented that institution: the object of the petitioners being to procure an order from the Court, which, if granted, would have the effect of vesting the lands in the former Church. The grounds upon which the petition is based are that all the properties were held by the Free Church, subject to certain trusts, and that they will continue to be devoted to the same objects. Petitioners contend, therefore, that they are entitled to be substituted as trustees. It would no doubt cause the Church authorities very considerable inconvenience if they were put to the expenses of procuring transfer in the ordinary course, and I would have been only too pleased, in view of the purposes to which the properties are devoted and the undoubted benefit the Colony derives through the operations of the institution established upon it, could I have added my recommendation, but I unfortunately feel that I cannot. It is true that the majority of the deeds by which the land is held provide expressly that it shall be used for church or mission or educational purposes, and that it must therefore continue to be used for those purposes, but there is no getting away from the facts that the two churches are entirely distinct bodies, and that the proposal, if carried out, would actually effect a change in the ownership of the land. The petitioners must therefore, I fear, even as regards the properties so acquired, proceed to procure transfer in the ordinary course, and also, as no exception is provided by the Act, pay the usual transfer duty on their value. The objections I have pointed out apply, of course, with still greater force in the case of the properties acquired free from any restriction, or from which the restrictions have been removed, as in the case of the grants dated September 1, 1849, November 22, 1849, and May 7, 1868, the conditions of which were annulled by Act 20 of 1876, as the Church will not only become the owner, but will have the power to alienate the land, or devote it to other purposes, at its pleasure."

In a supplementary report, dated December 13, the Registrar of Deeds said: "I desire to add that since writing my report in this matter I have discovered that 52 of the deeds of grant affected by the petition expressly limit the use of the land granted to church, mission, or educational purposes in connection with the Free Church, and that 18 of these were issued under the provisions of section 6 of Act 15 of 1887, by virtue of a special resolution of both Houses of Parliament. It would seem, therefore, that the land thus obtained, as well as that held under a grant issued under the provisions of Act 14 of 1878 by virtue of a similar resolution, cannot be alienated, without the sanction of Parliament."

Mr. Close for applicants; Mr. H. Jones for the Colonial Government.

Mr. Close submitted that for all practical purposes the Free Church and the United Free Church of Scotland were one body, and that the case was one in which the Court would grant an amendment of the transfer. He cited Ex parte Botha (13 C.T.R., 1,142), Blauklip Garden Co. (20 S.C., 383), Strathomers Estate Co., Ltd., v. Colonial Government (17 C.T.R., 916), Union-Castle Steamship Co., Ltd. (19 S.C., 180), and Liquidator, Cape of Good Hope Bank v. Registrar of Deeds (9 Juta, 144). Counsel also referred to Act 5, 1884 (section 19, sub-section 9), to Act 3, 1873 (sections 2 and 3), and to the Imperial Act No. 5 of 1905.

Mr. Howel Jones submitted that what was asked for was transfer from one body to another. The Free Church and the United Free Church were in law two distinct bodies. He referred to Act 20 1876. He contended that the applicants ought to proceed by special Bill in Parliament.

Mr. Close having been heard in reply.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Hopley, J.: This is the petition of certain gentlemen describing themselves as representing the general body of trustees of the United Free Church of Scotland. It would appear that in 1893 there was a union of the Free Church of Scotland with the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, the union so made describing themselves in future as the United Free Church of Scotland. A small minority of the Free Church dissented from this union, and refused to abandon their possessions, alleging that there was no union, that no union was possible because the United Free Church was a body different from the Old Free Church in that it departed from some of the distinctive tenets of the Free Church and abandoned some of their essential dogmas. Litigation of a protracted character ensued, and eventually the House of Lords, reversing the decision of the Court of Session, held that the contentions of the Free Church were correct, that essential tenets and dogmas had been abandoned by the United Free Church, and consequently final judgment was given in favour of the small body of dissentients who then still represented the Free Church of Scotland. This judgment had the effect of vesting in the small body of the Free Church a vast amount of property, more than they could manage, and of leaving the quondam members to a large extent without endowment. Thereafter, matters became so complicated, that there was legislation by the Imperial Parliament, and a body of Commissioners was appointed with full powers to deal with the property held by the Free Church, and to allocate it in such manner as they might deem advisable practically between the two branches of the Free Church. This has been done, and properties in South Africa vested in the Free Church and given to them in trust for missions, cemeteries, educational establishments and suchlike uses were allocated by the Commissioners to the United Free Church. But we now have to consider what the effect of such allocation is with regard to our own law of transfer in this colony. The requirements of the law regulating the transfer of landed property in this colony are very well known, and the Registrar of Deeds conceives that he is unable to transfer from the one body to the other without certain formalities having been gone through, and, in the absence of relief therefrom, the payment of the ordinary dues for transfer, nor do I see any way in which the position so maintained by him can be controverted. However much the Registrar of Deeds may sympathise with the petitioners, and wish to oblige them in any way, and however much this Court may wish to do the same thing, the Court cannot neglect, and the Registrar of Deeds cannot neglect, the requirements of the laws of this colony. There would be a great difficulty, as far as I can see, having regard to the various trusts that are created by the various deeds of grant in making one comprehensive order which would embrace every case in such a manner that the parties could act upon it, though that difficulty might be got over by a very carefully and very elaborately worded order, but as far as I conceive the matter as it stands, we should be departing from the law, and granting an order which this Court has no right to do, if the prayer of the petitioners were granted. I think myself that the sympathy of the whole community would be with the applicants, and that they would be assisted in every possible way by everybody, who is legally able to assist them, but, as far as I can see, there are only two modes by which they can get transfer. One is by an order from this Court, which, in the circumstances, might very probably be granted, provided the transferees pay transfer dues and ordinary charges. But the object of the present petition is to escape the payment of such dues and charges, so that resort will probably be had to the other course, which is that suggested by Mr. Jones, viz., that the petitioners should wait until the next session of Parliament, and obtain a private Bill, which would invest them with these properties and grant a remission of the fees. This latter would, I think, be the easier and less expensive plan, because, having regard to the good work done in this country by the institutions founded on the land embraced in the titles of grants in question, I cannot conceive any circumstances which would cause any difficulty whatever in procuring such legislation. At all events, I can see, as far as this Court is concerned, no way of helping the applicants, and the application must be refused.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REX V. ABRAM, ALIAS BULL. { 1907.
Dec. 18th.

Special J.P.—Civil judgment—Jurisdiction.

A special J.P., who convicts a prisoner of theft, has no jurisdiction to sentence him to compensate the owner of the property for the goods stolen.

Hopley, J.: A case came before me yesterday from the Special Justice of the Peace for Victoria West at Loxton, who found a man called Abram alias Bull guilty on sufficient evidence of stealing a pair of veld-schoen (the property of a Mr. Theunissen, of Loxton), valued at 7s. 6d. He sentenced accused to pay a fine of 20s., or to undergo three weeks' imprisonment, with hard labour, and to pay to Mr. Theunissen the value of the shoes, viz., 7s. 6d. This latter part is in effect a civil judgment, which the Special Justice had no right to pronounce in this case, and that portion of the sentence must be struck out. The rest of the sentence will be confirmed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte WIPPLINGER AND WIFE.

Mr. Howes moved on behalf of petitioners, who reside at Britstown, for an order authorising registration of a certain contract excluding community of property between husband and wife as if the same had been entered into prior to marriage. The first named petitioner stated that he had entered into partnership with another person, and that it was a condition of the partnership that should one of the partners marry he should enter into an ante-nuptial contract. On the 12th October last the first petitioner married the co-petitioner upon her arrival in Cape Town by steamer from Germany, but on proceeding to Britstown they were informed by a local attorney that it was then too late to enter into an ante-nuptial contract. It was the intention of the parties prior to marriage to enter into a contract excluding community of property. They had been and still were desirous that their property should be kept separate. Counsel cited Lezard's Case (16 C.T.R., 1019).

Hopley, J.: An order will be granted as prayed. The contract will, of course, have to be worded in accordance with the facts of the case. The order will be subject to any rights of any creditors which have accrued up to date of registration. I only grant this because apparently there is strong evidence of an intention to enter into an ante-nuptial agreement, and it was a mistake that it had not been registered.

Ex parte WARREN.

Mr. Payne moved on the petition of Mary Warren, of De Aar, for leave to sue her husband, Thomas E. Warren, be edictal citation and in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Respondent's whereabouts, it was stated, were unknown. Counsel said that he was prepared to certify probabilis causa.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon respondent to show cause on the first Tuesday in February why petitioner should not be admitted to sue him in forma pauperis and by edictal citation, personal service if possible, failing which one publication in the "Friend" (Bloemfontein).

Ex parte SHERRY.

Mr. Bisset moved on behalf of petitioner for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent James Elders in an action to have him declared incapable of managing his own affairs, and a curator appointed.

Order granted appointing Mr. Struben curator ad litem, summons returnable on the 7th February.

Ex parte EXECUTORS ESTATE HIDDINGH.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for leave to sue by edictal citation one Susanna Elizabeth Lilienfeld, of Pretoria (assisted as far as need be by her husband), on a mortgage bond for £1,650, which had become due and payable by reason of non-payment of interest and for the attachment of the property hypothecated.

Property attached, and leave to sue by edict granted, personal service, citation returnable on the 5th February.

Ex parte ESTATE LATE KREUSCH

Mr. Russell moved on the petition of the executors of the late F. W. Kreusch for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds at King William's Town to register transfer of certain lot of ground "in the township of East London," to be passed by petitioners in favour of Christian F. W. Ziemann. From the petition and annexures, it appeared that Friedrich W. Kreusch and his wife made a mutual will, leaving their property to the survivor and the children. After the death of the survivor the property was to go to all the children then living, and if any child died before the survivor, the grandchildren would step into his place. After the death of his wife, Kreusch made an agreement in December, 1895, by which his daughter, Mrs. Ziemann (wife of C. F. W. Ziemann); undertook to provide him with maintenance, and look after him, and she was to have his landed property in East London at his death for £450. One of Kreusch's sons (F. W. Kreusch, jun.), predeceased his father, leaving four children, two majors, and two minors. Application was now made for transfer of the lot of ground in East London to Mrs. Ziemann for £450 in terms of the agreement. The Master, on behalf of the minors, opposed the application on the ground that the minors were not bound by the agreement, but he eventually consented to the prayer of the petition, provided that the minors were paid out on the basis of a valuation made by a sworn appraiser, less the value of the improvements made to the land by Christian F. W. Ziemann. This valuation had been made, the amount being £1,220. The improvements made in good faith by C. F. W. Ziemann were valued at £680. Petitioners said that C. F. W. Ziemann and his wife were prepared to take transfer in so far as the amount appertaining unto the said minors was calculated, the major children of the late F. W. Kreusch, sen., and F. W. Kreusch, jun., being held bound by the agreement of December, 1895.

The Court authorised transfer to Ziemann, provided that the minors' shares were calculated on the basis of £1,220, and provided that the majors interested in the property filed their consents.

LAINGSBURG MUNICIPALITY V. BURGER.

Dr. Greer was for applicants; Mr. McGregor, K.C., was for respondent.

Dr. Greer said that he recognised, after the respondent's replying affidavits had been filed, that it was impossible to try the issues raised in this matter upon motion.

By consent, the parties were ordered to proceed by action, notice of motion to stand as summons in the action, costs to be costs in the cause.

SOEKER V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) moved for leave to set down this matter for hearing on the 3rd February, 1906, when a full Court would be available. Applicant was moving under sections 35 and 39 of the Jury Act for a new trial. Counsel said that, as far as he was aware, there was nothing in the Jury Act which required that such an application should be heard before a full Court, but the practice had been up to the present that that course should be pursued.

[Hopley, J.: It is not likely that one judge sitting alone will set aside the judgment of another judge, for that is what it would amount to.]

Mr. Upington said that the Jury Act was in some respects inconsistent with the constitution of the Supreme Court, and one was in a difficulty to know what to do in a matter of this kind. One would like to know whether the 41 days would apply to a case of this kind. The difficulty was that, if this case were treated as an appeal, 41 days would elapse before the next sitting of the full Court, and it had thus become necessary to make the present application for leave to set down.

[Hopley, J.: It is in effect an appeal from a judgment which has been given.]

Mr. Upington informed the Court that the Government consented to the present motion.

The application was ordered to be set down for hearing in the First Division on the 3rd February.

Ex parte ESTATE LOMBARD.

Mr. Marais moved for an order for the appointment of a curator dative to represent certain minors of the late Antonie C. Lombard, in connection with the partition of certain farms in the division of Bedford.

Order granted as prayed, no subdivisional transfers to be given until the division has been approved by the Master, or the Court has made further order.

Ex parte DE WET.

Dr. Greer applied for an amendment of the order granted by Mr. Justice Buchanan in this matter, by the inclusion of the costs of the application in the loan authorised to be raised, this point having been overlooked when the petition was originally before the Court.

Mr. Justice Hopley said he preferred that the matter should be mentioned to Mr. Justice Buchanan, either in Court or in Chambers.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Ex parte HERZFELDER. { 1907.
{ Dec. 20th.

Arrest—Affidavit of creditors—
Incola—8th Rule of Court.

Applicant had been arrested for debt when about to leave for England, under the 8th Rule of Court, on the affidavit of a manager of a firm which was domiciled in England, but carried on a branch business in this Colony, without, however, being registered here. Applicant was domiciled in the Transvaal and was only passing through this Colony. The alleged debt was in respect of a judgment obtained in the Transvaal High Court, against which judgment an appeal had been noted.

Held, that the writ of arrest be set aside with costs.

This was an application on behalf of Julius Herzfelder, formerly manager in Johannesburg on behalf of the Standard Cold Storage, for his release from arrest which had been made under the 8th Rule of Court, the notice of motion calling upon McArthur, Atkins and Co. to show cause why the writ of arrest should not be set aside as irregular and illegal.

The affidavit of Lewis Alex. Solomon, upon which the writ had been issued, stated that he was manager for McArthur, Atkins and Co., Limited, of Cape Town. Julius Herzfelder was indebted to the firm of McArthur, Atkins and Co. in the sum of £4,575, owing for certain moneys due to the said firm, received by the said Herzfelder on behalf of the said firm, in the conduct of and in connection with their business as general merchants, and not accounted for by him to the said firm. Deponent knew of his own knowledge that Herzfelder was about to leave for England by that day's mail, and that he had booked his passage. McArthur, Atkins and Co. had no mortgage, pledge, or security for the said amount or any part thereof.

The answering affidavit of Herzfelder stated that he resided in Johannesburg, where he was domiciled. He left the Transvaal Colony on the 9th instant, and was on his way to England, when he was arrested on Wednesday afternoon, in pursuance of the writ granted on Mr. Solomon's affidavit by the Registrar of the Supreme Court, and was lodged in the civil gaol, where he was at present detained. The statements in paragraph 2 of Mr. Solomon's affidavit, in regard to the cause of the alleged debt, were incomplete, incorrect, misleading, and conveyed a totally wrong impression of the position between the parties. Respondent obtained a judgment against him for the amount mentioned in the said affidavit, and costs of suit in the Rand High Court, Transvaal, on the 10th December, and he was not indebted to them in any other sum of money. The action on which the said judgment was given arose from a certain agreement entered into at Johannesburg aforesaid, between the said respondents and himself, in connection with certain cold storage business in Natal, and no part of the agreement had to be performed in this colony. He had caused an appeal to the Supreme Court of the Transvaal to be noted through his attorneys against such judgment, but the said appeal could not be heard before March or April, 1908. Deponent was on his way to England to transact important business there, and make arrangements for satisfying the said judgment, in case the same should be confirmed on appeal, and he had been advised by counsel that he had good grounds for the said appeal. He intended to return to the Transvaal in time to prosecute the same. He had no intention of removing from the Transvaal for good. He owned 9,336 fully paid-up shares in the respondent company, which were at present registered in the name of Henry Atkins, one of the directors. All the said shares except 2,000 were unencumbered. Respondents had in their application for his arrest withheld material facts from the Registrar, which he submitted ought to have been disclosed.

The replying affidavit of Mr. Solomon said that the agreement between his company and the said Herzfelder, out of which this indebtedness had arisen, was entered into at Cape Town and not in Johannesburg, as stated by him. His company verily believed that Herzfelder intended leaving the Colony solely with the intention of defeating the judgment obtained by deponent's company. He denied that any material facts had been withheld from the Registrar.

Mr. Close was for applicant; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondents.

Hopley, J., pointed out that the respondents did not answer the allegation of applicant that he had certain shares in the company.

Mr. Jones said that the answering affidavit had been necessarily prepared in a hurry.

Hopley, J., said he thought it would have been possible to ascertain whether this was a fact.

Mr. Jones said that the point could only be determined by reference to the share register.

Mr. Close said he was informed that the company's head office was in London.

Mr. Jones said that his information was that the head office was in Johannesburg.

Mr. Close submitted that had the Registrar been in possession of the facts now before the Court he would not have granted a writ. Applicant was not resident in this colony, but was simply passing through. He was instructed that the head office of the company was in London, so that neither the applicant nor the respondents were within the jurisdiction of this Court. He submitted that under Rule 8 it was clear that the Court had no jurisdiction in this matter. Counsel cited Schunke v. Taylor and Symonds (8 Juta, 103), McLeod v. Benjamin (9 Juta, 163), and Knwald v. German African Co. (5 Juta, 86). The only way in which respondents could have secured the arrest of applicant was by attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and the only suit they could have brought was on the Transvaal judgment.

Mr. Jones submitted that on the authorities it was competent for the Court to order the attachment to continue. Applicant actually left the Transvaal on the day before judgment was given, and had been waiting for a matter of eight or nine days.

[Hopley, J.: Is it not a fact that respondents have simply got an agent here?]

Mr. Jones said that the company was not registered in this colony, but it was trading here. He pointed out that the contract was entered into in Cape Town. He contended that the fact that the company traded here, and had a manager here, and that the contract was entered into here, would be sufficient to entitle the Court, if Herzfelder were suing the company, to throw out an exception which might be taken to the jurisdiction. He cited Solomon v. Wolf (15 S.C., 152) and Ohlsson's Breweries v. Bradshaw (22 S.C., 261).

Mr. Close, in reply, said that respondents could not sue in this Court upon a judgment of another Court, which was still awaiting final determination on appeal.

Hopley, J.: This is an application by Herzfelder, who was arrested at the instance of McArthur, Atkins and Co. under the 8th Rule of Court, to have the writ of arrest set aside. The terms of the 8th Rule are well known, and set out that anybody having a cause of action amounting to £15 sterling or upwards, may by applying to the Regis-that get a writ of arrest if there be delivered to the Registrar a direct and positive affidavit sworn by the plaintiff or his agent or his servant before a judge or commissioner of this Court, attested by him, and which affidavit shall contain a true description of the person and party contracting the same, the true cause of debt and so on. Now, in this case, an affidavit was sworn by Mr. Solomon, who is the agent, as I understand it, of the plaintiff company here in Cape Town. He says that he is the manager for McArthur, Atkins and Co., Ltd., of Cape Town. I do not know that this is a true and proper description of the plaintiff firm. As far as I am able to ascertain, McArthur, Atkins and Co., Ltd., were not registered in Cape Town as a limited liability company, though they might have an agent here, and for all I know may carry on a sort of branch here, but I have to conjecture all that from the affidavit and from what has been stated in argument to-day. His affidavit was presented to the Registrar looked as if McArthur, Atkins and Co. were carrying on business in Cape Town, and were registered in Cape Town, and, therefore, within the jurisdiction of this Court. Their agent as such may be, but I do not know that that is a proper description of the plaintiff firm. Then the affidavit goes on to say that Julius Herzfelder is indebted to McArthur, Atkins and Co. in the sum of £4,575, being for moneys due to the said firm, received by the said Herzfelder on behalf of the said firm in the conduct of and in connection with their business as general merchants and not handed over by him to them. Now, it does not seem to me that in the circumstances as they now appear before me that such is a true and proper description of the cause of debt, because it appears that the sum of £4,575 is due and owing by Herzfelder as the amount of a judgment obtained from Mr. Justice Wessels, one of the judges of the Transvaal High Court, in an action which had been instituted by the firm against Herzfelder, and against which an appeal has been entered in the registry of the said Court, which was pronounced only a few days ago. Whatever the cause of action may have been or however this indebtedness may have arisen, it seems to me that the present cause of debt is the existing judgement of the Transvaal High Court, an existing judgment which is, it now appears, under appeal and not finally settled between the parties. Now all these facts ought to have been set forth before the Registrar, but there is another matter, which may not have been concealed intentionally from the Registrar, but which certainly was not brought under his notice in the affidavit, viz., that all these transactions took place in a foreign jurisdiction, and that Herzfelder is not an incola of this country, and was not subject to this Court by virtue of his domicile. The bald and wholly insufficient affidavit put before the Registrar must have left him under the impression that the amount of money, £4,575, was in connection with the Cape Town business of the firm, and that the defendant owed the money by reason of something that happened in this jurisdiction, though he himself was resident in the Transvaal, that plaintiff was leaving this country, and that they wanted to arrest him to enforce their claim within the proper jurisdiction. If the facts that are now placed before the Court had been put before the Registrar, he informs me that he certainly would not have granted a writ of arrest, and especially if he had known that the applicant was not an incola of this colony. It seems to me that these irregularities which I have pointed out are sufficient to cause me to grant this application. It appears, too, that this person was going to the very place where the plaintiffs who claim to be his creditors are domiciled. As it turns out, he holds a considerable number of shares in the company. These shares are not registered in his own name, but in the name of one of the directors, viz., Mr. Atkins. Under these circumstances, the Court, if properly applied to, might have granted a writ of arrest ad fundandum jurisdictionem, but I doubt very much whether, with full knowledge of all the facts, it would have interfered in this matter at all, but would probably have told the parties to go into the proper forum and settle matters there in their own way. This application must be granted, and the writ of arrest set aside, with costs.

REX V. MICHELSON AND KONINGSBERG. Magistrate's judgment on facts over-ruled — Hearsay evidence.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Willowmore, who had convicted appellants of the theft of a hen ostrich, the property of one A. C. le Roux.

Mr. Alexander appeared for appellants (Wolff Michelson and Michael Koningsberg); Mr. Howel Jones, K.C., was for the Crown.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: The accused in this case are two speculators whom we must assume to be men of good character. About the month of August they purchased some birds in the Prince Albert direction and trucked them towards Willowmore. The birds were untrucked there. They had trucked 29, and on the untrucking one was dead, and there were thus 28 left. These ostriches, they say, they had purchased in Oudtshoorn or Prince Albert, and had only seen just briefly. There is no likelihood that a detailed description of each particular bird would be taken. At Willowmore, the birds were given in charge of some coloured men, who were hired, and who helped to take them from the trucks. The birds were apparently put into some sort of enclosure, from which the whole 28 escaped, and stampeded all over the country in different directions. These men were sent out in various directions to try and find the birds. The circumstances of the case make it obvious that nobody had up to that date carefully looked at each individual bird to see whether he could recognise it again. They were hunting about for birds, some of which had red paint marks upon their necks and some of which had not. The natives brought in batches of birds. They brought in a certain bird, which was afterwards identified and proved to be his by the complainant in this case, Mr. Le Roux. The fact of their bringing in these birds points to a genuine mistake as to the identity of this bird. The Magistrate has given some reasons which he was not necessarily called upon to do by law, and which are instructive in this case, because it would have been more difficult, I think, to set aside his judgment if he had simply found them guilty and sent his record. The reasons show that he relied upon some evidence which was hearsay, some evidence which is not upon the record, that he has to argue away in giving his reasons a great part of the evidence given by the witnesses for the prosecution, that he believes the witnesses for the prosecution in such parts as it suits the conviction, and disbelieves the witnesses for the prosecution in such parts as suit an acquittal. The Magistrate may possibly be right, and his reasons may be sound, but still, I think, that there is so much room for a genuine mistake in this case, that it would not be safe to say that they were guilty. I think this is a case in which I should have advised any jury that it was exceedingly risky upon such evidence to find that these men must have known that this bird was not theirs, and I personally do not feel that it is a safe conviction to sustain. I do not feel absolutely satisfied that these men were guilty, and I think the best and proper judgment would be that the appeal be allowed and the conviction quashed.

Ex parte JOHNSON.

Mr. Rowson moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Edward Johnson, of 22, Burns-road, Salt River, for an order upon the Resident Magistrate of Stellenbosch to make a provisional order in the application brought by petitioner for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act (No. 40 of 1905). Petitioner stated that he was a carpenter, and that while he was employed by the Zuid Afrikaansche Ruitig en Bouw Mattschappy, Ltd., on June 20th last, on the Bloembhof School buildings, he met with an accident, as a result of which his left leg was broken. On November 5th he brought an action against his late employers in the Magistrate's Court, but the Magistrate, though satisfied that he was entitled to compensation, refused to make an order, and postponed the case for four months. On November 7, and subsequently, certain judgments were taken by creditors against the respondents, and on November 22 a notice appeared in the "Gazette" that the company intended to apply for voluntary liquidation. On November 29 a notice was gazetted to the effect that a meeting had been held, when the resolution of the company to go into liquidation had been confirmed. Petitioner said that if the company went into liquidation he would be prejudiced in recovering from the company any moneys to which he may be entitled. Petitioner also stated that he was a poor man, and had no funds with which to continue the proceedings in this Court, and he applied for leave to proceed in forma pauperis.

Counsel argued that section 11 of Act 40 of 1905 compelled the Magistrate, if satisfied that applicant had been disabled for three days, by an accident not due to his own negligence, to grant a provisional order for compensation. The section does not say "may" but "shall." Once the Magistrate finds the disablement and no negligence on the part of the employee, he is bound to make a provisional order; he has no discretion. The Magistrate in his judgment states that he acted under section 23, but that clearly applies only to a final order should it be found that the man is permanently incapacitated. Here that question is in issue, and the Magistrate was quite justified in postponing his final award for four months, but he was bound by section 11 to give a provisional award.

Mr. Howel Jones, K.C. (interposing as amicus curiae), explained that the difficulty was raised because the petitioner applied for compensation for permanent injuries, and that the proper procedure had not been taken to obtain a provisional order.

Mr. Rowson, in reply: Immediately after the accident happened, surgical help was called in, my client was removed to hospital, and remained there during some weeks. The Magistrate was satisfied with that evidence, and although exception was taken that we had not followed the procedure laid down in section 7, he disallowed the exception.

[Hopley, J.: What section of the Act allows him to do so?]

There is no section which gives him that power, but he did not see his way on a mere technical point to preclude this man from his legal remedy.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon the respondent company to show cause why the applicant should not proceed in this Court in forma pauperis, and calling upon the respondent company and the Magistrate to show cause why the applicant should not have the relief prayed for, rules returnable on January 7.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REX V. CLOETE. { 1907.
{ Dec. 24th.

Act 18 of 1873, Sec. 4, Sub-sec. 6, and Sec. 7—Servant under age of 16.

Hopley, J.: Two cases came before me from the Resident Magistrate of Durbanville, who had convicted a child named Anthony Cloete, who was described as a Hottentot house-boy, aged ten years. It appears that this boy had had some sort of previous conviction against him, I think one for theft, last September. He had thereupon been apprenticed by the Magistrate's sentence for six years to a man called Hoffman, near Bellville. On the 15th of this month this child was left in charge of the house, and told by his master to get a chopper and reim, and go and collect some wood. The child went away into the bush, and did not return, having taken the chopper and reim. On these facts he was apprehended afterwards, and was prosecuted first of all for theft of the chopper and reim, and secondly for desertion of service. As to the charge of theft, the child seems to have gone into the bush, as he had been told to do, to collect wood, and then not to have reappeared at home. He went on to Bellville, where he was subsequently arrested, and he was asked what had become of the chopper and reim, and he said that he had lost it in the bush. The policeman said: "You must show me the place where you lost it." The child said, "I cannot." That seems to have been taken as an admission of his guilt, and it seems to have been all the evidence there was against him. There was no evidence of conversion on his part. Apparently, the Magistrate seems to have imported the evidence of the child's previous conviction, and very possibly his mind may have been swayed by the fact that he knew that this child had previously been convicted of theft. The evidence is not conclusive; the child's story may be true, and his sentence is a considerable one in the case of a child, viz., that the boy be detained in the Porter Reformatory for six years. I have sent the papers to the Attorney-General, and asked whether he was prepared to support the conviction, but he does not care to support the conviction of theft, and I do not think the evidence is conclusive. I do not think this is a safe conviction to sustain. This conviction must, therefore, be quashed, with the Attorney-General's consent. As to the other charge that was brought against the child on virtually the same facts, he was charged under section 1 (sub-section 6) of Act 18, 1873, with having, without lawful cause, departed from his master's service with intent not to return thereto. The child pleaded guilty, whereupon he was ordered to receive twelve cuts of the cane on his back. The subsequent section (section 7) says that nothing in any of the preceding sections, from the 2nd to the 6th, shall apply to servants or apprentices under the age of sixteen years. This child was only ten years of age, and he was prosecuted under a section which was specifically made not to apply to his case. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that this is a wholly illegal sentence, and it must also be quashed. What will happen to the child now I do not know, because his apprenticeship has been cancelled on his master's articles, and I suppose he will be at large.

ADMISSION.

Dr. Greer moved for the admission of Max Gurland as a translator in the Russian, Hebrew, and German languages.

Application granted and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL

TRUTER V. LOGAN.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on a taxed bill of costs for £82 16s. 8d. for work and labour done and professional services rendered in certain action in which respondent was defendant.

Order granted.

At a later stage a question was raised as to whether the correct procedure had been adopted in this matter.

Mr. Russell cited De Wet v. Meyer (1 Menzies, 59) and Van Zyl's Jud. Prac. (p. 71). He stated that Mr. Truter had acted as the defendant's country attorney in the previous matter, and that he had had no warrant.

Hopley, J., said it appeared to him extremely doubtful whether the plaintiff was entitled to provisional sentence, and that the case was one in which the plaintiff ought to sue in the ordinary and proper way for debt. Provisional sentence would be refused and the previous order would be recalled.

ARLOSOROFF V. KRAITZICK.

Mr. Toms moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £13 8s. 7d. and costs.

Defendant said that he was absolutely without means, and could make no offer.

Mr. Toms cross-examined the defendant in regard to certain transactions in iron.

Decree granted, with costs, execution to be suspended upon payment of £1 a month, first payment to be made on the 20th January.

HUTHWAITE V. CALDER.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on certain six promissory notes for £365 6s. 8d., with interest, less £50, with interest reckoned from the 7th August, 1906.

Mr. Gardiner read an affidavit by defendant, who denied liability on the ground that one of the principal assets which he purported to purchase from plaintiff, was the district surgeoncy of Philip's Town, that plaintiff had failed to secure this appointment for him, and that when the agreement was entered into he must have known that a virtual promise had been made in the House of Assembly that when the office became vacant it would be given to Dr. Hugo.

Mr. Russell read a replying affidavit by plaintiff.

Mr. Gardiner, in the course of his argument, cited Wiid v. Murison (13 S.C., 444), and urged that plaintiff should be ordered to go into the principal case.

Hopley, J.: In this case it seems that the opposition of the defendant at all events on the provisional sentence is a hopeless one, and there must be provisional sentence. The defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiff for the purchase of a medical practice at Philip's Town, and in addition to that he also purchased from the plaintiff certain household furniture, drugs, a cart and horse, etc. The sale of the practice did not, of course, involve the sale of the district surgeoncy. That is a matter in the gift of the Ministers, the executive of the country, which could not be sold by the outgoing incumbent to the incoming incumbent. But the plaintiff, the outgoing incumbent, undertook in his agreement to use all his endeavours to get the defendant appointed in his place, and in order to do so he remained the acting district surgeon for a time, giving the defendant a chance of acting as locum tenens to show his quality, and to get the Magistrate and everybody else to see that he would be a worthy successor. He comes here now, and disputes the whole of the claim, including the claim for furniture, and horse and cart and all the other things that he has had considerable use of for more than a year and makes no tender on their behalf, except he says that none of these promissory notes should have provisional sentence granted upon them, because the goodwill, as his counsel calls it, of this particular part of the medical practice, was an unprocurable matter at the time of the sale. He lays great emphasis upon his overwhelming desire to become the district surgeon at Philip's Town, and all one can say is that if that was the main thing that moved him in the purchase of this practice he ought to have seen that his agreement was very much more strictly worded than it is. He should have laid stress on the fact that not merely was he buying a practice which was worth £1,000 a year, according to the plaintiff but that it was really the district surgeoncy which is worth about £100 a year that he wanted. He simply says that if the district surgeoncy should fail to be given to him he must be compensated to the amount of £50, which I suppose is about one year's official fee for the district surgeoncy. The fact as to whether the plaintiff knew that the district surgeoncy had been promised irrevocably to Dr. Hugo is in dispute, and I see nothing to show that he knew and concealed that fact from the defendant. The allegation that nothing was said between the parties as to this matter is disproved to a certain extent by a clause in one of his letters, in which he talks about the virtual pledge of this appointment to Dr. Hugo by Parliament, or something of that sort before the agreement was concluded. At all events the position shows me that he signed the various promissory notes for which he must be taken to have received value, and good value, too. Upon the facts and documents as presented to me, I think there should be provisional sentence, with costs, the defendant, if he chooses, to go into the principal case on the usual terms.

AFRICAN HOMES TRUST. LTD. V.
ARCHER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest from the 1st January, 1907, less £18 paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

FAURE V. DU TOIT. { 1907.
Dec. 24th.

Mr. H. G. Lewis moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £99 7s., with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

SMIT V. DE BEER.

Mr. W. J. van Zyl moved for judgment, under Rule 319, for £117 19s. 4d., with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte COLEMAN.

Mr. Toms moved, on behalf of petitioner, a blacksmith, residing in Cape Town, for leave to sue in forma pauperis one Alfred Affeling, of Philip's Town, for £75 damages for alleged breach of contract.

Rule granted, returnable on the 21st January, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte KASTOPOULOS.

Dr. Greer moved, on behalf of petitioner, for leave to sue in forma pauperis one John Mitchell, for £500 damages for alleged breach of contract in connection with the hire of a certain cafe at the foot of Adderley-street, Cape Town.

Rule granted, returnable on the 14th January, personal service to be effected.

Hopley, J., remarked that the £10 rule seemed to him to be a matter that was capable of discussion as to whether it was not being abused at the present time. Counsel ought to be very careful to inquire into the facts of these cases. After all, a pauper came into court with everything to gain and nothing to lose. The unfortunate defendant should also be considered in these matters.

Ex parte ESTATE VOSKULE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved on the petition of the executor for an order authorising the registration of a certain mortgage bond, in order to enable the partners in a certain transaction in land to acquire the interest of Belfield Marais, in accordance with an agreement entered into during the lifetime of the late Mr. Voskule.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte LE SUEUR.

Mr. Toms moved for an order declaring petitioner of sound mind, releasing him from curatorship, and re-investing him with the administration of his estate. An affidavit by Dr. Arderne Wilson was appended to the petition in support of the application. Petitioner was declared of unsound mind about 15 years ago. The curator of his person had since died, and no fresh appointment had been made.

Ordered that the petitioner be declared of sound mind and that the order declaring him of unsound mind and appointing curators of his person and goods be rescinded.

Ex parte ESTATE JALIEL.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on the petition of the executors, for leave to mortgage certain estate property.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE MURPHY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved on the petition of certain creditors for the appointment of Alfred N. Foot as provisional trustee, with power to sell the stock in trade and fixtures.

Order granted appointing Mr. Foot as provisional trustee, with power to realise the assets.

Ex parte PEREHOUSE AND WIFE.

Antenuptial contract—Registration—Lapse of time.

Where husband and wife had been married in community under the impression that there would be no community and had been married upwards of five years before they ascertained the possibility of obtaining relief from the Court, the Court authorized the registration of the antenuptial contract.

Mr. Close moved, on behalf of petitioners, who are resident at Wynberg for an order authorising registration of a certain contract excluding community of property between the spouses and the husband's marital power, as if the same had been entered into prior to marriage. From the petition it appeared that the first named petitioner came to this country during the late war as an officer in an irregular force, and that he obtained employment in the Education Department of the Transvaal for a time. He lost this employment and for a time his movements were uncertain. The parties became engaged by correspondence. The second petitioner came out from England in order to be married in the Transvaal. In the meantime the first petitioner had moved to Cape Town, arriving on the 28th March, 1902. The second petitioner arrived in Cape Town on the 29th, and they were married in Cape Town on the 30th. At that time the parties had no intention of changing their domicile, and they were under the belief that the marriage would be without community of property, as would have been the case had the marriage taken place in England. Mrs. Pershouse was under the impression that she would retain her rights over her property without control of her husband. They took advice after the marriage, but were told that it was then too late to enter into a contract excluding community. There the matter rested for a while, until quite recently they were told that the Court, if the whole of the circumstances were explained, would possibly grant relief. The first named petitioner was now carrying on practice as a veterinary surgeon at Wynberg.

Mr. Close said that the question raised in this case had been discussed in several cases. He cited, ex parte Ingall and wife (20, S.C., 323).

Hopley, J.: There are two difficulties in this case. The main one seems to be the length of time which has elapsed, viz., five years.

Mr. Close: in ex parte Moran (14, C.T., 381), the Court granted relief after 16 years. Immediately the parties discovered their position they took advice, but were given to understand that nothing could be done. Since then they have received further advice of a different nature, and they have immediately taken different steps, but in the meantime there has been no acquiescence in the position of affairs. Counsel also referred to ex parte Fricker and wife (2

C.T.R., 312). Length of time was no bar to relief so long as the Court was satisfied as to the intention of the parties.

Hopley, J.: It is very difficult to distinguish the application in this case from several others which have been decided on similar motions, and the application will be granted on the ground that these parties swear—and there is nothing to contradict them—that they were in ignorance at the time of their marriage that they were married in community of property, and in ignorance of the fact that their marriage had not the same effect upon the ownership by the wife of her property as it would have had had it taken place in Great Britain. They were both young people, who had been previously domiciled all their lives respectively in Wales and in England. They know the operation of the married woman's property Acts in the United Kingdom. They swear they thought that their marriage in this country would have no other effect upon their property than it would have had had it been solemnized in the United Kingdom. Mrs. Pershouse owns property in the United Kingdom, some of which has been sent out here since their marriage and that property would have been protected to her under those Acts, to which I have referred in the United Kingdom. Upon their marriage, they found that, according to the law of this colony, they were married in community of property, and that they held their joint property in common under the management of the husband. They took advice, but were told that no relief was possible and so, seeing no escape from their position, they acquiesced therein. Had they immediately come to the Court they would most probably have received immediate relief. On account of the advice they received they remained quiet and acquiesced in the position, as they thought it must be, until some four or five years have now elapsed, and they have only recently discovered, and somewhat accidentally, that it is possible in such circumstances as these to obtain relief. If it had not been perfectly clear to my mind that these parties thought they were being married without community of property I should not, after such a lapse of time and after such carelessness in what is an important contract, have granted the relief prayed for, but it seems to me, in view of previous cases, especially in view of such cases as Fricker's and Ingall, that it would be difficult to refuse to these applicants relief as given to others. An order will be granted as prayed. The contract must state the facts upon which this order is granted, the order must be embodied in it, and the rights of all creditors up to the date of registration must be protected.

Mr. Close asked whether the order would include the property which had, under a misapprehension, been transferred to the name of the husband.

Hopley, J.: I think that follows as a matter of equity, because it is part of Mrs. Pershouse's estate.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

PLASTIC DECORATION CO. V. { 1907
CROOKE AND ASHBY. } Dec. 31st.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones (for plaintiffs) moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be discharged.
Provisional order discharged.

GLUCKMAN V. BOOYSEN.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £300 and £200, with interest from October 11, 1906, and September 16, 1906, bonds due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the defendant had written asking for a postponement until January 12 and explaining that he had been unable to consult his attorneys on account of the holidays.

Mr. De Waal said that he did not oppose a postponement.
Ordered to stand over until January 12.

VAN DER WESTHUIZEN V. KRAFCHIK.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for £550, balance of mortgage bond, with interest from April 23, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

WICHT V. SARGENT.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £600 each, with interest from January 1, 1907; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable, and the rents attached.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

MILLER V. BALLANTINE.

Mr. Alexander moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £77 10s., balance of rent due, with interest a tempore morae, and costs, and also for costs of a certain motion heard in Chambers interdicting the removal of furniture. Counsel further applied for an order for the attachment of the sum of £35, or such other sum, in the hands of Richard G. Anderson, due by him to the defendant Ballantine. Notice had been given of this application to Anderson's attorneys, and no objection was raised.

Judgment granted as prayed. Rule to issue, calling upon respondent Anderson, to show cause, on January 12, why a sufficient sum in his hands shall not be attached in satisfaction of the judgment and costs.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Howes applied, under section 117 of the Ordinance, for the rehabilitation of Abraham O'Linstry.
Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN DER { 1907.
WESTHUYSEN. } Dec. 31st.

Mr. Joubert moved on the petition of the executrix and children for leave to raise £300 on mortgage of certain property.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE LATE VAN HEERDEN

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for an order authorising transfer of certain property in which minors were interested. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE ARNOLD.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the removal of one Christian Frederick Adolph van Collier from office as co-trustee, and for the appointment of a fresh trustee, so that certain property not previously included in the distribution account may be brought up. The other co-trustee, it was stated, was dead.

De Villiers, C.J., said that a letter had been received from Mr. J. P. Celliers, of Somerset West, stating that the property was mortgaged to him, and that he was anxious to file an affidavit.

Ordered to stand over until the 12th January, notice to be given to Mr. J. P. Celliers.

Ex parte KUNN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on behalf of petitioner, Martha Johannes Kunn, for leave to sue her husband, Hendrik Kunn, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, citation returnable on the 12th February, personal service to be effected, failing which, one publication in the "Friend" (Bloemfontein).

Ex parte ESTATE STUDT.

Mr. H. G. Lewis moved on behalf of the curator of the lunatic, for leave to mortgage certain property at Uitenhage.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte TRUSTEE MARSH MEMORIAL HOMES.

Mr. Inchbold moved for leave to the petitioner to sue Israel Aaron Feitelberg, Samuel Feitelberg, and Edward Feitelberg, of Johannesburg, and late of Cape Town, by edictal citation on a mortgage bond for £1,500, and to attach the landed property mortgaged ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, citation returnable on the 12th February, personal service to be effected, failing which one publication in the "Star."

Ex parte ESTATE RUDMAN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to petitioners to mortgage certain property. Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte JORDAAN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on the petition of Johannes Lodewicus Jordaan, of Cradock, for an order authorising sale of certain property. Petitioner stated that he was married in community to Rolina A. Furstenberg, and that there were eight children of the marriage, five of whom were minors. In terms of the will of Elizabeth Maria Furstenberg, deceased mother of petitioner's wife, a third share in the farm Driefontein was bequeathed to petitioner's wife, subject to a fidei commissum in favour of her children. A sub-division of the farm had been agreed upon, and on the 12th December, 1902, petitioner took transfer in his name in trust for children born or still to be born of the marriage. On the 9th May, 1902, petitioner's estate was surrendered and his interest in the farm was sold to one Jacobus Pieter Olivier for the sum of £170. The farm was at present overgrown with prickly pear, which was spreading from year to year, and unless stopped would render the farm useless. The present owner of the life interest was making no effort to eradicate the prickly pear, and had expressed his willingness to cancel his rights and forego all claims on the farm on payment of £350. It would be to the benefit of the minors if the farm were sold by auction. The valuation, for Divisional Council purposes, was £1,500. Petitioner suggested that from the proceeds of the purchase price the amount of £350 should be deducted to satisfy the claim of the present holder of the life interest, and that the balance accruing to the minors be deposited in the guardians' fund. There was no possibility of further issue from the petitioner's marriage.

Order granted, subject to the purchase price of the life interest being reduced from £350 to £250.

De Villiers, C.J., said he thought the amount proposed to be paid to Olivier, £350, was excessive.

Ex parte ESTATE WOOD.

Mr. H. G. Lewis moved, on the petition of the executor testamentary, for cancellation of a certain bond on property at Queen's Town. The bond was for £800, in favour of one James Logan, and petitioner desired to pay it off, but could not trace the mortgagor. Petitioner was prepared to pay the amount of the bond into the bank with which Logan had done business, or to the Civil Commissioner at Queen's Town.

Order granted as prayed, petitioner authorised to pay the amount of the bond to the Civil Commissioner of Queen's Town, to be held by him in trust for Logan.

MOSLEY V. MOSLEY.

Mr. Toms moved on behalf of applicant for an order upon her husband to pay over £30 to enable her to institute an action against respondent for restitution of conjugal rights. It was stated that respondent was resident at Simon's Town, and that he had repeatedly kept out of applicant's way.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte LENNON, LTD. AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gardiner moved, on the petition of certain creditors in the insolvent estate of H. L. Stone, chemist, Claremont, for the appointment of Alfred N. Foot as provisional trustee, with power to carry on the business and collect outstandings.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte STASSEN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to partition the farm Voorbaat, in the division of Ladismith, in terms of an arrangement come to with the other co-owners. Certain minors were interested and the arrangement could not be carried into effect without leave of the Court.

Order granted as prayed.

Accident policy of insurance— Condition precedent—Written demand for arbitration—Waiver.	Act 9 of 1858, Sec. 11, see Railway ... 643
In an action for £500 on an accident policy, the defendant Company pleaded that the plaintiff had failed to make a written demand for arbitration in terms of one of the conditions of the policy which provided that, if no written demand for arbitration be made by the insured within six months from the date of the accident, the insured shall be held to have waived and abandoned all claim against the Company, whose liability to the insured shall thereupon absolutely cease and determine. The action was tried before a jury, which awarded the sum of £500 to the plaintiff. An objection was taken on behalf of the Company that, as the plaintiff admitted that no written demand for arbitration had been sent, the judgment should be entered for the Company; but the presiding judge decided, as matter of law, that the condition did not apply, and judgment was entered for the plaintiff.	„ 17 of 1860, Sec. 28, see Patent rights ... 635

The police officer in command of a certain sub-division of Police District No. 2 was authorized by instructions from Head Quarters to enter into a contract for the erection of certain stables, &c., for £140. One M. undertook the contract, but could not obtain the necessary building material without a guarantee for payment from some responsible person. The officer promised to see plaintiff paid on receipt of the money which would be due to M. on completion of the contract, and plaintiff thereupon supplied the material, charging it to M. M. left the work incomplete, leaving the unused materials on the ground, and the buildings were afterwards completed by the police themselves at a cost of £55. The plaintiff Bank advanced moneys to a certain partnership, receiving as security certain debentures of the G. Company. The debentures, which had been issued under Act 43 of 1895, were payable at a certain date to the bearer or registered holder, and purported to be upon the security of a first bond, a copy of which was printed on the back of the debentures. The Bank, when it received the debentures knew, as the fact was, that before their issue the chief assets of the Company had been ceded to, and its liabilities taken over by certain persons, including the partnership, on condition that no further debentures should be issued without their consent. Divorce — Domicile — Practice — Edictal citation — Suit in forma pauperis—Prima facie evidence of domicile.

The petitioner alleged that she and her husband had been married in community of property, and thereafter lived together in this Colony for over two years, after which the husband went away, leaving her here. The petition did not state whether the husband was born in this Colony; but there was, in the opinion of the Court, prima facie evidence that the parties intended to make this Colony their permanent home and that the husband had not changed his domicile:

Held, that the petitioner was entitled to obtain leave to sue her husband by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights and, failing obedience, for divorce on the ground of malicious desertion; leaving it to him to rebut the presumption that the parties were still domiciled here.

The petitioner had obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why she shall not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis.

Held, that the existence of such rule was no bar to her obtaining leave to sue her husband by edictal citation, provided that the fees of office in connection with such citation were paid if issued before leave to sue in forma pauperis was granted.

In this matter only one of the two executors applied on behalf of the estate.		In the first case, the defendant, a newspaper editor, had in his paper accused the plaintiff, a medical practitioner, a member of the Medical Council and proprietor of a Medical Journal, of having, contrary to the etiquette of his profession, advertised "through skilfully engineered paragraphs in the local press," and also of having "used politics as a medium for advertisement," and further stated that "he ought to be the first proceeded against" by the Medical Council. Defendant refused either to apologize or to withdraw these statements, and virtually repeated them in a subsequent issue of his paper. At the trial he wholly failed to prove the truth of his allegations.

Three persons, N. B. and S., having three separate businesses, all engaged in the same trade, agreed to amalgamate their businesses and form a limited liability company. Each of these persons and also four others, among whom was one R., signed the Articles of Association, and one share was allotted to each. The capital of the Company was divided into 25,000 shares, and the whole of these were allotted to N., B. and S. The above seven shares were never registered, and the directors, on discovering this oversight, resolved to cancel these shares. At that time S. had ceased to be a director and had disposed of all his shares, save the share originally allotted to him. S. and R. now each applied for the registration of his original one share

Held further that as R. had agreed to the cancellation of the seven shares over issued, and had never before applied for the registration of his share or other shares which he had received gratuitously, his application must be refused.

One Newsome claimed the registration of 100 shares purchased from a former secretary of the Company. But as the secretary was alleged to have stolen the scrip from the offices of the Company :

debt, M. did not prove on the estate. She did not pay, and subsequently B., before any release from insolvency, promised to pay in full. M. thereafter sued B. in the Magistrate's Court on this promise.

Held on appeal, that M.'s remedy having been barred by B.'s insolvency as against B., and a complete delegation of the obligation having been made whereby his wife alone was responsible to M., there was no longer any obligation on the part of B. to M., that therefore the promise by B. to pay the debt was a nudum pactum, and that M.'s action against him on that count must fail.

After his insolvency, B., who was still carrying on farming operations either for his wife or on his own behalf, asked M. to examine medically certain native servants on his farm whom he suspected of having contracted venereal disease. M. did so examine them, found that B.'s suspicions were well founded, and charged B. a certain fee for his services.

Held, that as B. had not followed the procedure prescribed by the Public Health Acts for obtaining the services of the District Surgeon, he had engaged M. in his capacity of a private practitioner and was liable to him for the fee charged.

In carrying out the details of that scheme it became necessary for the Commissioners from time to time to authorize the payments of amounts exceeding £50.
Held, that even if respondent had been delegated by A. to draw this money, such delegation did not constitute him a person "interested in" A.'s contract.	Held, that the Municipal regulation in question did not apply to payments forming part of expenditure which had already been lawfully authorized.
Respondent had sold a type-writer to the Municipality.	Smith v. Ceres Municipality 34
Held, that this transaction constituted respondent a contractor with the Municipality; but that, as this contract was now "executed," respondent was relieved from his temporary disqualification as a councillor (diss. Maasdorp, J.)	Municipality, see Water ... 97
The respondent was a partner in an attorney's business with one M., who collected rates and did other legal work for the Municipality. Respondent had also appeared in Court for the Municipality in certain cases, but had neither demanded nor received fees for such appearances.	Municipality — Closed road — Owners of adjoining land.
Held, that by these acts, coupled with the fact of his partnership with M., he was "concerned in" contracts with the Municipality, and was, therefore, disqualified as a councillor.	S., being the owner of land within a Municipality, sold it in lots with proper roads for the use of the owners and the roads were taken over by the Municipal Council. Subsequently one of the roads was lawfully closed by direction of Government, and S., having been called upon to show cause why transfer of the land should not be made in favour of the owners of the adjacent land on both sides of the road raised no objection. The Council raised no objection but insisted upon a condition authorizing the use of the road for carrying off storm water from a cross road.

It was agreed between two owners of land that each should occupy his garden as his own property, that each should properly fence in his garden and that in case of trespass by cattle he should not impound them or claim damages for such trespass. The defendant placed some poisoned wheat in his garden for the purpose of killing baboons, which were in the habit of doing damage there; and some of the plaintiff's goats broke through the fence erected by the defendant, which was somewhat faulty, ate some of the poisoned wheat and died from the effects. valuable consideration. The former assignments were all duly registered, the latter was not. In 1906, D.'s estate was sequestrated as insolvent, and his trustees claimed the patent rights as part of the estate, on the ground, that as the assignment to defendants had not been registered, no property in the patent had passed to them.
Held, that although registration is prima facie evidence of proprietorship in letters patent and is necessary under Act 17 of 1860, Sec. 28, to pass property therein from a grantee to an assignee, it is not necessary in order to pass property in a patent from one assignee to another.

Perjury—Setting out in indictment foreign words actually used—Evidence of interpreter—Magistrate's finding on evidence.
Appellant had been convicted in an A. R. M. Court of perjury committed in the S. C. One of the grounds of appeal was that he was said to have spoken in Indian and that the actual Indian words used when committing the alleged perjury were not set out nor was the interpreter called to prove the correctness of his translation.
Held on appeal, that in an indictment for perjury it is sufficient to set forth in English the substance and effect of the words used, and that the notes of the official short-hand writer are sufficient evidence of the substance of such words.

The appeal was, however, allowed on the ground that the conviction was against the weight of evidence.
Rex v. Ismail	556
Perjury—Evidence—Ordinance 72, Sec. 33—Two witnesses—Material but collateral fact.
The accused Q. was convicted of perjury in having falsely sworn in a Resident Magistrate's Court on an application to re-open a case in that Court, on the ground that the defendant M. had been absent when judgment was given against him, "I did not point to a man sitting on the floor and say that Magogo was there. Magogo was not there." Only one witness stated that Magogo was there, but more than one witness swore that the accused, pointed to a man sitting on the floor and said in effect it was Magogo.
Held, that the fact that the accused, pointed to a man sitting on the floor and said that it was the defendant, was a material, although collateral, issue, and that as such fact was deposed to by more than one witness there was sufficient to justify the conviction of the accused for perjury in denying that fact on oath.

Held, that as there was prima facie evidence of a nuisance, the applicants were entitled to a temporary interdict pending action, which was to be forthwith instituted without prejudice to any claim the respondents might have to recover damages sustained by reason of such temporary interdict.		To a declaration whereby the plaintiff sought to have his right under the mutual will of his parents declared, the defendant pleaded in abatement on the ground that at the time when the plaintiff's alleged rights under the will accrued the plaintiff was an insolvent, and to this plea the plaintiff excepted.

A fire having taken place, the plaintiff demanded the amount of the policy, and upon being required to produce his books, he handed over to the Company certain books which, in the opinion of the Court, were improperly kept, as they contained important erasures which could not be satisfactorily explained, and were in other respects wholly untrustworthy for the purpose of shewing the amount and value of the stock at the time of the fire. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Abrahams v. Held, that in the absence of any averment of special damage or of breach of duty owing to the plaintiff or of infringement of any right belonging to the plaintiff, the declaration disclosed no cause of action at the suit of the plaintiff. Via vicinalis—Deflection of public road—Right of access to—Station yard.

In 1857 the Government expropriated certain land for railway purposes, and in the course of their operations deflected a certain road, which by immemorial prescription had become a public road, so as to cause it to run over a portion of the land expropriated, which had been partially fenced in for the purposes of a "goods" yard." The public continued to use without protest the road thus deflected. The original road had previously passed near to certain two lots of land, the property of the plaintiff's predecessors in title and had been generally used as a via vicinalis. In 1884 and 1902 respectively these two lots of land were transferred to the plaintiff and were described as "bounded by the railway land." This property extended up to the said fence, but some railway property intervened between it and the deflected road. Plaintiff now claimed the removal of the fence that he might have access to the public road.

Held, that as the plaintiff's property did not abut on the deflected public road, and that as the intervening fence had stood for considerably more than 20 years before he had purchased the property, he was not entitled to succeed.

Water — Distribution — Municipality — Act 45 of 1882 — Servitude.

More than 60 years ago the owner of a certain farm sold certain erven, with the view to establishing a village on a portion of the farm. One of the conditions of sale was that the purchasers of these erven were to allow the C. river, which flows through the village, to continue freely to flow, but that they should have the right to take water therefrom, each in proportion to the extent of his land. About 44 years ago it was agreed that certain of the erf-holders might take water from the M. river, which borders the village on one side. At the time when these erf-holders found it necessary to enforce these latter rights, a Municipality had been constituted, and this Municipality made all necessary arrangements with the owners of the land. The said Municipality thereafter became defunct and was not reconstituted till 1881. At that time water was conveyed to a portion of the village from the C. river by means of an open furrow, and subsequently was delivered in a very impure condition. The recon-

No heir was to claim his inheritance until after the death of the survivor. G. predeceased his wife, who adiated under the will. There are four daughters of the marriage, who now contend that, subject to the life interest of their mother, they are entitled to receive their respective shares of the inheritance free and unencumbered. The mother (defendant) contends that such shares are subject to fidei commissum in favour of her grandchildren and great grandchildren.

Will—Construction.

The late E. had married a wife by whom he had seven children, all still surviving. After her death he married a second wife (the first defendant) by antenuptial contract which contained no provision for her support in the event of her surviving him. He had also issue by her, she survived him and subsequently married N. After his second marriage E. made a will by which he bequeathed to his second wife "a share in the farm named 'De Panne,' together with the children born of his former marriage, as also a wagon and span of draught cattle and 300 head of sheep (or goats), including house furniture, the half of everything." The executor (plaintiff) contended that by this clause (a) Mrs. N. and each of the children of the first marriage were entitled each to one eighth share in the farm (b) that she was entitled to one half share in the wagon and oxen, in the 300 sheep and in the furniture, (c) that as regards the residue of his estate, E. died intestate.

The first defendant (Mrs. N.) contended (a) that under the said will she was entitled to a half share in the farm the remaining half to go to the children of the first marriage, share and share alike. (b) That she was entitled to a half share in the wagon and oxen and in the 300 sheep and the household furniture.

The second defendant (issue of the second marriage) contended that the above clause of the will was void for vagueness and uncertainty.

The Court gave judgment in terms of the contention (a) of the first defendant and (b) and (c) of the plaintiff. Costs to come out of the estate.

Estate Van Eck and another
v. Van Niekerk and another 430

Will—Interpretation—Distribution of estate—Assets realized after the death of the testator's surviving partner.

J. C. S. carried on business with his brother H. R. S. By his last will, J. C. S., after leaving sundry legacies to relations (the present defendants), instituted as heirs these relatives and H. R. S. H. R. S. was to receive $\frac{1}{4}$ and the other heirs, each an equal share of $\frac{3}{4}$ of the residue of the estate. Should H. R. S. continue to carry on the business for his own profit (or at his own loss) he was to remain in full possession of the entire residue of the estate so long as he should continue to carry on the business. In the event of his ceasing to do so either of his own free will or on account of his death, the other heirs could at once claim their inheritance of $\frac{3}{4}$ of the estate. Should, however, H. R. S. sell any of the immovable property or receive payment of any outstanding bonds; if such property or bonds belonged to the partnership estate, H. R. S. was at once to pay over to the other heirs $\frac{1}{4}$ of the amount received; if the said property, &c., belonged to the private estate of the testator, H. R. S. was to pay over $\frac{3}{4}$ of the amount received. H. R. S. continued to carry on the business until his death. There was other property in the estate in addition to immovables and mortgage bonds. Subsequent to the death of H. R. S., a bond due to the partnership estate for £2,000 had been paid off. Plaintiffs contended that the estate of the late H. R. S. was entitled to $\frac{3}{4}$ of this £2,000, and the other heirs to $\frac{1}{4}$. Defendants contended that the estate of H. R. S. was entitled to only $\frac{1}{4}$ of the £2,000 in virtue of the partnership, together with $\frac{1}{4}$ of the remaining half under the will.

The Court gave judgment in accordance with the defendants' contention.

Will—Interpretation.

The will of the late Mrs. S. gives and bequeathes to "my son T. J. S., my daughter M. J. W. and my youngest daughter C. S. equal shares in the estate, house and garden known as G. V....., also the piece of ground opposite the gates of G. V., belonging to me as per transfer. Each one of my children named herein to have equal shares in this property for their lives, and after their decease it shall descend to their lawful issue." The three children of C. S. (the plaintiffs) contended that under the terms of the will, T. J. S., M. J. W., and C. S. inherited only a life usufruct in the whole of the property named. The executors of the will (defendants) contended that on the death of Mrs. S. the said three heirs were each entitled to a third share of G. V., free and unencumbered, and that the restriction as to life usufruct applied only to the land opposite to G. V. Held in terms of plaintiffs' contention.

Will — Jus accrendi — Death of legatee—Specific bequest.
The testators, being husband and wife, bequeathed a farm to four of their children by name. One of the children died before both the testators, leaving children.
Held, that the remaining legatees were entitled, after the death of the testators, to the whole farm, and that the children of the deceased legatee were not entitled to share in the legacy.
Engelbrecht and others v. Botha and others1054

Will (mutual)—Massing—Fiduciary heir—Usufructuary — Transfer—Deeds Office practice.

N. and his late wife, married in community, made a mutual will by which each instituted the survivor as joint heir with the children of the marriage, there was only one child, a minor. On the death of the survivor a certain farm, part of the joint estate, was to pass to the child. N. now asked for transfer of the whole farm into his own name in order that he might pass transfer to a third person who had purchased all his rights therein.

Held, (1) that N. was entitled to transfer of his own half share, subject to the reversionary rights of the child being recorded on the Deed of Transfer (2) That the question of transfer of the quarter share bequeathed to himself as fiduciary heir, not having been raised, the Court would give no decision thereon. But (semble) it is the practice of the Deeds Office to allow transfer to a fiduciary, but not from him to any third person. (3) That transfer could not be given to N. of the remaining fourth share, bequeathed to the child, of which N. had only the bare usufruct: and hence the application in its present form must be refused.

Will (mutual) — Massing — Usufructuary — Sale of portion of the inheritance — Usufructuary's debts.

The late M. and his wife, the present applicant, married in community, made a mutual will, providing, inter alia, that in the event of M. predeceasing her she should, so long as she should not remarry, enjoy the use and usufruct of the entire joint estate as her own absolute property with power to sell and dispose of the movable and immovable property and to purchase other property in lieu thereof. Should she remarry, the administration of the estate was to pass to her co-executor and co-administrator who was to pay over to her the rents and profits of the joint estate and, if need be, he might in his discretion sell and dispose of the landed property . . . and on her death was to transfer the property to the children of the marriage, subject to any fidei-commissum Mrs. M. might impose by will. She had not re-married, and there was one son, issue of the marriage, now a major. The applicant contended that it was only in the event of her re-marriage that the son would inherit the estate, and she now applied for leave to sell certain of the landed property in order to pay certain debts contracted for her own maintenance and in respect of certain accommodation notes signed by her for her son. The son consented to the application and the applicant was willing to renounce her usufruct.

Held, that as she was only a usufructuary of an estate which had been massed, and as no rights had, as yet, vested in her son under the will, the Court had no power to allow anything to be taken out of the corpus of the joint estate, even with the son's consent, in order to pay the aforesaid debts.

Will (joint)—Massing—Intestacy Fidei-commissum.

R. and his wife, married in community executed a mutual will, containing special bequests of their landed property to their sons, and then instituting each other, together with their children, heirs of the first dying. The respective inheritances of the sons were burthened with fidei-commissum to the extent of £1,000 each: that of the daughter was burthened to its full amount. The children were not to receive their respective inheritances until the death of the survivor. The sons and the Board of Executors were appointed as executors. R. predeceased his wife, and neither of them made any subsequent testamentary disposition. On the death of R., the said executors took out letters of administration, and on the death of his wife similar letters were taken out in respect of her estate.

The plaintiff, the daughter, contended that, as there had been no massing of the joint estate under this will, it could be regarded only as that of the first dying, that, therefore, the surviving spouse had died intestate as to the institution of heirs, that the fidei-commissum on her inheritance applied only to such inheritance from the paternal estate, and that, as to the maternal, she was entitled as heir, ab intestato, to receive the same free and unencumbered, and that the administration by the executors testamentary was, in respect of such maternal inheritance, illegal.

The defendants denied, either wholly or in part, these several contentions.

Held, that the mutual will must be regarded as the separate testament of both R. and his wife: that as she had not died intestate the appointment of executors testamentary was good and valid, and that plaintiff's maternal inheritance was subject to the fidei-commissum imposed by the joint will.

Will (mutual)—Massing—Adia-tion—Vesting—Fidei-com-missum.

The late S. D. J. S. and his wife (married in community) executed a mutual will, bequeathing their farm Ka. to their son P. E. S. for a certain sum. The survivor and all their children per stirpes were instituted heirs to the rest of the estate. Half the proceeds of the said residue were to go on the death of the first dying, in equal shares, to the survivor and to the children (including grandchildren) of the marriage per stirpes. The survivor was to have the life usufruct of the other half of the joint estate and also of the farm M., which, on his (or her) death, was to be sold and the proceeds to be distributed among the children per stirpes, who were similarly to inherit the survivor's share of the residue of the joint estate on his (or her) death. The survivor was also to have the life usufruct of the farms Kl. and T. F. On the death of the survivor, these farms were to go to the heirs per stirpes, subject to fidei-commissum, in favour of their descendants. The testator predeceased his wife, who adiated, and after his death made a separate will, instituting her children and their descendants as her universal heirs. The testators had 12 children, 3 of whom pre-deceased both their parents, leaving issue. One child, G. S., survived his father, but pre-deceased his mother. Plaintiff was the widow of G. S., and now sued in her capacity as executrix of his estate. The defendants were the executors of both the joint estate and also of that of the testatrix. The plaintiff objected to three of the distribution accounts filed by the defendants and marked "I," "J" and "K" respectively. In "I" the executors awarded $\frac{1}{3}$ th of the proceeds of the farm M. to each of the 12 children (or their descendants per stirpes) of the testators and $\frac{1}{2}$ of the share of G. S. was awarded to his estate and the other half to his children. In "J" they awarded $\frac{1}{3}$ th of the proceeds of the farm T. R. to G. S.'s children, and in "K" they dealt in the same way with the share of G. S. under his mother's will. The plaintiff contended that an entire $\frac{1}{3}$ th should have been awarded to the estate of G. S. in each of these distribution accounts.

Held, that as the rights of the heirs under the mutual will rested on the death of the first dying, plaintiff's contention must be upheld as regards account "I."

Held further, that as G. S. never had more than a bare spes successionis to the farm T. F., all his fiduciary rights therein had, on his death vested in his children, and that defendants' contention as to account "J" must be upheld.

Held further, that as the separate will of the survivor disposed only of property which had come to her out of the joint estate, and as she had adiated under the joint will, the provisions of that will must govern the distribution of her estate, and that the account

"K" must be amended in accordance with plaintiff's contention. Costs to come out of the estate. Strydom v. Strydom (11, S.C.R., 425) followed,

Will — Reservatory clause — Unattested codicil.

At the foot of a will containing the reservatory clause, the testator added the following unattested disposition at a date subsequent to that of the will: "I cancel and make void the fourth clause of this my will, and bequeath the whole of my estate" in a certain manner.

Held, that in the absence of any statement by the testator that he was acting under the reservatory clause, or of anything to shew that he purported so to act, the unattested disposition could not be legally regarded as a valid testamentary disposition.

Withdrawal of set down—Special counsel.

The Court allowed a set down of an important appeal to be withdrawn, on the ground that appellant wished the appeal to be argued by a certain counsel now absent in Europe, and respondent had shown no reason for refusing the application.

The respondent brought an action in a Magistrate's Court for the return of certain cattle

In execution of the writ the cattle in dispute were attached, but were claimed by the appellant as being his property. 	Held, that as the appellant had been no party to the action for the recovery of the cattle, and that as the cattle had been attached as belonging to the defendant, the appellant was entitled to succeed on the interpleader issue.
